I have raised a local issue from a local perspective to show that crime and disorder partnerships are not working, and I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to ensure that they are properly monitored. Currently, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary looks at the input of the police while the district auditor looks at the input of the county council or local authority; they do not use common timetables, standards or formats. I ask him to take the issue back to the Home Office and the National Assembly for Wales in order for one team using a common format to look at crime and disorder partnerships in the round. That team's report should be readily understood by the public to allow them to identify which partnerships are working and which are not both in their local authority and between local authorities. If partnerships are not working, the public can then get involved in the democratic process and put pressure on the Assembly Member, the council, the police and me.

I invite my hon. Friend the Minister to visit North Wales to look at the Aquarius project and talk to people on estates in my county and constituency to find out how they feel about crime and disorder.

1.51 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales (Mr. Don Touhig): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Clwyd (Chris Ruane) on securing the debate. The issue is important and it is good that it has been aired this afternoon.

At the outset of my remarks, it is important to make it clear that recorded crime in Wales is down by 16.4 per cent. since 1997. Although we can congratulate ourselves on that, there is no reason to be complacent. The Government will not be complacent because we are determined to reduce both crime and the fear of crime. I am sure that my hon. Friend recognises that the fear of crime is often a great problem, particularly among older people, and we have to be careful about the perceptions that we create. I recently took part in a BBC programme, which produced a poll that showed that 20 per cent. of people over the age of 55 were afraid to go out after dark. The fact that 80 per cent. of such people—four out of five—were not afraid was lost. The perception created by the discussion was that people over 55 were afraid to go out after dark.

Research consistently shows that a sensible approach using a variety of crime reduction methods is the most effective way in which to improve our communities. I know from my constituency experience that partnerships between the community, the police, the local authority and others are the most effective way of building more stable communities, reducing crime and engaging young people who are perhaps involved in criminal activities. Too often, there is a problem on a particular estate because kids are gathering and causing grief, nuisance and upset to local people, and along come the police who move them from one end of the village to the other. That does not cure the problem. The only way in which we are going to tackle it is to engage with young people by giving them ownership and finding solutions with them.

Police officers must, of course, be on the beat, and I take my hon. Friend's point that that is very important. Police numbers are now at a record high in Wales, with 7,193 officers, and, as he pointed out, North Wales in particular has had extra officers. We must ensure, however, that those officers are actually out on the beat. The planned introduction of 1,000 community support officers will help to raise the police's profile. Chief constables now have the power to accredit organisations' employees in the same way as community support officers in order to raise the visibility of policing. The use of civilians in police stations will also be of benefit because that will hopefully allow more officers to go out on the beat.

My hon. Friend made a number of points about the good practices and technologies that are being used in the Aquarius project in north Wales, but we must not get away from the fact that too much of police officers' time is spent on paperwork. The recent study "Diary of a police officer" clearly demonstrated that too much time was spent on paperwork and not enough out on the beat.

I welcome the point that my hon. Friend made about the introduction of information technology and palm computers. I know how successful palm computers have been, and I would be pleased to go up to north Wales at his invitation to see them, and also to talk about the crime reduction partnerships that cause him concern in Denbighshire. I am delighted that North Wales police are at the vanguard of investing in a general packet radio spectrum link, which means that information can be transferred from existing mobile communication systems four times faster than at present. Clearly, that is the sort of benefit that investment in new technology will bring.

Since the introduction of the crime reduction programme for England and Wales in 1999, £22 million has gone into crime and disorder reduction partnerships in Wales. The investment is important, but we must see outcomes if we are to make progress. I am aware that many such partnerships work well, but if there are difficulties in the one to which my hon. Friend referred, I will ensure that his comments are brought to the attention of my colleagues in the Home Office. Again, I accept his invitation to go to north Wales to discuss the matter with him.

The first set of statutory local crime and disorder reduction strategies have been reviewed, and new strategies will be put in place for 2005. Several other initiatives such as CCTV, neighbourhood watch schemes and anti-domestic violence projects also contribute to reducing crime and building more stable communities. Some £2.8 million will go into partnerships this year in the communities against drugs programme. In my hon. Friend's area, as in mine, there are no doubt serious problems with drug misuse, and we have to put in serious resources to tackle them.

Good partnerships have been funded in Ynys Môn, and £30,000 went towards a shopwatch scheme in Holyhead and Llangefni. Total bids submitted by Wales for the second round of funding under the scheme are around £772,000. The bids have been put in, and money will be forthcoming as we develop the schemes. We await further announcements on them.

It is also important that we consider some of the causes of anti-social behaviour and crime in our communities. Drug and alcohol misuse is a major factor. I have seen that in my constituency, as I am sure that my hon. Friend has in his. To tackle that, we need to work through strategies with agencies, the voluntary sector, local authorities and the police. I am pleased that the Wrexham community safety partnership has impressively led the way in Wales through its use of anti-social behaviour orders. The powers exist to impose ASBOs so ASBOs should be used, and far more frequently than at present.

Ian Lucas (Wrexham): Will the Minister also commend the initiative taken by the Communities First group in Wrexham? It works to involve young people who are not involved in crime in the planning of youth facilities in difficult areas in the town. The idea is to ensure that young people do not slip into crime, by providing adequate facilities for them to use before they become involved in it.

Mr. Touhig: My hon. Friend makes an important point. All too often, we on the outside in government, the police or local authorities tend to think that we have to impose solutions on communities. We need to consider ideas from the communities themselves, so that they have ownership of the projects. That can provide much greater benefits, as I am sure he will agree.

Partnerships work well in sharing best practice in many parts of the country. It is important that we build on those good practices. Acceptable behaviour contracts can often be issued. They are a last chance before ASBOs, and sometimes they do the trick. They are another tool in the armoury of partnerships to tackle antisocial behaviour. Denbighshire local council has drawn up about 15 such contracts, as I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Wrexham (Ian Lucas) is aware. Their effectiveness will depend on the response from the wider community in support of the efforts of the police and partnerships.

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley): When the Minister goes to north Wales, will he ask the chief constable, Richard Brunstrom, why he seems so intent on magnifying the number of speed cameras in north Wales? The Minister has rightly talked about the anti-social problems of violence, damage and muggings. Why is there not a huge concentration on that? Why has there been such a decline in detection rates in north Wales?

Mr. Touhig: The police have made considerable effort in north Wales, but I take the point. [Interruption.] As one of my colleagues has just said, speed kills. It is important that we get that message across to those who have campaigned about speed cameras. Speed reduction in urban areas saves lives.

I have also been pleased about the on-the-spot fines that have been introduced in north Wales. The fines of £40 and £80 are working effectively, and are getting the right message across. I am aware of the project in the west ward of Rhyl to which my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Clwyd referred. It has been greatly beneficial, and I would like to see it continue. It has widespread local support.

Many good initiatives have taken place in north Wales. We have to ensure that the partnership that we have put in place is properly reviewed and kept under scrutiny, and that it works effectively. If there are deficiencies such as those that my hon. Friend pointed out, we must get together to overcome them and put them right.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Two o'clock.

[SIR ALAN HASELHURST in the Chair]

Second Hub Airport (South East)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Derek Twigg.]

9.30 am

Mr. Mark Prisk (Hertford and Stortford): Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

On 23 July, the Secretary of State for Transport, Local Government and the Regions made the most significant Government statement on air travel for a generation. Sadly, at the same time he gave us the shortest possible consultation period in which to reply. There is little time for hon. Members to debate or effectively represent our constituents' interests in this vital matter. That is one of the key reasons why I sought this debate almost immediately after the Secretary of State had sat down in July.

Like you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, my constituents have a direct interest in the issue. They were shocked by the sheer scale of the planned development that was announced for Stansted. What is proposed is not simply another terminal or perhaps a few more routes, but the replacement of Stansted as a low-cost, point-to-point airport, with what could be the largest international airport in the world—effectively twice the size of Heathrow today.

In practical terms, for my constituents such enlargement would mean an eight-fold increase in passenger numbers, a five-fold increase in the number of planes, the demolition of more than 300 homes, the loss of two villages, the destruction of 64 grade II listed buildings and the loss of 1,200 hectares of green fields. It would also mean the blighting by noise of more than 28,000 more homes—the equivalent of a town the size of Bishop's Stortford. It would involve up to 300,000 new journeys per day on an already over-stretched road and rail network. In short, the Government's proposals for Stansted would irrevocably change not only our landscape—important though that is—but our community. The development would be wholly unsustainable in that location.

My colleagues here today feel as passionately about the issue as I do, and so we should. It is our duty to stand up and speak on behalf of the communities that we represent. I also feel that we must examine the wider question facing the south-east. Even if the Government can prove that a new hub is needed, how do we ensure that the investment delivers the maximum social, economic and environmental benefits for the region? Regrettably, the Government have failed to establish clearly to those of us who live in the south-east the positive reasons why we need a second hub. In the documents that we have seen to date, there is certainly a lot about the needs of air travellers and airlines, but precious little about the needs of the residents and the benefits to them. In his reply, I hope that the Minister will set out clearly the social, economic and environmental case for a new hub and explain why he and his colleagues strongly support such an option.

I do not intend to engage in the argument about future demand for air travel or whether it is desirable for that to be constrained in some manner. Over the past 30 years, air travel has grown at approximately 6 per cent. per annum. As a result, in the south-east, the traffic in the air today is approximately five times greater than it was in the 1970s. The Government's plans for the next 30 years, which are based on average growth of a little more than 3 per cent. per annum for the south-east, do not seem wholly unrealistic. I am not an expert in the field, so I do not know whether the figures are right; they must be examined by the experts. I am sure that the Minister will allow an independent view of the subject. However, I suspect that those views on the numbers and the likely growth in air traffic for the south-east are about right.

Given the likely growth, and the limits of Heathrow's natural capacity, there is a danger that, in the long term, London and the south-east could fall behind their European competitors. If the need for investment is proven, we must ask how and where it should be made in order to maximise the benefits for the country and for those in the south-east.

Let us consider London and the south-east as an economic community. However we compare the two sides of London and the south-east—whether through jobs, literacy, family stability or crime rates—historically, there has been an imbalance within the region, an east-west divide. In the past century, London's money and decision-makers, and those who could get up and go, have got up and gone west. In the past 20 years, that behaviour has spread, and people have gone to the north and the south. However, there is still a sense that the area due east of London, along the lower east Thames, is being neglected, and that the decision-makers are facing west and have their back to the east. The result is an overheated, congested region that is struggling to cope.

We are all aware that house prices are rising in London and the south-east. The land values in the west and the east that underpin those house prices often differ by £1 million to £1.5 million an acre. In my county of Hertfordshire, for example, we are desperately short of key workers, and one of the critical reasons for that is that they cannot afford to live there. A hub airport, and all its attendant development, would simply exacerbate the problem if it were wrongly located, but in the right place, it could revive an area. It could act as a vital magnet for jobs, and could induce economic development. I hope that, in the consultation process, the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions will make a clear assessment of the attendant induced economic development, which I have yet to see mentioned with any clarity in the documents.

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Prisk). I follow his argument, and accept all that he has said. Would he care to reflect on the fact that if another hub airport were built elsewhere and there was no scope for two hub airports, taking hub status away from the existing hub airport could cause serious economic problems for the local community? Might not the overheating to which he refers happen to an area simply because there is a hub airport there, and the difficulty to the east of London be due to the fact that there was no hub there? Would we not perhaps be switching around the problems and the advantages?

Mr. Prisk: I understand the point that my hon. Friend makes. There is a danger. One need only see the congestion and the problems in the Heathrow area. The imbalance in the south-east is sufficient for there to be significant advantage in having a similar facility on the east side of London. I understand that those who live in and around the Heathrow area feel, as do many in my constituency, that the area has reached capacity.

If there is to be a new hub, we have to decide where it will be. Having thought about the subject, I think that there is a strong case for considering the lower east Thames and what is now known as the Thames gateway area. I am aware that the Government have chosen to highlight one site, the Cliffe site. I do not take that narrow approach; I believe that there are other options, although, of course, there could be some advantages to locating an airport at Cliffe.

Bob Spink (Castle Point): Given that the Cliffe site would be only about 2000 yd from the boundary of my constituency and would impose massive noise, air and light pollution, as well as environmental damage on my constituency, is it not extraordinary that the Government have not sought to consult my constituents on the matter? Does not that reveal the Government's total contempt for the people of Essex?

Mr. Prisk: I entirely sympathise with my hon. Friend, not least because the consultation period is short and has been woefully prepared. Many of my constituents feel that the documents have been issued somewhat late. When the Government choose to hold an exhibition on the Stansted area on the Friday of the August bank holiday, and fail to inform either of the relevant Members of Parliament about it, it is clear that not only the hon. Gentleman's constituents are suffering; we all are. I hope the Minister will respond to that point later.

If we are to have such a hub airport in the lower east Thames area, we must consider the potential benefits, of which, I believe, there are several. First, it could provide a genuine hub for growth in the poorest part of east London. It could improve transport around London and to and from Europe. It could ensure that, for the first time in this country, we have a genuine 24-hour a day airport, with the significant benefits for freight traffic that that would bring. It could enable significant household development, especially for affordable and key worker housing, which, as I mentioned, is lacking. It would allow us economically to develop many brownfield sites and help to rebalance growth and development in the south-east, not least by reducing pressure on overcongested areas.

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): Is my hon. Friend aware that the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority, Sir Roy McNulty, has said unequivocally in public that the development of a new airport at the Cliffe site, and presumably any other site reasonably close to it, would have an unacceptable impact on the whole air traffic control system? That must negate the benefits of any reasonable development in that location.

Mr. Prisk: As I said, I wanted us to have this debate so that we could air information. I have not seen that statement and I would appreciate it if my hon. Friend would bring it to my attention. However, contrary views have been expressed, which is why I believe that the consultation period should not be so short. If we are to make the right decision, we need a long period in which to consider the matter properly. Four months is inadequate.

Mr. Chris Pond (Gravesham): The assumptions behind the hon. Gentleman's propositions may be seriously flawed. He thinks that an airport at the Cliffe site could create extra regeneration for the Thames gateway. There is strong feeling, however, that the burden on the existing infrastructure and increased congestion in that whole part of north Kent would make it difficult for the gateway to operate effectively as a thoroughfare for prosperity between this country and elsewhere, with the result that his constituents, too, would suffer from the damage to the national economy that an airport at Cliffe would create.

Mr. Prisk: I have heard opinions on both sides, but when one considers such issues as employment and literacy, one sees that there is an imbalance, which I want to address.

Hon. Members have rightly focused on the Cliffe site, although, as I said earlier, that is the Government's option, not mine. A coastal or offshore airport would enable planes to fly over the water and not over our roofs. There are safety issues, although they can, perhaps, be overstated, but we should not ignore the importance of minimising noise pollution. Such an airport would fit in with the Government's regional planning goals, as well as with those of most London local authorities. Indeed, it is an approach already adopted by SASIG—the Strategic Aviation Special Interest Group—which represents 75 local authorities and 23 million people, so that option should not be easily dismissed.

I appreciate that an offshore or coastal airport is a more expensive option, although that is more an issue for the investor than for the Government. However, judging by what has happened overseas, that option seems to be the way ahead. In Taiwan, Japan and South Korea, they are building new airports on the coast or offshore. Indeed, we need look no further than Hong Kong and the new Chep Lap Kok airport, which was designed by a Brit—Sir Norman Foster—and developed with the direct support of the British Government. It is stunning airport to look at, only 23 minutes from downtown Hong Kong, and we helped to build it.

Mr. Wilshire: Is my hon. Friend aware that the success of the new airport in Hong Kong is based on the closure of the airport that served as a hub for some time?

Mr. Prisk: My hon. Friend is a good representative of his constituents, because he is ensuring that his argument about Heathrow is reinforced. I commend him for that.

I return to the question of Hong Kong and the argument for offshore airports. I understand the point about proximity made by my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Bob Spink). Given that the Thames estuary occupies 400 square miles, there must be a case for considering the option. I hope that, in line with the Secretary of State's remarks of 23 July, the Minister will confirm that the Government's mind is not closed on the matter and that they are prepared to consider all reasonable options. If the British Government can contribute to the construction of an airport of that nature in Hong Kong, I cannot understand why they cannot do so here.

In conclusion, it is widely recognised that aviation policy over the past 30 years has been one of make do and mend. Indeed, many of the decisions cobbled together over the past 30 years by both Labour and Conservative Governments are constraining us today. The Government need to recognise how we went wrong in the past and that the decision about the type of airport that we build has as much to do with the social, environmental and economic well being of an area as with aviation policy.

We are all aware of the problems in the south-east. If the Government make the right decision on airport policy, they will have in their grasp a powerful tool, which could transform the poorest part of London, create a modern transport network and improve the lives of everyone in the south-east. That represents a wonderful opportunity, and I hope that the Government have the courage to grasp it.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is possible that not everyone present with an interest in the matter will have an opportunity to speak, for reasons of time. I appeal to hon. Members to be as brief as they can so that as many different points of view as possible are represented.

9.47 am

John McDonnell (Hayes and Harlington): As hon. Members will know, Heathrow is in my constituency, so I have a heartfelt interest in the subject. Some people want to portray those opposed to a third runway at Heathrow or Stansted as opposed to the aviation industry, but that is not the case. Many of my constituents work at Heathrow; some of those at risk of losing their homes as a result of the third runway work at Heathrow and have a direct interest in the long-term development and viability of the aviation industry.

Our consistent view, which should also be the consistent view of the Government, is that aviation policy should be in the interests of the whole community and should focus on the long-term, rather than on short-term profit. It should balance the economic benefits with the environmental and social impact of any developments.

I shall speak briefly about the consultation process, which was seriously flawed and has excited some anger among hon. Members and members of the community. It is unacceptable to have a consultation period of only four months on a proposal that could have an impact on a population of 3 million people. The period was to be six months, but the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions remembered that there were local government elections in London and curtailed the process. The consultation took place over the summer recess, and individual consultation exercises have not been advertised locally. Hon. Members have had to advertise them themselves. That is how the consultation has been carried out. The questionnaire is also dubious.

Mr. Wilshire: I am glad that the hon. Gentleman has been having the same difficulties as I have. Is he aware that the Department concerned said that it had sent letters, placed advertisements in local newspapers, and done all sorts of other things? If he is, has he discovered where it did all that, because I have not?

John McDonnell: Like the hon. Gentleman, I know of no such advertising. The only advertising of which I am aware in my constituency is that which local residents, the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Randall) and I generated. Let us be clear: the roadshows were a farce. Even the experts sent to staff the roadshows had inadequate information and were not sufficiently expert to respond to many of the questions that my constituents put to them. May I suggest to the Minister and to the Secretary of State that, to make the consultation real, Ministers should be out in the constituencies convening public meetings so that they can hear the views of constituency MPs and local residents who will be affected. It is time for Ministers to get out on the stump to hear what people are saying. My constituents are coming to Parliament today to express their frustration at not being allowed to have their say. The debate on the future of airport strategy has been restricted, lacks transparency, and appears to be a charade.

We need a genuine and open debate. Is there a need for greater airport capacity in the south-east? Is there a need for a new airport rather than the incremental internal development of existing airports at the expense of our environment and communities? Arguments exist that challenge the need for expansion. There are questions to be asked about the growth figures. I would welcome the Government commissioning an independent and transparent study of the growth projections in the consultation papers. There needs to be discussion and an independent evaluation of the economic benefits provided by the proposals, as they have been contested for some time. It is also time that we revisited the debate about the subsidy that the taxpayer gives to the aviation industry. Estimates published this month identify a £7.5 billion subsidy in taxation exemptions by the Government to the aviation industry in 2000, which is projected to rise to £16 billion in 2020. That means that on average, my constituents and all those in the south-east are donating £550 a year to the aviation industry. That should be part of any long-term and sound debate from which a rational policy for aviation in the south-east would develop.

If we accept that there is a need to expand, there is a long-term need for a new airport. My greatest anxiety is that the Government will plant on us new runways at Heathrow, Stansted, and eventually Gatwick. They may tinker around with Cliffe, but I believe that Cliffe is a red herring. I will return to that point. They will come back for a new airport in 10 years' time, having imposed those new runways. It will end up being more expensive and have a greater social and environmental impact because of the lack of long-term infrastructure planning. That is the nightmare. It is a nightmare for my constituents and the reason why we need a longer term plan rather than just another runway at Heathrow.

I hope that my colleagues will be able to outline the implications for their constituents. Despite what the consultation paper says, the implications for my constituents of the map in the consultation document are that the five villages surrounding Heathrow will be lost. Some 4,000 homes will go. Those figures are not mine, but are from the original Government consultation—the RUCATSE or Runway Capacity to Serve the South East study—in 1992. Some 10,000 local residents will be forcibly moved from their homes. Three primary schools will be closed and demolished, and two medieval churches will be flattened. The largest surviving medieval barn in western Europe will go. Village greens, community centres, swimming pools and children's playgrounds will be lost, as will green belt land. What is most offensive to my constituents is that the path of the third runway runs over Harmondsworth church and cemetery. My constituents are being asked to exhume the bodies of their relatives who are buried in Harmondsworth church. Some are in war graves and that is unacceptable at any price for the aviation industry.

My constituents believe that they have done enough for the economic benefit of the aviation industry and sacrificed enough for the economy of the country.

Dr. Howard Stoate (Dartford): I am pleased to know how strongly my hon. Friend feels about this matter. He is obviously representing his constituents very effectively. Does he appreciate that whereas increasing capacity at Heathrow would cause the problems he suggests, building an airport at Cliffe would cause significant environmental damage, albeit not on the same scale? It would certainly have a major impact on the local environment and on the local transport problems that we already face?

John McDonnell: I shall address that matter in due course. I certainly understand the concerns of hon. Members and constituents in that area.

I shall finish on the implications of a third runway at Heathrow. It will have an impact not only on my constituents, but on 2 million Londoners because of new flight paths, noise and pollution. It will not only destroy their environment, but will undermine property prices. Evidence is coming forward of links with cancer from air pollution and of teachers' inability to teach in west London schools because of noise.

Reference has been made to air traffic control. The skies above Heathrow are dangerously crowded. We have already heard expressions of concern from the air traffic control services about the potential risk from further development at Heathrow. That is why at successive inquiries my constituents were promised, "No more." I was at the terminal 4 inquiry when we were told not to worry because if terminal 4 was allowed, there would be no terminal 5. At the terminal 5 inquiry we were told that if terminal 5 was allowed, there would be no further development. The inspector made that one of the conditions to be recommended to the Government.

The managing director of the British Airports Authority at Heathrow wrote to my constituents and me 12 months ago saying that there was no need for a third runway, that BAA opposed a third runway and demanded that the inspector at the inquiry should say no to a third runway. What happened six months later? The Government allowed terminal 5, placed a cap on Heathrow and then, within weeks, started consultation for a third runway at Heathrow. I shall raise with the Speaker the need for a correction to the Hansard record because the Secretary of State, when announcing the consultation on a third runway at Heathrow, said that a cap had been placed on Heathrow only for the period of terminal 5. That is not true. The terminal 5 inspector said in the context of the Government's review of future aircraft capacity that it should be assumed that no further major development would take place at Heathrow after terminal 5. The Secretary of State should return to the House and correct his earlier statement, which was inaccurate.

We no longer believe what the British Airports Authority or Governments tell us. It is not a party political matter because successive Governments have regularly betrayed my constituents. We are pleading with the Government for at least a proper and rational debate and open, transparent and independent consultation on the process. There is a rush to decision making, which gives the impression that the debate has been decided, constituencies are being stitched up and the aviation industry has a fast track to No. 10 and to Ministers that overcome any concerns of hon. Members and their constituents.

My view, which is shared by other hon. Members, is that there is a need for a rational process to look at where a new airport would provide maximum benefit. Most of us have come to the conclusion that that would be in east London. That is where my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister is putting new homes, where the new work force will be and where jobs will be needed. The Government are already putting in new transport links with Crossrail and other developments.

No one believes that Cliffe is a viable option. It is a red herring. It would excite the interest of Greens throughout the planet if we asked them whether they would seek to put an airport on the largest bird sanctuary in western Europe. It is a red herring brought forward as a smokescreen by the Government at the behest of the aviation industry. The realistic option is Marinair. It may be more expensive now, but the Government may not be averse to private sector money being used to build it. I am not in favour of private finance initiatives but the Government certainly are, and the City is already interested in funding such a development.

The development would be in the Thames estuary and its environmental and social impact would be less than that of Stansted, Gatwick, Heathrow or Cliffe. It would generate jobs and, above all else, would increase public safety. Its cost would not be prohibitive because we will have to build it anyway. Let us bite the bullet and put in place a socially and environmentally acceptable new airport in the south-east to look to the long-term future of the aviation industry. The argument that it would threaten Heathrow is fallacious because we need to develop a network of airports, each of which should develop its own speciality, to stand us in good stead for future European competition. A new airport would be part of that network.

I urge the Government to think again and, if it is necessary, extend the consultation period.

Mr. Prisk: Does the hon. Gentleman share my hope that a new airport, which he has described and I endorse, would provide an opportunity to look at competition not only among airlines, but in the ownership and management of airports?

John McDonnell: Such competition has already broken out between regional airports and airports in London and the south-east, given their competing demands for development. It will be interesting to see the role that competition plays in the development of new airport networks, which is how we should describe them.

Whatever decision the Government take, let us unanimously endorse a policy to set environmental limits on airports in advance of their development to ensure that we do not have an incremental incursion on the quality of life and environment in the communities that we represent. I welcome my constituents' coming to Parliament today and I am with them. The hon. Members for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) and for Uxbridge and I will deliver a letter to No.10 to ask the Prime Minister to take a personal interest because the matter dramatically affects so many people.

10.1 am

Bob Spink (Castle Point): Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Cliffe or any other Thames estuary airport would have a devastating impact on people not only in Kent, but in south Essex. I will not repeat my earlier comments about the lack of consultation, and say only that the Government showed monumental arrogance in not consulting the people of south Essex.

I held a public meeting in my constituency that was attended by 1,000 people. The DTLR told me that it was going to send a representative to the meeting, but it failed to do so—it did not even a send an apology. The meeting was addressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess), who helped to arrange it, and soon he will hold a similar meeting in Leigh-on-Sea.

Joan Goddard, the Kent campaign leader, attended the meeting. She is a remarkable lady who has done so much to bring the matter to the public's attention where the Government have failed so miserably. Following that meeting, my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, West and I organised a petition, and I shall be presenting it on the Floor of the House tonight. I hope that I will be able to present it because it contains more than 10,000 signatures—signatures are still being collected—and is therefore very large.

I congratulate The Evening Echo, Yellow Advertiser and Island Times on their work in publicising the matter—they have done tremendously well. When the Minister sums up, will he say whether the fifth runway shown on the maps of the proposed Cliffe airport has been withdrawn and confirm that it will not proceed now or at any time in the future? I should like an undertaking on that matter.

Cliffe airport would be a disaster for Essex and Kent. It would impose massive noise, air and light pollution, environmental damage and possible, but as yet undefined, flood risks for Canvey island and coastal areas of Kent and Essex. It would be massive overdevelopment in a region that already suffers from too much building imposed by the Government. The possible development of an outer M25 route using the A130 would be a disaster for an area that already suffers massive road congestion.

Without the efforts of local Conservative MPs and the local newspapers, the people of south Essex would not have been aware of the dangers to their environment. The proposal for Cliffe, or another Thames estuary airport, is not a red herring; it is a formal Government proposal and we must fight it as such. If we do not, and other people fight for their communities, we shall be failing our community. How will we be able to hold our heads up high if the Minister then decides to go ahead with his disastrous proposal? I have a final question for the Minister: will he come to Canvey Island personally to face the wrath of local people, or is he afraid to do so?

10.5 am

Mr. Robert Marshall-Andrews (Medway): I congratulate the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Prisk) on having secured this important debate. I am reminded of the opening paragraph of Paul Theroux' greatest travel novel. It begins:

> "It is no accident that in all the 285 major languages of the world there is not one that contains a phrase, aphorism or clause even remotely approaching 'as pretty as an airport'."

That is the basis from which we all extend. Cliffe is in my constituency. It is the most beautiful part of my constituency and I have no intention of entering into a competition of horror. I can take on the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (John McDonnell) field for field, SSSI for SSSI and village for village. The village of All Hallows, every bit as ancient as those in west London, would disappear forever together with its church and cemetery. The feelings of the people in that area are indescribable; there has not been so great a proposed destruction of community in the interests of planning since the building of the great reservoirs in the last century. We must understand the full portent of the matter.

I question the premise on which the proposal is advanced, which is that the south-east of England requires greater airport capacity. When one reads the document, one perceives that that premise has no basis in commerce, in common sense or in human nature. It is conceivable that it is grounded in theology, which is a poor start for a planning application, particularly one of this size. The Government's argument is that the future of that great commercial enterprise, Heathrow, the mighty epicentre of work and money, which provides 2 per cent. of our national income and a vast number of jobs, will be threatened if we do not expand further into the south-east. The idea is that if we allow the beastly foreigners in Schipol, Charles de Gaulle, Frankfurt—all the usual suspects—free rein to take over the unassuageable bucket-seat travel market, which is growing daily and exponentially, then Heathrow will be at risk. It will become a rotting hulk at the west edge of London and will become like the London and Liverpool docks if we do not expand in another area. I well remember when that extraordinary—and false—analogy was made in the Chamber. I was sitting next to the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington and I thought that he would have apoplexy.

Can the Minister tell us what evidence he has of a need to build a new hub airport, or vastly to extend Heathrow with the phenomenal and fantastic level of environmental damage that that would cause? What study can we examine that suggests that failure to do that would adversely affect the existing provision at Heathrow?

The answer is very simple. People are not containers or goods to be shipped around the world; they make their own individual and commercial decisions about where they wish to travel. People will come to the United Kingdom if we succeed in making it a lodestone, and they will continue to come. If they are unable to come to the south-east because it has reached overcapacity, perhaps they will go to Charles de Gaulle and travel to London and the south-east by Eurostar or other methods—good luck to them. However, the massive destruction of our environment and communities in the south-east on a false economic premise is an unacceptable price to pay.

As I said, I do not wish to indulge in any form of nimbyism, but I cannot be part of the debate without drawing to the attention of the Chamber the environmental, economic and communal damage that would be done to the Cliffe marshes, Cliffe and the Hoo peninsula if ever the proposal were given life and air. On that site, we have the finest SSSIs in Europe, which are completely irreplaceable. There is no mitigation for the loss of such environments. We would lose entire communities including 1,100 homes in All Hallows, an ancient village in which people can trace back their membership to the community for generations. All of that would disappear.

On the issue of consultation, we had a consultation exercise, the chosen location for which was a hotel in my constituency. It would have been impossible to find an area or a site more geographically remote from the Hoo peninsula than that hotel. It has been suggested that that was deliberate. I do not suggest that, but it was an error.

I can tell the Chamber that my constituents are a sturdy lot. In history, no constituents have given more for their country than those who have lived in the area of Chatham, its dockyards and industries. They are not shy of making sacrifices in the national interest, but they will not tolerate the destruction of their lives and their much-loved environment on the basis of a false theology.

10.13 am

Mr. John Randall (Uxbridge): I echo the comments of the hon. and learned Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews). We are all here in an effort to plead our cases, but we should not do so on the basis of not wanting to be the ones to be sacrificed for development. I feel passionate for my constituents and the area of Heathrow. The demonstration there today and the petition will show their strength of feeling, and other areas will have the same strength of feeling.

The Minister must have heard that the period allowed for consultation is a sham. The Government must immediately extend it for the sake of fair play. I shall not reiterate the statements of the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (John McDonnell) or my hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson); on this matter; we are all friends in Hillingdon. The pollution and destruction is, of course, dramatic, but I shall not ask for it to be dumped in someone else's backyard.

It is obvious that nobody wants the development and, in echo of the comments of the hon. and learned Member for Medway, I should like to question whether the Government have made the case for such a dramatic increase. We should be managing demand and considering what must be done. What about making rail infrastructure more efficient to cut down the number of internal flights?

Most people would prefer to go by rail if it were efficient and cheap, rather than fly around the country. That must be looked at.

As many other Members want to speak, I shall cut my speech short. I would simply say to the Minister, and to people outside, that the time has come for us seriously to consider what we want. Do we want to put the environment and quality of life higher on the agenda? If no one wants these developments in their backyard, we must seriously consider drawing a line in the sand and looking at the alternatives, as the hon. and learned Member for Medway said. I am not going to say that the developments should be sited anywhere. I, too, feel passionately about Cliffe. As a bird watcher, I have spent many happy hours there and I shall fight for that as much as for Heathrow.

We do not want to enter a game of each trying to prove why we should not have an airport or expansion in our constituency. We all feel the same. This is an opportunity for the nation to look seriously at what it wants.

10.15 am

Mr. Alan Hurst (Braintree): I congratulate the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Prisk) on securing this important debate. I shall endeavour to be as brief as other hon. Members have been.

I endorse in particular the remarks of the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Randall). There is nothing more undignified than saying, "Don't take me, take him." The speech that introduced the debate was balanced. I agree with some parts and disagree with others. I do not have the misfortune to represent a parliamentary constituency containing one of the sites, but mine is remarkably close to one, and villages in my constituency would be adversely affected were the Stansted proposals to go ahead.

I am a little concerned that arguments about Heathrow have been being made for years. They have been put eloquently, and Heathrow has suffered interminably. The arguments for Cliffe do not seem to me to be arguments at all. As my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews) said so eloquently, if we really wanted to stir up a hornet's nest, or bring down a whirlwind upon us—he put it much better than I—we would propose the most important scientific and environmental site in the country so that all opposition would rage up against us. The danger for Stansted is that the arguments against the other prospective major sites are so strong that people will start to say that Stansted is the least bad option. I shall not, therefore, go down the route of saying that we should have an airport at Cliffe or expand Heathrow, or open up the arguments about Gatwick. That would be dodging the issue.

I must make it clear that there is a strong environmental case against expansion at Stansted. The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford put the arguments very well. We already face a situation in which local people cannot afford to buy local houses. I do not believe that employment expansion is needed in our part of Essex and Hertfordshire. If we had airport expansion, most of the workers would not be able to afford most of the available properties in our area.

The countryside around Stansted has attractive villages set in wooded countryside amid low rolling hills and valleys. It is not, as some would picture it, flat and interspersed with concrete, but very attractive old English countryside. It has already been threatened by speculative house builders. Each time there is an airport expansion, the developer comes jumping on the back of that, to build houses that are allegedly for the work force but that in reality will be sold to those who commute down the motorway to London to work and return in the evening.

The consequence is not only the destruction of the appearance of the countryside, but a substantial undermining of village life and rural ways. I have been told that if one strolls of an evening in certain woods close to Stansted, one smells not honeysuckle on the air, but petroleum. A vast increase on the scale that is contemplated would have a devastating economic effect on our area.

On Cliffe, I propose to say only that I strongly oppose it as an alternative site. Like the hon. Member for Uxbridge, I have been a lifelong watcher of birds and I know how important Cliffe is to anybody who is interested in nature conservation. That is evident when one hears that avocets and little egrets breed there—they were extinct as breeding birds in this land when I was a boy.

Way beyond that is the question of the effect that the proposals will have on the way in which we live our lives. We must start to challenge the figures that have been put forward, which are projections into the future based on what happened in the past, as though nothing ever changes. We were recently reminded that in the 1960s television shows attracted 28 million viewers; now they attract only half that number. As the world changes, people's tastes change. Is it really worth the price of destroying our environment and parts of our way of life just to have a cheap holiday in a country that is warmer for some parts of the year?

Mr. Oliver Heald (North-East Hertfordshire): My constituency is getting it on both sides. Down in the south-east corner, just over the border, it is proposed that Stansted should quadruple in size to double the size of Heathrow. Small villages such as Little Hadham will come into the 57 DB footprint. That means that villagers will live in an area where the average noise level is 57 DB, so that they are unable to sit out in their gardens or to live their lives against the background of a relatively unspoilt rural area with a low ambient noise level. Further north, rural areas will live with the constant background of a low hum that does not quite reach the 57 DB footprint. The proposal means that 80,000 new workers will move into our area and that 18,000 new houses will have to be built in an area that is already the most populated county in the country. On the south-east side, there will be a 10-fold, or possibly an eight-fold, increase in traffic. It is disaster for people in that part of Hertfordshire.

On the other side of my constituency, just a few miles from the border, is Luton airport, where a five-fold increase in traffic is proposed, with a realignment of the runway that would push traffic across Letchworth and Hitchin as it turns to land. Again, there will be a low hum all the time, not just intermittently, and 2,600 extra houses and 12,000 extra workers will be needed. One has to ask whether it is sensible to build airport capacity so that arrivals and departures fly over people's homes—surely a better solution can be found. I do not like the look of the Cliffe proposals, but, as the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (John McDonnell) said, we should examine options in the Thames estuary—perhaps Marinair.

What is proposed for Stansted is an outrage. Seventeen protest meetings have taken place, and I pay tribute to Norman Mead, who has been to every one. He is leading the campaign and understands the issues very well. As you know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, he lives in an area that is already badly affected by noise and pollution, and does not want it to be spread out over the whole area. I pay tribute to the Herts and Essex Observer for its "Stop Stansted" campaign. It has been reassuring to have the support of the local newspaper.

The Government must think again. The proposals are nothing less than disastrous for my constituents in north-east Hertfordshire and for the neighbouring areas in Essex.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. Before I call the next hon. Member, I would like to remind the Chamber that it is customary for Front-Bench speeches to start at 10.30 am. I hope that everyone will respect that.

10.25 am

Mr. Chris Pond (Gravesham): The site of the proposed Cliffe airport is not in my constituency, but right next to it in the constituency of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews). Gravesend would be directly under the flight path, and the villages of Meopham, Higham and Shorne would be directly affected.

Last night, Gravesham borough council met to consider its view on an airport at Cliffe. It invited the public to the meeting, which was attended by 200 people. As with so many of the meetings that have been held in recent weeks in my constituency, hundreds of people added their opposition to the thousands who have already expressed their concerns. Gravesham borough council last night resolved to oppose an airport at Cliffe. Medway council, Kent county council and every other representative body in the area have now decided to oppose the proposal.

It was perhaps surprising that the representative from the youth forum at last night's meeting stated the objection of young people in the area. One would have thought that the prospect of 50,000 to 80,000 long-term jobs would have been tantalising to young people. In fact, they believe that the environmental impact would be such that they, too, wish to oppose the airport.

Many hon. Members have said that they do not wish to engage in nimbyism or a competition as to who will suffer the greatest damage from the proposed airport. Certainly none of my constituents who have opposed proposals to site an airport at Cliffe have said that it should be put elsewhere. We all understand the devastation that it would create to our communities, and we are all determined to fight for our own communities, but to do so in such a way that we do not damage others.

Dr. Stoate: I am pleased that people in my hon. Friend's community agree with those in my community that this is a proposal too far. I do not wish to get involved in nimbyism either, because that would be wrong. However, it is important that communities work together, therefore, I reiterate that my community feels exactly the same as my hon. Friend's does, and we are working together on this very important issue.

Mr. Pond: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. We are working very closely with other hon. Members in north Kent to oppose the proposal on behalf of our communities.

I want hon. Members to understand the scale of the proposal for Cliffe. We are talking about a four or five-runway airport, twice the size of Heathrow, which would operate 24 hours a day. It would cost a minimum of £11.5 billion, not counting much of the infrastructure costs. It would be built on marsh land and would have to stand on a 15 m platform to prevent its sinking into the Thames estuary. We are talking about a massive project.

As other hon. Members have made clear—I will not dwell on it because of the time—the site is of international importance because of its scientific value. That is why it is a concern for all of us. Other hon. Members have said that they too will oppose an airport at Cliffe because of the impact on the wildlife, especially bird life. The consultation document makes the point that there is also a very real safety concern. For thousands of years, the flight paths of wild birds have crossed the area, and they would not sit well with the flight paths of jet aircraft.

I shall not dwell on the issue, except to say that the Government are aware that they would be tied for many years in legal wrangling with the European Commission and organisations such as the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds if they were to choose the site. A decision was made under international agreements to go ahead and set that site aside because of its scientific importance and natural value. There has already been considerable damage to the Government's environmental credibility. As far as my constituents are concerned, it will take many years to repair that damage. If we were to wrangle for many years with the European Commission over environmental issues to build the airport at Cliffe, the damage would be irreparable.

I want to dwell briefly on the economic arguments because the environmental arguments have been put very well. Cliffe and that part of north Kent are part of the Thames gateway. The Thames gateway is a thoroughfare of prosperity and employment between this country and continental Europe. Therefore, if we were to drop an airport of this size across the Thames gateway at Cliffe —let's not pretend that that is anything to do with the regeneration of north Kent or the Thames gateway—it would draw on the infrastructure investment that has already been made. If we were to drop the airport there, it would become not a gateway, but a blockade.

Paul Clark (Gillingham): On that point, does my hon. Friend agree that the case for regeneration, which has been referred to by many hon. Members in the debate, in the east of London and the Thames gateway area—jobs, affordable housing and so on—has actually been made in a balanced way through public and private work through the area investment framework, which will deliver a far more sustainable development than an airport being dropped on to it?

Mr. Pond: I am grateful to my hon. Friend and I pay tribute to him for the work he has done in assisting the regeneration of that part of north Kent through the area investment framework. He will know that the matter under debate is not part of that proposal. I do not plan to dwell further on the matter, except to say that there are no economic arguments for it. It would do long-term damage to not only the prosperity of north Kent and the Thames gateway, but the nation as a whole, as well as having an environmental impact. We must consider alternatives to just meeting the projected demand. We must manage the demand and look at alternatives that will not do such damage to our economy and our environment.

10.32 am

Tom Brake (Carshalton and Wallington): I congratulate the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Prisk) on securing this topical and controversial debate. There have been useful and interesting contributions from many hon. Members who have eloquently set out the reasons why there should be no airport development on their patch. Some have eloquently set out why that development should take place in someone else's patch. The hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (John McDonnell) expressed great concern about the consultation process. He described it as flawed, and I think that he is correct. The time scales are too short and the consultation was been leading, as I shall illustrate shortly.

Many hon. Members have argued against development of airports or runways in or near their constituencies, but with the possible exception of the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Randall), no one has suggested how we could address the problem and manage the demand. Rail has a key part to play, and I will come onto that shortly. The starting point for any transport policy is that it should be sustainable. That means that the policy should reduce carbon dioxide emissions, noise pollution and congestion. How do the Government's plans measure up to those challenges? I am afraid that, so far, they do not. The approach is simply one of predict and provide, and that is not sustainable. Local communities do not think that it is sustainable.

The Government are consulting on the proposals. As I said, the consultation has been leading. That is apparent in the phraseology of some of the questions. For instance, question three states:

"Airport development can bring benefits to the local area".

That is probably true, but what sort of response would the Government have got if they had turned that question around, and said something like, "Airport development can bring disadvantages to the local area"? What would the responses have been? Question four asks:

"How important do you feel it is to consider the following environmental impacts?"

If one were to change the bias, that question would ask, "How important do you feel it is to consider the following economic benefits?" The whole consultation points to a presumption in favour of massive airport development, rather than in the other direction, as I think it should.

Where in the consultation document are the tough questions? The Government have admitted that if the aviation industry takes no measures to reduce emissions, the reductions achieved under the Kyoto protocol could be offset by 30 to 50 per cent. by 2012 due to increased aircraft emissions. Where does the document ask whether people want more CO_2 emissions from aviation, as opposed to measures to reduce them? There are no such questions. Nor does anything highlight the fact that fast rail links create three times less CO_2 than their short-haul flight equivalents.

Mr. Wilkinson: As a fellow London Member, does the hon. Gentleman not agree that the possible development location that militates most against the sensible criteria that he has set out is that of the third east-west runway at Heathrow? It would do west London and the capital as a whole the greatest environmental damage. Will the hon. Gentleman and the Liberal Democrat party say so explicitly?

Tom Brake: I am happy to respond. The inspector has made his position clear, and we support the view, which was put in very stark terms, that a third runway at Heathrow is environmentally unsustainable.

I come now to the Government options. The inspector has dismissed the proposals for Heathrow. As the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington highlighted, 4,000 homes would have to be demolished to construct the third runway. It is a pity that the consultation document does not spell that number out exactly; it simply says that a number of homes would have to be demolished. Let us include the facts and figures so that people know what they are being consulted on.

Then there is Cliffe. I think that it was Richard Everett, the chief executive of the National Air Traffic Services, who said that the £11.5 billion project was a non-starter. I also understand that the Environment Minister said at a SERAS fringe meeting at the Labour conference that Cliffe was the "joker in the pack". I am not sure whether that means that it can overrule all other options or that it can be completely dismissed; the Minister's position was unclear.

Other hon. Members have talked about the implications of the Stansted option. The airport is in an area with low unemployment and a housing shortage. If up to 80,000 jobs were created there, where would the people who were going to do them live and where would they come from? That has not been clarified.

The Heathrow and Stansted options would create yet more congestion in already crowded airspace. To what extent are the safety implications of airport and runway development being taken into account? Is it sensible to have yet more development and yet more aircraft flying over congested airspace? I have a nasty feeling—I suspect that other hon. Members do, too—that everything that the Government are doing points to the Stansted option; they are steering us inexorably towards such a solution.

Rail substitution can play a key role. We do not know whether it could resolve the problem of the massive projected increase in passenger numbers, for the simple reason that the Government have not advanced a policy of using rail substitution to tackle that increase.

I want to ask the Minister a few questions—he asked me whether I had any, and I would hate to disappoint him. First, what is the Government's target for substituting rail for short-haul flights? The Government expect 500 million passengers to be travelling by plane by 2030. By how much could the Government's target reduce that number? What percentage of domestic and international journeys does the Minister expect will be by rail rather than short-haul flight by 2030? To be more specific, what discussions has the Minister had, for example, about the potential for a fast rail link between London and Amsterdam? I met Eurostar representatives last week and they were adamant that they could create the potential for approximately 3 million passenger journeys if the link were established. Therefore, what role would it play in the Government's policy?

What percentage of trips to airports does the Minister expect will be on public transport by 2030? Congestion around airports is clearly also an important factor. If the Government had a sustainable transport policy, the Minister would be able to answer those questions.

The Minister now has the opportunity to confirm that the Government are not going down the slippery slope of predict and provide for airports and runways. Will they go for the joker in the pack option—Cliffe or Stansted—or the ace in the pack that is rail substitution? Communities throughout the country will be listening very carefully to the Minister's response.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York): First, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Prisk) on securing this timely debate and recognise the many eloquent contributions that have been made.

[Miss Anne McIntosh]

Let me first declare an interest. For 10 years I was a Member of the European Parliament, first for Essex North East and then for Essex North and South Suffolk and I still have a property in north Essex. Also, my husband works for Delta Air Lines as a sales director and I own personal equity plans in British Airways and the British Airports Authority.

Our guiding principles were set out by the shadow Transport Secretary in Bournemouth last week. We hope to put people first. We would ensure that transport policy would play its part in improving and safeguarding the environment of our communities and our world. Safety is of critical importance and we recognise the central importance of rail in developing any long-term transport strategy. Essentially, in putting people first, the Conservatives realise that a difficult balance must be reached. Airports are businesses, major employers and contributors to the local economy. Passengers increasingly want to fly on business, for holidays and to visit family, but we must never lose sight of those who live near airports. They may not travel often themselves, but they are exposed to environmental disbenefits such as noise, traffic pollution and the general intrusion of airport activity.

I curtail my remarks and put questions to the Minister. Following the strenuous representations made in this debate today and considering the impact that the proposals contain, does he now regret that the consultation period is so short and insufficient? The consultation procedure, as eloquently explained by the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (John McDonnell) and others, is seriously flawed in its brevity, lack of openness, transparency and the singular lack of publicity attached to it. The short time in which Ministers could make themselves available included a two-and-a-half-month recess.

How confident is the Minister that Government forecasts are accurate when page 19 of the summary of the consultation document states that:

"The rate of growth is predicted to decline, more so in the South East".

What guarantee can he give us that such forecasts are accurate? What studies and research can the Minister point to regarding the extent to which railways can eventually compete with airlines, especially on domestic routes and for short-fall European traffic using existing Eurostar services to Paris, Lille, Brussels and Cologne and now Avignon and Nice? It is unbelievable that the Government have not undertaken such studies because our partners in the countries in which those services operate will have done so. The information is freely available to the travelling public in those countries.

What estimate have the Government made of the potential of regional air services? Let us take Manchester airport as an example. In 1982 it was a largely domestic charter traffic airport. It is now recognised as a major international airport. The key to that development was access by public transport. Does the Minister agree that it would be better to improve public transport to existing airports such as Teesside airport and Leeds Bradford airport, as happened with Manchester airport, than to develop a wholly new airport, such as that proposed at Finningley in south Yorkshire?

Will the Government take the opportunity offered by the consultation to end a current anomaly by placing car parks closer to airports? That would reduce pollution. It has been put to me that car parks in Stockport serving Manchester airport are more than five miles away from the airport, and passengers are bussed there from the car park. They are listed in airport statistics as passengers "arriving by public transport". Will the Minister end another anomaly, referred to by several hon. Members today, whereby airport-related housing, such as that in the Uttlesford district, is anything but that, as those who work in the airport cannot afford the prices of those houses?

We recognise the need to increase airport capacity, but take a national view. The focus should not be on the south-east only. I would say that, because I represent a constituency in north Yorkshire that could be better served by having a greater choice of flights from existing airports and better public transport access to them. Could we focus on regional airports, and could we have some information from the Government on the studies that they have done into using rail as an alternative?

One conclusion is that we should think about the three Es: environment, environment, environment. That should be one of the driving factors in deciding where airport capacity should go. The Government must be seen to have an independent, transparent consultation period of sufficient length. Conservative hon. Members think that three months is a gross underestimate of how long that period should be; three months is simply too short. The consultation should satisfy the demands of those with competing interests. We must never lose sight of those who, often unwittingly, go to live near airports sites such as Stansted—one of the airport sites only developed in the early 1980s and late 1970s—and whose quality of life will be irreparably threatened by the proposals.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. David Jamieson): As I was eating my cornflakes at breakfast this morning, I saw the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Prisk) on the BBC morning news flagging up today's debate. I congratulate local BBC television on mentioning some of the debates that take place in Westminster Hall, which are too little reported. As I listened to the contributions made in that short part of the programme, I thought it was interesting how much they reflected the debate that we have had, in that there were a wide range of views on the matter.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford on securing the debate, and on the way in which he introduced his speech by supporting his constituency.

Mr. Prisk: If, as the Minister says, there is a wide range of views, why is the consultation period so short?

Mr. Jamieson: I can deal with that now. The consultation will inevitably raise concerns. The proposals will blight certain areas. We have had a considerable amount of correspondence—quite rightly—from hon. Members who say that their constituencies now feel blighted. They say that we should be making decisions fairly rapidly, and should be reducing the time we take to discuss the issues. We must carefully balance getting proper consultation, and allowing the Government to consider views, with the fact that if we consulted for one, two or three years, we would in effect blight people's properties for long periods. Some are telling us that we should take decisions at an early opportunity. We will take those decisions in accordance with proper consideration of the points raised during the consultation.

Mr. David Amess (Southend, West): Despite what the Minister says about the length of consultation, will he accept that there has been no consultation as far as my constituents in Southend, West are concerned? To add to what the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (John McDonnell) said, will he ensure that a representative from the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions will attend the public meeting arranged for 1 November?

Mr. Jamieson: I take note of what the hon. Gentleman said.

To return to comments made at the start of the debate, the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford said that this was a significant statement on air travel. He said that in the past we had had to "make do and mend". I agree with him entirely, which is why the Government believe that, after almost 100 years of aviation in this country, we now need to present to the country some of the clear choices that we must make.

In this country, we have a desire to travel that would have been entirely unexpected 50 years ago. The situation is such that, last year, 50 per cent. of the population of this country travelled at least once by air. That would have been unimaginable even 20 years ago. One third of the value of the freight of the imports and exports into this country also goes by air. Some 180,000 jobs in the south-east alone depend on air travel and air transport. If we continue to increase people's desire to travel, whether internally within the country or to other parts of the world, for business or leisure, we must weigh against that the environmental concerns that hon. Members from various quarters quite properly have raised in the debate today.

We must also consider the effects of noise and pollution on environments and people, as several hon. Members mentioned today. Wherever we stand in this debate, and whatever our beliefs about where a development should take place or the importance of the environment and of noise on communities, the Government did not have the option of doing nothing. We had to place these matters before the public for proper open debate, and I assure hon. Members that we have done precisely that. I accept some of the criticisms that there may be inadequacies in our documents, but I must say that they were drawn up after long and careful consideration. We proposed what we believed were good options. We reduced them to a level that we believed was sensible so that people could make proper contributions to the debate. We had to have the debate. It is a difficult debate. There are many views, even among the 20 or 30 hon. Members in this Chamber today.

Mr. Randall: With regard to open debate, will the Minister explain why section 12.2 of the SERAS study quotes a minimum of £15,000 compensation, but the compulsory purchase and compensation document quotes a maximum of £15,000? Was that just an unfortunate mistake?

Mr. Jamieson: I will jot the hon. Gentleman a note about that if he wants me to. I cannot give an answer straight away.

With regard to the comments made today, the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford talked about the length of the consultation. I believe that I have covered that. The problems of blight would have been considerable if we had extended the debate. I must take him to task for using the phrase "planned development" at Stansted. There is no planned development, just options. It is important in our use of language that we appreciate that these are options, not proposals. On the other hand, I fully understand the important concerns of his constituents that he raised. I assure him that the Government are mindful of those considerable concerns.

Comments have been made about the consultation process, and my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington (John McDonnell) questioned whether it had been advertised sufficiently. I believe that it was advertised in the Evening Standard and Metro, and from the amount of interest that we received in response from people in local areas as well as wider areas around the country, it seems to have been well publicised.

John McDonnell: The interest generated in my constituency was initiated by us. It was not advertised in the local paper. The Evening Standard is not our local paper and Metro often does not reach my constituency. Our local paper is the Gazette, in which the consultation process was not advertised. According to the Government's figures, 35,000 of our constituents will be poisoned by nitrogen dioxide levels that go beyond European limits. There were no experts at the consultation meeting and no medical expert was present to answer questions about the effects on our physical capacity to survive.

Mr. Jamieson: I thank my hon. Friend for that intervention. I should be happy to discuss any deficiencies in the consultation process that he brings to my attention. This is the first time that I have heard about some of them, and if he had told me about them earlier, I could have dealt with them.

Mr. Prisk: The Minister has heard today our complaints about the consultation process and he has heard them before. The Secretary of State made the announcement on 23 July, immediately before the House went into recess, so for many weeks, we had no opportunity to debate the issue in Parliament. Surely, it is time for the Government to give us another two months, at least, to make sure that we have got it right. I am not asking for years, but surely six months overall is not too much to ask.

Mr. Jamieson: I hear what the hon. Gentleman says, but other hon. Members are asking us to curtail the process and end the blight on their constituencies. We have to balance the two arguments.

Mr. Prisk: Who are they?

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. Gentleman asked about the consultation at Stansted, which he suggested was not properly advertised. Apparently, there was huge interest in the exhibition and the Secretary of State will respond to the request for an extra exhibition in the next few days.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington, as always, argued powerfully the case for Heathrow, but some of his arguments illustrate the difficulties. My hon. Friend has rightly argued strongly in the past for jobs and prosperity in his constituency, but he also talks about the intrusion that would be caused by further development, which I also understand. That is the nub of the problem. We must consider jobs and development while reducing the detrimental effects on local people.

Alan Keen (Feltham and Heston): Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. Gentleman was not present for the whole debate, so I hope that he will forgive me if I do not give way to him.

The hon. Member for Castle Point (Bob Spink) made several helpful points. He asked about the fifth runway at Cliffe, but it would be inappropriate at this stage for us to add any options to those proposed in the consultation document.

Bob Spink: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Jamieson: I will when I have answered his previous point. He said that that runway would only receive arrivals from the south-west and would not affect residents in south Essex.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews) said that he had considered the proposals, field for field and ancient site for ancient site. Of course, that is part of the dilemma because there are conflicting interests in each of the various developments. He questioned whether we need the extra capacity in the south-east, precisely the question that we asked in the consultation document. The hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Tom Brake) was right to stress the importance of environmental considerations, but if we decide that there should be no more airport development, will he tell his constituents that we are restricting their ability to fly? That is the nub of the question. I think he said that he was in favour of a reduction in air travel, but if that is Liberal Democrat policy, he must answer the question whether we should reduce people's ability to fly.

Questions were asked about rail links and substitution, which are an important part of the consultation. Many of those who, like myself, represent a far-flung part of the country, would welcome better rail links, especially into London for international flights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We must now turn to the debate on corroboration in sex abuse cases.

Sex Abuse Cases

11 am

Mrs. Claire Curtis-Thomas (Crosby): In 1998, I was holding one of my regular Saturday surgeries when two men came to see me to discuss their deep concerns about a friend. Their friend was a social worker in a local care home that had been established for many years and looked after young men who came from broken families or had misbehaved. For one reason or another, those young men had no one else to care for them except the council. The men's friend had been arrested for sex abuse, but they said that it was impossible that he could have committed the crimes of which he was accused.

Of course, that is a pretty normal response from anyone who learns that a friend has been accused of a horrendous crime. Sex abuse is one of those private things, and we now understand that the most vulnerable and innocent sorts of people can at one time be sex offenders. I told my visitors that they should be content with the outcome of the criminal proceedings and the jury's verdict on their friend, but I promised that I would ask some parliamentary questions about sex abuse crimes.

The answers that I received to my questions were alarming. It transpired that more than 40 police authorities had investigated cases of historical sex abuse, as opposed to one-on-one abuse, during the past two years. Police authorities receive two sorts of complaints about sex abuse—one about abuse initiated by an individual against an individual, and the other about abuse by an individual against many individuals. Those 40 police authorities were considering complex sex abuse cases involving hundreds and thousands of complainants and thousands of potential sex offenders.

Dozens of prisons hold sex offenders in this country. I have been to prisons that are exclusively the domain of sex offenders. Sex offending is a huge problem in the UK, and the associated costs of the inquiries are fantastic. When I asked a parliamentary question about Operation Rose, an inquiry by the police in the north-east, I was informed that the police costs alone for prosecuting those cases were £5 million. I estimate that £5 million must go to the Crown Prosecution Service and another £5 million on court proceedings, so each inquiry must cost about £15 million. I therefore suspect that the amount of public money allocated to the prosecution of cases is some half a billion pounds.

Armed with that sort of information, I received inquiries from other hon. Members whose constituents had come to see them. I decided that we should form an all-party group, but it was with some hesitation that I wrote to my colleagues asking for support. On the surface of it, we appeared to be a group who were generally in support of paedophiles, but that was certainly not the case.

I was very reassured when, after writing my first and only letter seeking support for the group, we received 60 responses from hon. Members on both sides of the House. The group was established one year ago. Our terms of reference were that we should not interest ourselves in individuals' guilt or innocence, but merely seek to identify and examine the processes used by the police, the Crown Prosecution Service and the courts when prosecuting cases. We would focus not on people, but on the process—and that is what we have done ever since.

Last year we dealt with 3,000 letters and made dozens of visits, and I have been into more prisons than I care to recall. I have spoken to complainants, victims and people who have been accused of sex offences and incarcerated for 20 years. I have spoken to judges, the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General—and, indeed, the Minister who is here today.

The group has had a significant amount of correspondence from many different people, although essentially it has come from two groups. First, there are those who have been accused by another person. Secondly, there are the friends and families of the accused, or "the damned", as I prefer to call them. This group has relatives who have been accused of the most horrendous acts against not just one, but dozens of people.

I also have many letters from social workers and care workers who have been arrested and released, but who are waiting for another knock on the door. I have letters from people whom the police have identified as suspects and who are desperately waiting to discover the outcome of the deliberations, which can sometimes take as long as three or four years. I have letters from people who have been arrested and who are waiting for the police to put together their case. I have letters from those who have been charged and who are waiting for their cases to come to court. Finally, I have letters both from those who have been acquitted and from those who have been convicted.

All those people discuss their grave concerns about the processes that the police use to execute their inquiries. I think that often, the only difference between those who are acquitted and those who are convicted is luck, which consists of little more than the calibre of the team that supports them and the climate in which the case is conducted on the day.

How do people such as care workers with an unblemished service history find themselves accused of sex offences? When do they know that their world, and that of their family and friends, is about to collapse? It happens in one of two ways. Some of them may be at work. Someone who has been working in a care home for 30 years may be summoned to their supervisor's office to be told that allegations have made against them and inquiries are being made. They must go home at once and wait—which is what they do. Some of them wait a long time before finding out the nature of the complaint against them. Other people, however, may have been retired for 20 years. There may be a knock at the door at six o'clock in the morning, and six police officers may be waiting outside to tell them that they are being arrested for sexually abusing 20 people, 30 or 40 years ago.

Those who find themselves in that position have two ways out. They can admit their guilt; contrary to popular myth, many do. Many sex offenders are glad that they have been arrested, because they were locked into appalling behaviours from which they were waiting to be liberated. I have met sex offenders in prison who never want to be released in any circumstances, because they are so afraid of what will happen to them when they get out, and because they know that they are still extremely vulnerable.

Other people with whom I deal profess that they are innocent, as one would expect, and I have come to believe that there is in fact every likelihood that some of them are. They then wait to go to court.

How do the police come by the allegations that place those individuals in such a predicament? Police use a number of processes, one of which is trawling, and they receive complaints from a number of sources. What is trawling, and where do the complaints come from? Some come from solicitors who manage compensation schemes. Their advertisements say, "No win, no fee," and, "Have you been subject to a traffic accident?" or "Have you been abused? If so, you may be entitled to compensation." People who have been abused or who are seeking compensation may come forward legitimately and the solicitor refers them to the police; that is one source. A second is the individuals who go directly to the police.

There are also cases in which the police go "cold calling" and realise complaints directly. What does that mean? In certain operations the police authorities have identified every social worker who has ever worked in a care home as an individual who might have committed a sex crime. They have to start like that; they seem to believe that sex abuse is rampant in care homes. I do not share that view—it is a damning indictment of the vast majority of people who give their lives to help those who are far more vulnerable than they are.

The police may write to all the individuals who have ever lived in a certain care home asking them to help with inquiries and advising them to make contact if they suffered any problem while in that home. That may identify an individual, who will then give a statement along the lines of, "I was sexually abused"—or perhaps physically abused—"But I can't remember when."

The police then have just one statement. If they present one statement in court against a man who might have had 40 years' unblemished service, they will not win. That has something to do with the majority of complainants in such cases; they are largely convicted criminals. I have visited such people in prison, and many have themselves been convicted of murder, grievous bodily harm or other horrendous crimes, including sex abuse.

Thus the police have a statement from somebody and there is every probability that that person is a convicted criminal. They know that they cannot take the case to court—they would never secure a conviction—so they need corroboration of the evidence that they have from that one person. Therefore, they seek others. They do so by telling the first individual that it is necessary to identify others who might be able to help, and asking whether that person can think of anyone else who was present at the time. The individual might offer a list of people whom the police can then interview—usually in prison, because most of those whom they seek to interview are in prison, on remand or on parole.

The police go to prisons, frequently unannounced—I know that because I have spoken to people who have been interviewed by the police in prison—and sit down with a complainant. They say, "We've come to see you today because we hope that you can help us with our inquiries in connection with an individual who has been accused of, and arrested for, sex offences." They normally offer a photograph at this point, and say,

[Mrs. Claire Curtis-Thomas]

"This is the man. He has done the most horrendous things to other people. Is there anything you can say to help us, because the statement that we have is not enough to convict him? We need something else. Is there anything else that you can give us?"

In a real case that came to court this year, the police had been to see an individual in prison. At the first interview, he said, "I've got nothing to tell you at all. This man has done nothing." But the police say that such people are hardened criminals, that they find it difficult to make disclosures so they have to be encouraged. So they went back to see that individual again and again and again. They went back to see him 15 times in 10 different prisons—then they got a statement. He was not the only person whom the police were seeing, because although they now had two allegations, two were still not enough, as the two people who had made them were convicted criminals, serving sentences for the most horrendous crimes. That is not enough; the police have to find others, and they do.

During the conversation the police can say, "There's compensation available; it's only right that you should receive that." Or they can say, "You know, you're coming up for parole," which may be in 20 years' time, 10 years' time, five years' time or next week. "How good will it look for your parole that you have identified the fact that you were abused as a child?" I have interviewed people, and for many of them money is not the issue. They have more to gain from helping the police than just money. They receive many visits from the police and see much activity. They become the centre of attention; they are not the baddy any more, but the goody. Some are very much persuaded by the opportunity to get a good report when it comes to parole time.

At the end of the day, the police may have 20 complainants. They need 20 to get to court because invariably, days before the case is to be heard, that 20 is whittled down, perhaps to 10. They know that statistically, they need at least eight to get a conviction. I can tell hon. Members that if anyone comes to their surgery and says that he has been accused of sex abuse, there is only one question that has to be asked, if he is a social worker: "How many complaints are there against you?" If it is eight, tell him to forget the judicial process and not to bother going to court, because he can go and see the judge and tell him that he can save the public purse a lot of money because he knows he is going down. He will go down. There is no way that eight people can be dispensed with , because the idea is that one can fool some of the people some of the time, but not all of the people all of the time. If someone is facing eight individuals accusing them of the same crime over decades—there may be 60, 80 or 100 different sex indictments—people will think that there is no smoke without fire. Someone in there must be telling the truth; they cannot all be telling lies. Therefore the person goes to court.

I attended court this summer, and on that day the newspaper that I am holding now carried the following headlines, with pictures: on page 1, "Dani, 15, killed by the uncle who lusted for her", and on page 2, "Dani's blood on stockings". Page 5 read, "Huntley's not mad, he's not depressed. He will be tried", and page 6, with a picture of bereaved parents, "We still have each other".

Then people found the accused before them and discovered a sex offender present in their midst. They had one of these people. They could not get the ones here in the paper, but they had another one in front of them. The list of indictments for him included: buggery, sometime in April 1983; indecent assault, 1984; indecent assault, 1983; buggery, 1984. There is page after page of dates: 1973, 1978, 1969. That is the kind of accusation that such people face.

In a case earlier this summer, an individual who went to court faced 10 complainants; he was summonsed with another chap on 58 counts not dissimilar to those that I have mentioned. Two of the people who were brought to court to give evidence against him were from Broadmoor and had serious psychiatric problems, so they were refused. The third person who came before the court had made a mistake in that he had applied for compensation before the court case—I wish that they had all made that mistake. He was subjected to a significant amount of cross-questioning, which eventually culminated in the defence lawyer saying, "You're doing this for the compensation, aren't you?" to which he replied, "Yes, I am." Then he said, "And everything that I've said is a complete pack of lies." Next morning he was dispensed with and was subsequently brought before the judge for perjury, for which he is awaiting trial.

On the following morning, the next person who was due to give evidence did not turn up. The judge called for them to come, and they sent a letter to the court—

Mr. Alan Hurst (in the Chair): Order. I draw the hon. Lady's attention to the law regarding sub judice matters. It may not be being breached, but I issue the warning at this stage.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: Thank you, Mr. Hurst.

The letter said something like, "I'm not coming to court today because all the statements I've given have been an absolute pack of lies." That situation is very commonplace. I do not want hon. Members to think that it is an exceptional case, because it is not—I could be talking about any one of the hundreds that are going on.

The judge discharged and exonerated the two men before him, saying that there was no case to answer. One man had lost everything, including family and friends. Of course, the police are law-abiding citizens who would never do anything remotely corrupt. They never have, have they? How does such a person recover his reputation? In fact, he has not been able to.

Social services have a right to instigate their own inquiries, and having been exonerated by the court, the men now find that they are the subject of an internal social services inquiry, which will last three weeks. At the end of it, they will be told either that they will be sacked from their jobs because people believe that they have committed a crime, or that they will not. They will never recover from the allegations, nor will their families and friends.

I am deeply concerned about the processes that the police are using. I do not think that they are actively engaged in some form of corruption, but like the rest of us, they feel a collective guilt for having done nothing for so many years. So many people who were locked into the care system reported sex abuse crimes and were never listened to. Now the police feel that they can do something, and that is what drives them on to continue to pursue people even after they have been told, "No, there are no allegations; I wish to say nothing."

It cannot be right that the only evidence used to convict a man is that obtained by the police from a witness in privacy, with no independent witnesses to the interview. I have been told that complainants can talk among themselves, but that would be difficult or impossible, because most of them are in prisons in different parts of the country. It is not necessary for complainants to talk among themselves, given that the same group of police officers are going from prison to prison writing statements on their behalf. That is what creates the consistency that allows such cases to come to court—they have been corroborated by volume.

Dr. John Pugh (Southport): It is a very stark claim to say that the only distinction between those who are convicted and those who are not convicted is luck. I want to be clear about what the hon. Lady is saying. Is she claiming that some or many people who are innocent are convicted, or is she making the lesser claim that some people who are innocent are nevertheless investigated and suffer as a result of the allegations? Those are two different positions, and I should like the hon. Lady to clarify which she is taking.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: I have had letters from people who maintain their innocence of the crime of which they have been accused. I do not know whether they are innocent. All I can say is that the processes employed by the police in the execution of their duty, which have been compounded by the Crown Prosecution Service, lead me to believe that opportunities exist for the judiciary and the criminal justice system to abuse those processes to deliver a result. Some people who are brought to court, as many people have been this summer, are subsequently acquitted of the crimes of which they were accused, but only through the largesse of the complainants on the witness stand, whereas others being prosecuted face complainants who are absolutely adamant.

I was told by one complainant that the compensation was the quickest £50,000 he had made in his life, and some of the people whom I have interviewed in prison have said something like, "I'll have nothing when I get out of here, but at least that person will still have his family"—if he ever gets out, that is. I am currently trying to get the Criminal Cases Review Commission to take 30 cases, all of which are similar to the ones that I have outlined today. Two of those cases will now be taken posthumously, because of the age of the people involved.

I have a set view on what must be done. All conversations that take place between the police and the victims must be video recorded. The cases are far too important for the evidence not to be video recorded. I have seen the Minister several times about that, and he keeps saying no—but I say absolutely yes. I have spoken to judges about it, and they say yes. They say that video recording makes matters much easier. I want to see all those interviews, and be able to tell my constituents that there was no way that the police could have persuaded, encouraged or induced individuals to make allegations, but that they spoke of their own free will. I cannot do that at the moment.

People accused have very little recourse to appeal, because they need new evidence, for example about the incompetence of their team. There will be no new evidence for cases in which people believe there was no evidence to convict them in the first place. Such people are in the most horrendous position. I cannot give precise figures, but I suspect that about 100 people are locked up in prison for crimes of the most horrendous nature, which they did not commit. One man was given a severe beating just a couple of weeks ago; he now has a fractured cheek, a fractured nose and fractured eye sockets. He will stay in prison, because such people are not sent down for short periods. Eighteen years, when a person is 70, is a life sentence. I want interviews video recorded and, for the reasons that I have identified, the processes must be made utterly transparent. I will then feel more confident about the outcome.

The police have done something to try to minimise the abuse of processes. They introduced guidelines earlier this year, on the day that the Association of Chief Police Officers was due to give evidence in the Select Committee inquiries into the cases—but that is five years too late for the vast majority of people. The guidelines include a list of dos and don'ts, including the fact that there must be no talk of compensation. That advice is all too late for most people, and is not enforceable.

I have asked questions about who considers the processes that the police use. The answer is nobody. I asked judges whether, when cases come to court, the processes that the police use are ever discussed. They say that that is not under their jurisdiction. I asked the Home Office who reviews the processes and checks to ensure that they are not open to abuse. Is it, perhaps, Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary? It is not. That provides some evidence to child protection teams, but it does not look at the processes, or question whether people are vulnerable and being abused when they are interviewed. Is it an abuse to interview someone 15 times to obtain a statement? I think it is. That must be reviewed.

We might see changes and have cases video recorded. Although such people may be considered the most disgusting people on the face of the earth, we might still think that it would be worth video recording conversations with them. That would be fine for those who are yet to be subjected to the process, but I am worried about the men who have already been through it—men such as those who went to court this summer. They could easily have gone down. The complainants could have said, "No, I'm not seeking compensation. I don't want anything out of it. I'm not getting anything out of it." I know dozens of cases of people who have gone down. It is a matter of luck, and I must try to find some way for them to get justice.

I have already referred to the man who was seeking compensation and admitted so in court, so was taken before a judge and charged with perjury. The police force which put that man in that position got off scot-free. When people complain to the police about the processes, they are told they cannot do that. While we cannot do that, again and again the police use processes that are open and subject to abuse—for a good cause, but with the wrong outcome.

The criminal justice system is being prejudiced by those practices. Thousands of people feel vulnerable and open to the possibility of being accused with no hope of proving their innocence, because the evidence against them was gained in dubious circumstances with no independent witnesses. That must change. I must be able to face my constituents and say that in this country we operate to the very best standards—but at the moment, I do not believe that we do.

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): I congratulate the hon. Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) on her initiative in raising the subject under discussion today and on achieving this Adjournment debate. My congratulations are reinforced by my recognition of her bravery in pursuing a subject that can do her no political good whatever, and may even puzzle some of her constituents. If anyone under investigation by the police has first call on public sympathy, it is unlikely to be those who sexually abuse others, particularly children and young persons in their care in children's homes, schools, young offender institutions and other places where there is expected to be a relationship of care, not abuse, between the adults in charge and the young persons living there.

The hon. Lady is concerned about something with which every hon. Member should be concerned: justice. There should be justice, certainly for the victims of abuse, but also, more controversially, for those who are accused by the police and victims of sexual abuse—foul crimes that naturally excite feelings of utter revulsion in right-thinking people. Justice is a concept that is widely spoken of, but from time to time we are all guilty of wanting to define it partially or tendentiously.

One of the hon. Lady's practical suggestions, which has been subject to much discussion among those who practise criminal law and sit as judges, and, I am sure, in the Home Office, is the video recording of the taking of statements in police stations. Many interviews are already voice recorded. I know about the resource implications for the Home Office, but I hope that following the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, when tape recording of statements was introduced, the Home Office, with the assistance of the Treasury, will do all that it can to introduce widespread video statement-taking in police stations, because that will lead to greater justice in all sorts of cases, not just those involving sex abuse.

During the past two years, Leicestershire constabulary has investigated a number of allegations of sexual and other abuse of young people in the care of Leicestershire county council's social services department. The investigation—not Operation Rose, but Operation Magnolia—has been made more difficult than it might have been under different circumstances because the allegations relate to events that are supposed to have taken place well over 10 years ago, and sometimes as long as 20 years ago.

In addition, following the reorganisation of local government in Leicestershire in the mid-1990s, the city of Leicester became a unitary authority with a social services department separate from that of the county council. Some employees stayed with the old county council department, while the new city council department took others on. Personnel and other records relating to individual employees of the two social services departments, and to the children and young people who had been in their care, have therefore been difficult to locate.

The allegations of criminal activity against members of staff appear to have been made by people who, although now adults in a chronological sense, are in some cases mentally unstable, possibly as a result of things done to them in their childhood. Allegations have been made by people who are abusers of their own children, by people who are in prison and by individuals who are not the most reliable witnesses of truth by virtue of their psychiatric or social problems, or because they have or may have an improper motive for making allegations against their former carers. Some of them may hope for early release from prison for helping the police with their inquiries. Some may hope for financial compensation for their mental or physical injuries, actual or imagined. Some may want revenge for the way in which they were rejected or neglected by their families or schools, or by society.

The picture is complicated, and I cannot attempt to unravel fact from fiction, not least because I am not privy to the nature or substance of the vast number of allegations that have been made and are being investigated. It is, of course, possible that some allegations made against the employees of the two social services departments are true and will lead to convictions in the Crown court. If they are true, I accept that it would be unjust for the perpetrators to go unpunished. It would not only be unjust but it would also destroy public confidence in the care home system and in the institutions that look after the mentally ill, the socially disturbed, the discarded, the abandoned and the young criminal. So far as I know—I may be wrong—no one has been charged with any offence arising out of Operation Magnolia, although two of my constituents were arrested in the summer of 2000, put in police cells, questioned and given the firm impression by the police that they were guilty of heinous crimes.

In one of those cases the crimes ranged from non-penetrative sexual misconduct with young boys to buggery. In the other case, that of a woman, the crimes ranged from criminal violence to unkind and unacceptable behaviour. Those allegations were not made clear to my constituents at the outset, but have been put to them serially and over time. They were not told who their alleged victims were and were not given sufficient detail to enable them to refute the allegations coherently. Furthermore, they were both summarily suspended by their employers, and it was only earlier this year that they were both, almost casually, informed by the police that they were not to be charged or prosecuted, and that they no longer needed to answer to police bail. There was, they were told, insufficient evidence for their cases to proceed.

Of course, by then the damage had been done. Those people had become pariahs. For more than 18 months they were unable to go to work, to explain to their friends and families why they were not going to work, to socialise and to go about their daily lives as they had in the past. They were prisoners in their own homes, terrified that the day would soon come when they would again be summoned by the police to be interviewed, and on that occasion charged and imprisoned on remand while the investigations against them were slowly pursued. One of them became so traumatised by the experience that he became suicidal and is still under the care of a psychiatrist. The other had to receive professional counselling for the stress she has endured. Both of them have had their faith in British justice and in the police undermined if not totally destroyed. Both are incapable of offering their employers, the social services department, and their line managers the respect that they once had for the institution and for the people managing it.

My constituents feel that they have been trashed on the uncorroborated say-so of some damaged and ill-motivated people whose stories were accepted as gospel by their employers and by the police, and that their professional lives, which they had dedicated to the care of the young and the vulnerable, have been ruined. One of my constituents is in his mid-40s and sees before him a blank future without the work, the professional satisfaction and the esteem that he had expected would take him through to retirement at 60 or 65. My other constituent, a lady in her 50s, is now back at work but cannot work in the way and with the people with whom she had worked until 2000. My two constituents are like priests who have lost their faith. They are ruined people contemplating ruined lives and a future without hope. Not surprisingly, both are considering legal action against their employers for the way in which they were treated.

Those constituents provide me with stark and immediate examples of the problem highlighted by the hon. Member for Crosby. As she said, the massive growth in police trawling operations has become a danger in itself: it is different from the danger of child abuse but every bit as corrosive to our justice system as child abuse is to the public care system. Even on the limited information that I have concerning my two constituents, it is clear to me that the presumption of innocence that should have been made in their favour—both publicly as a matter of course until conviction and privately within the police and the social services department employing them—at least until evidence of probative value became available to warrant precise charges that would stand the scrutiny of the Crown Prosecution Service and independent prosecuting counsel, never existed. It was not just under threat; it never surfaced at all.

The police in the two cases appear to have been desperate to find any information with which to sustain the theory that they had convinced themselves was the right one. They set about trawling through the memories, real or reconstructed, of former residents of children's homes in Leicestershire and believed without question or corroboration the tales that they were told.

I have been very critical today of the conduct of Operation Magnolia, at least in so far as it has touched the lives of my two constituents. I have deliberately not named them. Enough people know their names and what they have been through without making their lives worse through further identification. Equally, I have not identified the officers on Operation Magnolia, although there may be some who hear or will come to hear what I say who will be able to identify them. I want to make it clear that my purpose in taking part in this debate is not to vilify the officers on Operation Magnolia—none of them are actuated by malice—although I appreciate that they may see things somewhat differently. My purpose is to try to ensure that things are done better in future. I fully appreciate that the very small team that has been operating Magnolia is under-resourced and in desperate need of co-operation from other care agencies and police authorities, and that they are working within tremendous limitations.

We need to understand why the police investigation in Leicestershire has gone as it has and why the police officers concerned in it were—properly so—desperate to get to the heart of the crimes that they believed had been revealed to them. The key to the puzzle is one word: Beck. Frank Beck was a senior employee of Leicestershire social services. He worked for the department from 1973 to 1986 as the officer in charge of several children's homes, some in my constituency and some elsewhere in the city of Leicester and the county of Leicestershire. He later worked for the London borough of Brent, and Hertfordshire county council. He was arrested in 1990 on numerous charges of gross sexual and other abuse of children in his care while working in Leicestershire. He was tried and convicted, and received five life sentences from Mr Justice Jowitt in 1991. He died in prison in May 1994.

There is no better account of the terrible case of Frank Beck than that written by Mark D'Arcy and Paul Gosling in their book, "Abuse of Trust: Frank Beck and the Leicestershire Children's Homes Scandal", published in 1998. Anyone who is interested in the subject of this debate and the issues underlying it should read it.

The Beck case was not simply another case of a sexual predator operating undetected within an otherwise healthy competent institution. Leicestershire's child care services were subverted to such an extent that Beck and his followers were able sexually to abuse young children at will. This was possible partly because of Beck's remarkable personal qualities but also because of the weakness of the managers—and, to a lesser extent, the politicians—who were supposed to be in charge of him and his co-abusers.

Beck was a dominating and manipulative man, but had he been working within a stronger, better managed organisation or in an environment where children's complaints were taken more seriously, he would have been stopped much earlier. As it is, he is now known as arguably the worst child abuser in British criminal history, with a suspected toll of 200 children abused by him. He employed a potent combination of affection, shame, humiliation and domination, which mentally paralysed many of the children in his care and even some of the young men who worked at the homes.

Beck's is a story that has scarred the collective memory of the county and city social services departments, the Leicestershire constabulary and the local political establishment. There has been a criminal trial, and an inquiry chaired by Mr Andrew Kirkwood QC, which revealed massive shortcomings in the management of the county's social services department and the conduct of several key managers. I am happy to say that all that is in the past.

[Mr. Edward Garnier]

According to Mr Allan Levy QC, the leading child law silk who chaired the pin-down case inquiry in Staffordshire, the Beck case brought together all the main elements of other child abuse cases: sex abuse, excessive physical restraint, a punishment regime that contained elements of torture, denial of civil liberties for children in care and epic managerial incompetence. All that is true, and will have been in the minds of the social services department managers and of the police dealing with Operation Magnolia.

Never again, they must have thought, will this county and this city be caught out by a child abuse scandal. I suggest that, for the best of reasons—the desire to protect children in care, and to demonstrate that Leicester had learned from the Beck case—normally reasonable men and women lost sight of an essential in their pursuit of a dragon, and cast aside the proper professional caution and need for scrutiny that ought to have governed the conduct of Operation Magnolia, certainly in the case of my two constituents, if not in every case.

I will say no more about the case, or its handling by the authorities in Leicester, save to say that two people have probably been damaged irreparably by their experiences since their arrest in 2000. Had there been a calmer, more considered assessment of the allegations against them made at the time that they were received, their lives would not have been so cruelly changed. I do not say that in cases of child abuse there can never be a prosecution or an investigation in the absence of corroboration, for that could lead to huge difficulties and evil people getting away scot-free, but in this case, common sense and justice lost sight of each other in the rush to stop a Beck mark 2. Two of my constituents were presumed to be guilty when they had a right to due process and the right to expect that the allegations against them would be speedily, although thoroughly, examined.

There are lessons to be learned from Beck, but as a result of what I now know about the cases of my two constituents, I am left to wonder if we have so far learned the right ones.

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry): I, too, express my thanks to the hon. Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) for initiating the debate with considerable passion, and for all the research that she has done during her leadership of the all-party group on abuse investigations, of which I am an officer.

I am anxious that others who wish to contribute may do so. Therefore, I do not wish to rehearse the powerful case made by the hon. Lady, to which my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) has added. I would say simply that, as far as I am concerned, there is no underlying agenda. I wish to reinforce, or recover, my general respect for the criminal justice system, and the conduct of the police in undertaking inquiries.

My own interest springs simply from the experience of two constituents, both of whom were accused of practices alleged to have taken place when they had care of children in south Wales in the 1970s. In the case of one constituent, the charges were dropped. That person was not convicted, but the agreement was that one charge should be allowed to stay on the file. In the second case, the constituent was convicted and is in prison. The hon. Member for Crosby has rightly said that it is not the purpose of the all-party group, or of today's debate, to go into individual cases, and I pass no judgment, having not studied the evidence fully in any case. The individuals concerned and their families, in the examples of the released and the convicted constituents, declare their continuing innocence.

No less significantly, a local solicitor who is well known to me and highly respected, and interestingly, who does not normally practise in the defence of sex offender cases, has come to a case involving somebody whose family matters he has perhaps been dealing with. Suddenly, he became mixed-up in inquiries that they both regarded as ridiculous and inappropriate. That solicitor communicated to the hon. Member for Crosby considerable doubts as to the conduct of the case, in which the gentleman was convicted.

I emphasise again to the House that I hope that no one present holds a brief for paedophilia, or would not wish persons to be convicted of sex offences that they have committed. However, the process gives rise to concern. I am worried about the prevailing climate of a witch hunt, because it is the nature of witch hunts, from Salem onwards, to depress people's critical judgment. Such hunts allow conclusions to be reached that are prejudicial and that have, in many cases, been compounded by the great age of some allegations. I have referred to two cases known to me in the 1970s. It is the nature of those cases that there might be no forensic evidence, so they rely on individual testimony.

The hon. Member for Crosby and my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough have mentioned their concern about the conditions under which that testimony may have been obtained and the inducements, whether in cash or in kind, that may be available to those who make those claims. Of course, that does not mean that evidence should not be taken seriously and dealt with by a court, but it must be handled very carefully and the circumstances in which it has been obtained are relevant to that.

To date, the incidence of cases reported is uneven across the country. The hon. Member for Crosby comes to the subject having considered a complete cluster in Merseyside. It seems extremely implausible that such activity, if it is on anything like the scale suggested by those inquiries, is not replicated across the country. Inquiries by other police forces may even the score, but the number of cases seems disturbingly different. Frankly, cases are also likely to cost some local authorities, whose employees are involved in such allegations, a fortune in compensation payments, as they have a general duty.

I am not a lawyer, as will, I think, become apparent, but I am concerned by the creeping extension of similar fact evidence. During the last century, we went a lot further than the famous brides in the bath case, which involved three strikingly similar successive examples of brides dying in the bath. From what I have seen, that extension is beginning to become prejudicial, for reasons that the hon. Member for Crosby mentioned.

I shall make a related point that does not bear on the strength of the convictions of those concerned. There are cases, which have been brought to the attention of our group, involving people convicted of sex offences who continue to deny their guilt. Many such convicted prisoners are not able to access large parts of the sex offender programme because of that, so they are likely to lose their opportunity of parole. Indeed, their sentences are increased as a result. There should be ways to handle that so as not to make it impossible for them at least to participate in activities that could be beneficial to them, and to be released at the appropriate time, given their general conduct.

From what I have seen of sex offender courses—I visited Rye Hill prison in my constituency only last week—there is a great deal of merit in them, but national moves are needed to ensure that such training programmes are available to all convicted prisoners on an equitable basis and that their outcomes are improved. There is work for the Home Office and the Prison Service to do on that subject.

May I draw on my experience of receiving such submissions when I was a Minister, although I was not at the Home Office? If I were confronted by anything like the concern uncovered by the hon. Member for Crosby and the all-party group, which has been expressed this morning, I would want to reflect on the submissions seriously, especially the safety of convictions.

We know that the case that we have been discussing is difficult, because of the widespread and perhaps proper national anger about the abuse of children. However, even if it is impossible to re-open cases or to establish separate machinery for so doing, I hope that Ministers are prepared to improve the central database that handles what has been going on and what the research of the hon. Member for Crosby has been instrumental in drawing out. The Home Office's approach to managing and monitoring the process has, frankly, got out of hand.

The matter is serious. Justice works both ways—for the victims of criminal activity and those accused of carrying it out. In this case, changes and a fairer process are urgently needed in the interests of justice.

Dr. John Pugh (Southport): I begin by paying tribute to the hon. Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) for securing the debate and for leading on a subject that is difficult for any politician to deal with and which will secure her no cheap votes anywhere. I do not say that the hon. Lady is totally averse to seeking cheap votes on occasion, but the contrary is true in this case.

I became aware of the problem when an individual who was under investigation came to my surgery and whose primary concern was the slowness of determination. He was convinced that he was innocent and that the process of deciding that would take a long time. I was a little uneasy. I did not know the circumstances and, to some extent, I went through the formalities, making inquiries in the appropriate places. I was somewhat discountenanced to find that more and still more people subsequently came to me with similar complaints and claims of innocence. They had been caught in some trawl. I began to take the issue more seriously in terms of its general principles.

Child abuse is a terrible, terrible crime—it destroys childhoods—but because it is such a terrible crime, to be wrongly accused of it is a terrible event for an individual. It ruins lives, just as the lives of the abused children are ruined.

In our society, there is immense concern, even panic, on the issue. The hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) mentioned Salem, witchcraft and the emotions that run high when there is a moral panic throughout society. Of course, there is an important difference: witchcraft did no real harm, but child abuse does considerable harm and must be taken absolutely seriously by everyone in society. However, there is a parallel danger: the double abuse of innocent people wrongly accused and innocent people abused. That will happen whenever common sense, fairness and the ordinary rules of evidence are ignored in circumstances in which investigators have too much pressure put on them to get an immediate conviction or when they become blind to counter considerations. A recent case in Newcastle, which is not identical to the one we have been discussing, shows what can go wrong. The lives of young professionals were pole-axed by the witch-finder mentality of a particular doctor and the slackness of a social services department.

I have no sympathy whatever, in any circumstances, with paedophiles such as those who do not seek help and prefer to normalise their perversion, desensitising themselves from the vulnerability of children. Precisely because I have no sympathy with paedophilia and find it horrendous, I do not want people to be accused without good evidence, which is the point on which the debate hinges.

Good evidence is not usually obtained when there is the prospect of compensation or any encouragement of malice or revenge. It is not obtained when we ignore circumstance, plausibility or contrary indicators. I may part company with some hon. Members in the Room on this point, but I am convinced that all those issues will come out in court during the judicial process.

I may be a little innocent or a little naïve, but if that were not the case, I have sufficient faith in British justice to think that if lawyers are up to their task and if judges are what they pretend to be, that will ensure that considerations such as the one to which the hon. Member for Crosby drew our attention will be properly aired in court. However, that is different from saying that such considerations are foremost in people's minds during investigation. There is evidence that that is not always the case. In certain areas, the ratio of suspects to prosecutions, for example, is a cause for concern. Leicestershire was cited as an example. We must ask ourselves whether the process is ideal when there is a large number of suspects, but a very small number of successful prosecutions.

A serious investigation that does not lead to a conclusion involves certain deeply distressing elements. As the hon. Member for Crosby pointed out, it can involve a police raid, often early in the morning, on the home of the person suspected. It will almost certainly result in suspension from work, gossip, stigma and shame for the individual, but may not result in a conviction and may not mean guilt. I accept that the two are different.

[Dr. John Pugh]

The hon. Member for Crosby alluded to the possibility that people who are not convicted may be guilty, but acting without proper evidence or without proper conduct and examination of that evidence, and not using the rules that would apply in ordinary investigations, causes problems. There is intense suffering for the innocent person, which has been drawn out in many cases, especially in Merseyside. People who are acquitted have been cleared, but none the less they have remained under suspicion for long periods. A likely corollary of that problem is that if we conduct investigations in such a way and do not reflect on how we conduct them, we shall create a general social anxiety about all relationships with children. Society is not noticeably improved if adults fear to talk to children, or if every contact is seen as some sort of sexual advance.

Mr. Nigel Beard (in the Chair): Order. May I remind the hon. Gentleman that he must conclude shortly?

Dr. Pugh: I am coming to my conclusion now.

I cannot spot the child molester, and I have been surprised and shocked by people who turned out to be one. However, I do not think that we shall get back to a more wholesome world by encouraging false accusations, suspicions or malicious claims if the rules and procedures for investigating child abuse are different from those used in other serious crime investigations conducted by the police.

Mr. Dominic Grieve (Beaconsfield): The hon. Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) has taken a valuable and courageous step in bringing the matter before the House. No one who listened to her arguments, or who heard the emotion in her voice, which is important in such matters, can fail to be moved by her concern that the conviction of a certain category of offender in sex abuse cases is turning into a lottery. The matter should be of grave concern to the House, because if that is happening, the quality of justice that we tend to take for granted in this country is being undermined. She raises a serious issue.

Justice is human and therefore fallible. This country has a system of justice that we hope operates well, perhaps better than those in other countries, but that does not mean that there cannot be miscarriages of justice. That is one reason why, historically, we have tended to weight the scales of justice in favour of the accused. We require the conviction of the accused only if a jury is satisfied and sure. Through our common law system, we have introduced a series of extra safeguards, designed by judicial interference, to protect the accused. However, we must face up to the painful but inevitable fact that the more safeguards there are in place, the more likely it is that, in addition to acquitting the innocent, on occasion the guilty may be acquitted.

That is one of the difficult balances to be struck, and I dare say that a reason for it is the fact that there were usually only two options available in the criminal justice system in England and Wales in the early 19th century: the accused was either acquitted or, for a serious offence, hanged. The fact that we have moved away from such a system should not make us forget that the lives of those who fall victim to the criminal justice system, and who are innocent but convicted, as well as the lives of their immediate families, are ruined. As the hon. Member for Crosby, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) and my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) so eloquently described, that ruin is something from which they may never recover.

Over the past 20 years, the trend has been all one way. It is significant that the title of this debate refers to sex abuse cases and corroboration. Prompted by legislation from a Conservative Government—this is why I say that the matter is not party political—and in response to public concern, the House got rid of certain safeguards. For example, in 1988, we got rid of the safeguard that no one should be convicted on the uncorroborated statement of a child. In 1994, we got rid of the requirement for corroboration in sex cases, as well as in respect of accomplices. That meant not that someone could not be convicted, but that a judge had specifically to warn a jury in such cases. It is worth asking why that was done. I think the reason was societal pressure arguing that guilty people were being acquitted as a result of the safeguards used by lawyers in the criminal justice system—it was all a bit of a game and that it would be better if evidence were put before juries so that they could make up their minds. That raises important issues.

We cannot get away from the fact that although sex abuse cases constitute only 1 to 2 per cent. of convictions on indictment—it has rightly been said that an atmosphere of Salem witchcraft can so easily prevail in such cases—they constitute about 30 per cent. of referrals to the Criminal Cases Review Commission, as a result of which there is growing disquiet about whether justice is being done.

We are shortly to embark on a criminal justice review—a massive piece of legislation—during which, once again, we shall be subject to exactly the same pressures, but in a widening field. For example, there will be pressure to allow previous convictions to be disclosed to juries and to allow much more hearsay evidence to be admitted in court. Such evidence is not from the person directly concerned with the case, but what they heard from someone else. Such provisions are all designed for the same laudable aim of trying to ensure that the guilty are convicted.

As the Home Secretary has said, we want the truth, but one problem that we face is that the truth is often elusive. Our justice system has, historically, tended to shy away from it and to say, "Let's concern ourselves not with the truth, but with whether we can be sure that somebody is guilty of an offence." The hon. Member for Crosby has rightly highlighted the fact that, in our concern to ensure the conviction of the guilty and their punishment for serious and horrible offences that right-thinking people believe should be investigated and punished, we are in danger of doing our society a grave disservice. We are making it much easier for the innocent to be convicted, both by the processes that we have set up and by the background pressure from the public to see something happening to prevent things that they regard as particularly horrible. That is an enormous challenge not only for the Government, but for the House.

We have to be the protectors of the innocent and we must always have regard to the consequences of legislative change. The hon. Member for Crosby has been very specific, so I hope that she will forgive me if I widen the scope of the discussion, because unless we examine the background, we shall not see the way forward. She said that it would be desirable for the taking of witness statements to be video recorded, but that poses problems. It would be desirable, but logistically, in view of the sort of areas in which it would take place, it would place great burdens on the police.

The process of taking witness statements, as I know from personal experience, can be extremely complicated and rather difficult. In the time we have, it would not be right to go into the detail. Suffice it to say that I realised as I gave a statement to the police about a burglary at my home that they were, for the perfectly legitimate reason of trying to protect my identity, distorting what I was saying while recording my statement. As I am a lawyer and I was not too concerned about my identity being disclosed, I did not want to have anything to do with that.

I mention the incident because it illustrates the sort of problem that can easily give rise to the desperately worrying situation that the hon. Member for Crosby highlighted. She has raised legitimate issues that are not popular at the moment; members of the public are not excited about them. However, they are excited by newspaper headlines over many pages that encourage them to believe that terrible situations exist that must be remedied, and the Government do their best to respond.

Consider the long-term trend in the House in terms of criminal justice legislation. We are subtly and consistently moving the goalposts and we are likely to do so again over the next 12 months, for reasons that I fully understand. However, in our desire to secure those convictions that satisfy the public, are we losing the quality of justice? That is the important issue that the hon. Member for Crosby has raised, and I am grateful to her for her courage in doing so. I hope that the Minister responds to her specific statements and that, in the coming year when we consider the many other criminal justice issues that so closely relate to these matters, he carefully bears in mind what she has said.

Mrs. Annette L. Brooke (Mid-Dorset and North Poole): I shall be brief. We all want to hear the Minister, so I shall concentrate on just two or three points. I add my congratulations to the hon. Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas). We have had a moving experience this morning, and many of us will think about it for a long time.

Child protection is so important, and I came to the debate thinking of three things: a report out this week says that many improvements are needed, that agencies should work together and that there should be better guidelines for the police. Then there is the issue of the innocent who are wrongly convicted. I have a statement from a professional in the field, which fills me with horror, as "it may be that innocent people are being convicted but we ought to be more worried about the guilty who might get away".

When we hear such statements, we must be concerned about the actions of people working in the field.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Dr. Pugh) said, reputations can be irreparably damaged. The hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) said that the picture is complicated. As we progress, I think that we shall find that that is a great understatement, because the issue is so complex. The Home Affairs Committee is carrying out a full investigation, and I urge the Minister to act on its recommendations. A vast amount of evidence was submitted to it, which will clearly be important.

We are talking about the present, and we need to take a holistic approach to getting child protection right and to how matters are investigated. There must be a well-publicised framework that everyone in the field accepts. In addition to carers, we should briefly mention teachers, many of whom have had their careers irreparably damaged, although very few convictions have been made. Some responsibility must rest with those who make accusations. They must be made aware of the seriousness of their claims, and we should perhaps make clear what happens when false accusations are made. It is not always easy to proceed with a private court case to clear one's name.

We have had an important debate, but we need to hear from the Minister, so I close on that point.

The Minister for Policing, Crime Reduction and Community Safety (Mr. John Denham): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) on obtaining the debate. I also congratulate the other members of the all-party group who have contributed to this serious discussion. As the hon. Member for Mid-Dorset and North Poole (Mrs. Brooke) said, the Home Affairs Committee has been considering the issue, and the Government will want to examine its conclusions carefully. I must say, however, that the widespread use of expressions such as "witch hunt" does this complex and important issue no justice. I would not like to give credence to the idea that it is being dealt with in the atmosphere of a witch hunt.

Should we attempt to investigate allegations of sex abuse that took place some time ago? It is easy to suggest that events of 10 or 20 years ago are in the distant past, but we should remember that someone who was in his early 20s when he abused children 20 years ago is in his early 40s today. I doubt whether most members of the public and, indeed, most Members of the House would say, "That's too long ago. Let's forget about it."

We are discussing allegations of appalling crimes, which have a traumatic impact on victims. That trauma can be made worse for those who finally talk about it if they have the fact of their abuse denied. I doubt whether the House would accept that events should not be investigated because they took place some time ago. It is important that we ensure that complaints of serious crimes are followed up and that victims who show bravery in coming forward are treated justly and with compassion. The police must be able fully to follow up complaints and to pursue all lines of inquiry, whether they point to or away from the suspect.

We have had two different debates, and I want to distinguish between them. My hon. Friend the Member for Crosby used a line of argument that invites us to believe that there has been a widespread and massive miscarriage of justice, involving not only police inquiries, but the Crown Prosecution Service and the courts. The hon. Member for Southport (Dr. Pugh) and the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) distinguished that position from a narrower concern about the possible consequences of a police investigation for the lives of people who are innocent, and the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) was probably taking a similar position. That is an important distinction, and I want to deal with both sides of it.

I am grateful to the hon. Member for Daventry for advising me on the basis of his considerable experience as a Minister. I can assure him that I take the issues raised by the all-party group, and by my hon. Friend the Member for Crosby in particular, very seriously. I have returned to them on several occasions, and some changes have been made as a result. Let me make it clear, however, that, as a Minister, I can act and can advise the rest of the Government to act only on the basis of facts that can be properly examined.

Many months ago, representatives of the all-party group referred to cases in which individuals were induced to give evidence by the offer of compensation. I did what I thought was the right thing for a Minister to do and asked for instances, names and cases that could be followed up. Many months later, despite a reminder, I have not been provided with an instance of a single case.

I am in a difficult position. Allegations have been made in the debate that that practice is widespread and that certain individuals have said X, but I have not been able to find an individual case as yet. We have heard allegations about the conduct of interviews.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Denham: May I finish my point? Terence Grange, the chief constable who speaks for the Association of Chief Police Officers on the matter, has sought details of cases in which abuse of investigations could be followed up. They have not been forthcoming. It is difficult to introduce a change of Government or police policy when there are no cases to investigate. I give way to my hon. Friend, but I want to make further points on the subject.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: I thank my right hon. Friend for letting me intervene. I know that he receives thousands of letters from families of people accused of the crimes that we are discussing, and from the people themselves. He is aware that many of those cases are on their way to the Court of Appeal, and he will have been advised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and other parts of the criminal justice system that they have received a considerable correspondence on specific cases that are being conducted throughout the country.

Mr. Denham: It is the case, however, that the all-party group has not been able to identify cases for me or, despite the offers, for the chief constable who speaks on the subject for ACPO. We must look to other sources of evidence, therefore.

On the allegation involving compensation and whether people have been induced to give evidence, we may turn to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority, which reports that there has been no significant increase in applications for compensation for historical abuse, so there is another problem.

We can study the cases brought before the Court of Appeal, as a widespread miscarriage of justice on the scale alleged could reasonably be expected to show up in significant cases. I am not suggesting that a large number of cases would be involved, but some would have been thrown out due to the quality of evidence or because the investigative process was shown to be flawed. At the moment at least, evidence of such a miscarriage is not, in my judgment, forthcoming from the Court of Appeal.

The hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Grieve) referred to the Criminal Cases Review Commission. The commission's chairman has said that although the number of cases reviewed involving sexual offences is relatively high, the number involving historical abuse is negligible. The hon. Gentleman was making a point about the conduct of sexual abuse cases, but significant numbers of historical abuse cases do not appear to be reaching the CCRC.

I am not at all complacent about these matters, and no Minister in my position could lightly dismiss allegations of a widespread miscarriage of justice. However, I have spent some time in the past year studying the indicators and signs that might make one believe that such an extensive miscarriage of justice has taken place. At this point, I remain unconvinced that such a miscarriage has occurred. Of course, we must continue to consider cases that are raised and any evidence that is brought to light.

I turn to a different point, which was raised by the hon. and learned Member for Harborough and the hon. Members for Daventry and for Southport—one on which we have made progress this year. Innocent people may be caught up in such investigations, just as they may be caught up in any other sort of investigation. The damage done to an individual faced with such allegations may be marked, and the hon. and learned Gentleman made that case extremely well. Of course, justice is not served by the distraction of fraudulent or malicious claims. Indeed, the conviction of an innocent person will not help survivors of sexual abuse. We must remain vigilant for clear evidence of possible problems.

Over the past year, the Government have recognised that investigations need to take account of the damage that can be caused to the accused, who may be innocent. We made sure that that point was explicitly made in the guidance that was produced following a recommendation in the Waterhouse inquiry report and issued by the Government to all agencies involved in investigating complex child abuse cases. It builds on the guidance in "Working Together to Safeguard Children".

The issue was not explicitly addressed in previous guidance to those handling such cases, but now it has been. In parallel with that guidance, ACPO has developed and published an operational handbook for senior investigating officers based on the experiences of practitioners who have been involved in that type of police investigation. Again, the handbook directly addresses the need to take into account the position of those accused of that type of crime, who may be innocent.

Both sets of guidance have been developed from evaluated good practice. The awfully entitled but quite important inter-agency strategic management group, which consists of senior staff from the police, social services, health and local authorities, has set the policy and the terms of reference, and has created the protocols for that type of inter-agency working. One change from the position of a year or so ago is that we have two sets of guidance that are intended to provide a strategic policy framework and good practice guidelines within which the police, together with other agencies, should operate to deal fully, thoroughly and fairly with an initial complaint and the alleged perpetrators.

I hope that hon. Members who have raised concerns today about the position of the innocent accused feel that we have responded to some of them. It is also worth pointing out that, despite the lack of substantiated cases of abuse of the compensation mechanism, the guidance also puts beyond doubt how compensation issues should or should not be addressed in the interview process.

My hon. Friend the Member for Crosby, the hon. and learned Member for Harborough and the hon. Member for Beaconsfield all raised the question of recording interviews and statements. The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 allows for the video recording of interviews in police stations. Video recording is being piloted in five police force areas, and over the summer we made additional funds, which will enable an extension of those experiments, available for forces to bid for, but it will be some time before all police stations are covered. That, however, is different from recording interviews that take place outside police stations, which would cover millions of conversations that occur between the police and the public in the investigation of many different types of crime.

We have had to consider the issue, on which we are not yet persuaded, of whether an exception should be made on recording interviews, no matter where they take place, in historical sex abuse cases while not applying the same criteria to all other types of police investigation. Aside from the question of resources, I am not convinced that the case has been made for distinguishing between historical sex abuse investigations and other investigations that the police have to undertake.

The debate is enormously important. We have all remarked that the Home Affairs Committee will reach its own conclusions, which the Government are bound properly to consider at the appropriate time. I am grateful for the opportunity to respond to the debate, and to give our commitment to ensuring that we can protect children and my commitment to ensuring that the justice system works properly.

Army Ranges (Essex)

12.30 pm

Sir Teddy Taylor (Rochford and Southend, East): On a point of order, Mr. Beard. I should appreciate your guidance on whether it is in accordance with the customs and practices of the House of Commons for the hon. Member for North Thanet (Mr. Gale) to raise a debate on the testing and demolition of ordnance at Shoeburyness and on Foulness island, both of which are entirely in my constituency, without having notified me in any way. I wrote to him on 14 October to express my concern about that.

In a similar situation on 27 March 1995, Madam Speaker gave clear and specific guidance—first, that she deprecated any such practice and, secondly, that it was contrary to the customs and practice of the House of Commons. In view of the importance of the ranges to my constituency and to the nation's security, Mr. Beard, I would appreciate your views.

Mr. Nigel Beard (in the Chair): I thank the hon. Gentleman for giving me notice of his point of order. Madam Speaker's ruling on 27 March 1995 applies to such circumstances. It states:

> "The hon. Gentleman is quite correct. When an hon. Member wishes to raise, especially in an Adjournment debate, the question of some development or project that concerns another Member's constituency, not only is it a matter of courtesy to let the other hon. Member know but it is a matter of good custom and practice. I deprecate the fact that the right hon. Member . . . has not been informed that that Adjournment debate is to take place".—[Official Report, 27 March 1995; Vol. 257, c. 696.]

I endorse those sentiments, but they refer to good custom and practice and do not invalidate the debate.

Mr. Roger Gale (North Thanet): I am grateful for this opportunity to raise a matter of considerable concern to my constituents and those of other hon. Members. I had not intended to comment on the background to the debate, Mr. Beard, but in the light of your comments I should make it absolutely plain for the record. I and several other Members of Parliament, properly representing their constituents, have expressed concerns over these issues for a long time, and a number of us have sought to secure an hour and half's debate in this Chamber. At the end of the last Session, frustrated at having failed to secure a longer debate, I applied for a half-hour debate, and learned only last Friday that I had been successful. I understand—although I have not had the opportunity to check—that my office notified not only the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor), but all the other Members concerned.

Sir Teddy Taylor: Absolute rubbish. Totally untrue.

Mr. Gale: My understanding is that my office notified not only the hon. Gentleman but all the other Members, in writing, that the debate was to take place. I told the hon. Gentleman—and he accepted it before he raised his point of order with you, Mr. Beard—that I would check that. Only this morning, I received his letter dated 14 October. I replied immediately, and that reply is on the board. In my letter, I said that I understood that he had been notified and that if he had not been I offered my apology. Because he requested time to intervene in the debate, I pointed out to him that several colleagues who knew that it was taking place, having been clearly notified, had expressed a wish to intervene. I have said that I am perfectly happy for any hon. Member with a constituency interest in the subject to intervene in so far as time permits. Moreover, I spoke to the Minister when he entered the Chamber this morning—the first opportunity that I had had—to verify with him that as far as I was concerned, and as long as it was in order with you, Mr. Beard, it would be in order for the hon. Gentleman to speak briefly when I had concluded my remarks. I cannot be fairer than that, and I am sorry that we have wasted three minutes on the matter.

I am pleased to have this opportunity to raise an issue that is of considerable concern to many of my constituents living along the north-east Kent coast between Herne Bay and North Foreland—that is, the testing of ordnance and demolition of time-expired munitions on behalf of the Ministry of Defence at Shoeburyness and Foulness island and on Maplin sands in the Thames estuary—which is the source of most of the problem, and which I believe is not technically in any Member of Parliament's constituency.

I am aware that this is a subject of interest for my hon. Friends the Members for North Essex (Mr. Jenkin), for Maldon and East Chelmsford (Mr. Whittingdale) and for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier), and that they have made representations on behalf of their constituents. Constituents represented by the hon. Member for Sittingbourne and Sheppey (Mr. Wyatt) have also expressed concerns, as have several local authorities, including Tendring, Colchester, Maldon, Thanet and Canterbury district and city councils. Tendring and Canterbury have passed formal resolutions to "seek relief for coastal residents and their properties from the noise and vibrations caused by the MoD use of their establishment at Shoeburyness".

They call for

"the immediate cessation of destructive explosions at this establishment and the examination by the MoD, as a matter of urgency, of an alternative site in a remote area of the country where the test and evaluation functions of the MoD can be undertaken without the severe disturbance currently imposed upon the population bordering the Thames Estuary".

Those are their words, not mine. The parish councils of Herne in Kent and St. Osyth in Essex have expressed similar sentiments.

Shoeburyness is in the constituency of the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East, and it is only right for me to say immediately that he has not endorsed the views that I shall express. I wrote those words before this morning's intervention, and I stand by them. I mean him no discourtesy in saying that it is the constituencies that bear the force of the shock waves emanating from Shoeburyness, rather than the site from which they are generated, that give rise to this brief debate. It is a peculiar fact that it is the areas to either side of the Thames estuary, along which the sound waves and shock waves rebound and reverberate, that suffer now, and have for many years.

The Ministry of Defence owns the site at Shoeburyness and QinetiQ—formerly the Defence Evaluation and Research Establishment—now operates part of it under licence. As the Minister said in a response to my constituent Mr. Woollett of Beltinge, Herne Bay, in a letter of 21 August, Shoeburyness has been operating for about 150 years. The Minister will forgive me, however, if I say that his assertion in the same letter, referring to a lack of was less accurate. I could take up the whole of my remaining time with a litany of reported cases of cracked walls, fallen ceilings, rattling windows, shattered conservatories, broken ornaments and eventual compensation paid to claimants against the MOD—presumably not for no good reason.

It is really since the late 1980s that the size of ordnance tested and volume of munitions disposed of on the mud flats of Foulness island have escalated to the point at which they have become intolerable for residents along the Thames estuary.

Mr. Julian Brazier (Canterbury): In endorsing the time scale that my hon. Friend has just mentioned, I suggest that it is surely no accident that that was precisely the time at which the disposal of old explosives was moved to the site. While many of us recognise the vital testing work done at the site, we nevertheless ask why the destruction of old explosives cannot be carried out somewhere else.

Mr. Gale: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. I shall come to that point in due course.

I have before me a letter written by my noble Friend the Earl of Arran, dated 19 March 1990, in response to letters sent by my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford and Southend, East on 15 January 1989, 9 January 1990 and 16 January 1990. Those letters referred to "concern expressed by constituents at the level of noise emanating from the Yantlet (on the Isle of Grain) and Shoeburyness ranges".

Lord Arran wrote:

"It seems likely that Shoeburyness was the originator in this case".

He added:

"The MOD and Service personnel using the ranges are well aware of the sensitivity of their situation and I am satisfied that they are doing all that they reasonably can to minimize the effect of their activities".

My representations on behalf of my constituents living in Herne Bay, Birchington, Westgate on Sea and Margate have led me to visit Shoeburyness on several occasions, once as a Parliamentary Private Secretary in the MOD in the company of the Minister's predecessor, the noble Lord, Viscount Cranborne, and on other occasions with parties of constituents. I have been out on the mud flats to watch controlled explosions, I have been given assurances of new incinerators that would smoke out and burn explosives, obviating the need for detonation and I have seen trials using water beds to deaden the sound of shock waves—all to no practical avail.

In 1995, my parliamentary colleague Roger Freeman, now Lord Freeman, then the Minister for Defence Procurement, wrote to me stating that

"since the particular difficulties of the first few months of 1994 the establishment has taken a number of steps to reduce the effects of its activities . . . for example large quantities of sand are used to tamp detonations. This has proved particularly useful in reducing noise and vibration associated with the disposal of unsafe or unwanted munitions".

However, with his customary honesty he then let the cat out of the bag, saying:

"There is no doubt that there has been an increase in activity at Shoeburyness which has been caused by an increase in the demilitarisation work as we can no longer dump ammunition at sea and as a result of transferring trials work to Shoeburyness which was formerly carried out at the Inchterf Range near Glasgow."

In all my dealings with Shoeburyness, Sir John Chisholm, chief executive of DERA and subsequently of QinetiQ, his staff at Shoeburyness—in particular, Peter Honey and John Denyer—and most Ministers, including the present one, have been the soul of courtesy.

However, the problem has become worse and worse. In January 2000, the Herne Bay Times reported:

"Windows cracked and animals ran in terror when Herne Bay was rocked by a massive explosion at the military testing site at Shoeburyness. The blast on Thursday afternoon was so severe that shockwaves cracked windows at Beltinge Post Office and the nearby village barber shop."

A local chartered civil engineer commented:

"The vibrations coming from Shoeburyness are a problem. Last Thursday's explosion was louder than usual and our office certainly shook. Already people have problems with plaster coming off their walls and if this continues it could get much worse. Older buildings aren't designed to take vibrations like that."

On that occasion, the DERA spokesman said:

"Due to the nature of defence trials it is difficult to guarantee that there will never be large explosions. However, it is important to note that Thursday's was uncharacteristic."

So uncharacteristic that on 1 March 2001 the Herne Bay Gazette reported:

"A terminally ill woman suffered distress and anxiety this week after being woken by early morning blasts from the Shoeburyness testing ranges."

Understandably, Ralph Mitchell vented his anger on behalf of his late wife, describing the complaints phone line as

"as much use as a chocolate fireguard".

Throughout that period, my hon. Friends and I pressed the case with the then Minister of State, Baroness Symons. We were again told that part of the problem stemmed from the MOD's Yantlett establishment on the Isle of Grain. The MOD personnel at Yantlett vehemently denied that suggestion. The MOD commissioned a firm, Vibrock, to carry out a monitoring exercise. Unsurprisingly, after months of delay and, no doubt, much expense, the consultants concluded that the vibrations and shock waves experienced by so many of our constituents did not exist.

An attempt to offer early warning of explosions through local media led to headlines such as "Get your earplugs out for tomorrow", "Gunfire Warning", "More Gun and Blast Testing" and "Explosive Weekend", and prompted Baroness Symons to write to me saying:

"I do not believe that this media coverage is helpful to the efforts we are all making to investigate the noise and vibration caused by the DERA site and I have therefore agreed that DERA can revert to the previous arrangements whereby the media are notified only in the case of unusual events."

Notwithstanding the unwelcome publicity, the then Minister, in another letter, said:

"There remains no demonstrated correlation between the activities at Shoeburyness that might be expected to result in more complaints and actual number of complaints received."

I am not entirely certain how many complaints she felt were necessary to demonstrate a link between cause and effect, but correspondence and signatures on a petition now run into hundreds on my own files alone. In that context, I should thank my constituent Tony Wilkinson and his friends for the many hours that they have spent helping me to ensure that those living in Whitstable, Tankerton, Chestfield, Herne Bay, Minnis Bay, Birchington, Westgate on Sea, Westbrook, Margate and Cliftonville have been kept informed of ministerial observations.

Mr. John Whittingdale (Maldon and East Chelmsford): Like my hon. Friend, literally hundreds of constituents have approached me about the disturbance caused to them by the activities at Shoeburyness. According to figures that I obtained from the Minister, the number of official complaints received is running at just below 1,000 each year. Does my hon. Friend agree that that is only a small fraction of the actual number of complaints? I have often had reports of people who have been unable to get through on the complaints telephone number—and it is not very widely publicised. Furthermore, 10 times that number will not be aware that there is an official line on which they can register a complaint.

Mr. Gale: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. We know from general parliamentary experience that most people do not complain. However, walk down the high street in any of the towns along the north Kent coast that I have mentioned—I am sure that the same is true in Essex—and people will ask, "Did you hear the bang?" My own home is nine miles inland from the coast. On a good day—or a bad day, depending on how one cares to think about it—we can hear the explosions, and they shake our house.

So what can be done? My hon. Friend the Member for North Essex is the shadow Secretary of State for Defence; my hon. Friend the Member for Maldon and East Chelmsford is on the board of visitors of the military corrective training centre at Colchester; my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury has had a distinguished career with the Territorial Army and I am a postgraduate of the Parliament and armed forces scheme. I have also served as parliamentary private secretary to two Ministers of State for the Armed Forces. I hope that we may claim that, collectively, we are reasonably well informed.

We recognise that at all times and never more than at present our armed forces need the best support and facilities available, that ordnance must be tested and that munitions must sometimes be disposed of. However, we are not satisfied that the densely populated Thames estuary is the best or most suitable site for the location of what is clearly a necessary facility. Having discussed the matter some months ago with the Minister, who received me most courteously, I am not even sure that he believes that Shoeburyness is any longer the right location.

[Mr. Gale]

It is claimed that Shoeburyness is in some way unique. Sir John Chisholm in a letter to me dated 5 December 2001 stated:

"The facilities at Shoeburyness are regarded by the Ministry of Defence as being unique, partly because of the size of the danger area and partly because of the facility that the shallow water offers for what we call 'over water recovery'. This involves firing munitions when the tide is in and then recovering them, in an undamaged state, when the tide goes out".

That is nonsense. It is a myth that must be laid to rest. Are we seriously saying that teams of military beachcombers armed with metal detectors paddle around in the mud of the Thames estuary picking up shells that are probably already deep in silt? I shall not embarrass the Minister by asking him to tell us how many shells have been recovered during each of the past five years because both he and I know that the answer could probably be provided without greatly taxing the fingers of both hands.

Next, let us touch upon security. This is a sensitive subject, but it is no great secret that, given the much-vaunted shallow water referred to by Sir John Chisholm, explosives for disposal arrive not by sea but by rail. Those trains, inevitably, must travel through densely populated areas of east London. I do not want unduly to alarm the good souls living along that line, but we live in uncertain times. Should a terrorist get his hands on the right wagons, I have a feeling that the earth might move more than a little in one or two of those towns. Surely, we should seek a remote coastal site where the necessary explosives can arrive by sea and be guarded immediately in secure berths.

Then there is the question of cost, which I have always believed is the sticking point. Until now, the thought has been that we have a location at Shoeburyness which, although by no means ideally suited to the military needs of the 21st century, is at least there. The acquisition of an alternative, assuming that the MOD does not already own one, and the equipping of it with the necessary storage bunkers, firing ranges and incinerators, and perhaps with dedicated port facilities, might cost millions of pounds that the Chancellor is not persuaded should be spent. He might think differently if an Essex town were flattened by an exploding train, but, that aside, a parliamentary answer from the Minister stated:

"Since the DERA PPP was announced in . . . 1998 as part of the Strategic Defence Review, the Ministry of Defence has spent some £7.2 million on advice from consultants and other fees."—[Official Report, 8 March 2002; Vol. 381, c. 577W.]

I hope that the Minister will not consider me frivolous or unduly mischievous if I suggest that if the Chancellor can find that sort of money to pay consultants, finding a few million more to secure a state-of-the-art munitions testing and demolition facility for our armed forces might not prove too difficult.

We have a real and unacceptable problem and I believe that the Minister accepts that. We have a military need that must certainly be provided for and we all accept that. We have an opportunity. The Government have embarked on a review of all their defence estates to determine value for money and to establish whether there are ranges and sites that could be better used militarily or returned to public use for development or recreation.

On behalf of my colleagues and our constituents, I ask the Minister simply to give an undertaking. Will he take the window of opportunity afforded by the review to consider an alternative location that will allow QinetiQ, owned by the Government, the Carlyle group or whichever preferred bidder finally takes on the job, to provide for the vital needs of our armed forces while at the same time removing from both banks of the Thames estuary an unacceptable environmental intrusion that has persisted for far too long?

Sir Teddy Taylor (Rochford and Southend, East): The hon. Member for North Thanet (Mr. Gale) has left 1¼ minutes for the Minister and Back Benchers to express their opinions on the subject.

Mr. Nigel Beard (in the Chair): Does the hon. Gentleman have permission to intervene?

Mr. Gale: I said in my opening remarks that I was perfectly happy for the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East (Sir Teddy Taylor) to intervene, and the Minister has conceded that as well.

Sir Teddy Taylor: I hope that the Minister will appeal to my hon. Friend to disengage from what I regard as an irresponsible, irrational and damaging campaign. Of course we know that there is noise from Shoeburyness—I live a mile from there myself. Of course I know that my house shakes. I know that we undertake dangerous work there, but let us get across some of the facts.

First, how valid are all the complaints that we hear from the hon. Gentleman? The Government have spent a lot of money on two surveys, as he well knows, and there is a third survey about to come because of all the complaints. What did the surveys, which were by independent people, actually find? They found that some 80 per cent. of the complaints received about noise and vibration, were not related to Shoeburyness in any way. Only one in five of them was related to Shoeburyness. It seems that some were associated with explosions at the Ministry of Defence range at north Yantlet in north Kent, and others were from sources that could not be identified.

Secondly, what about the number of complaints? Are people marching in the street? There are about 2.5 million people in the area. A tiny number, about 10 people, have sent in 256 complaints. The total is less than 1,000. As regards the volume of noise, we should bear in mind that the monitored levels give readings for Shoebury of about 1.5 mm per second or less, and a maximum of 1.7 mm. By comparison, a quarry is allowed 12 mm. Although I appreciate the real complaint, of which I am well aware, the idea that it is something extraordinary is ridiculous. The plain fact is that most of the complaints have nothing to do with Shoeburyness at all.

Shoeburyness is a desperately important facility. It is one of the world's leading test stations that serves the MOD and other allied defence organisations in vital testing and security. It is also used for the decommissioning of dangerous explosives, which otherwise could kill or maim civilians. It is the custodian of 8,000 acres of beautiful land, and manages its site of scientific interest standards at the highest level. It also contributes to the local economy, with 380 people working there. The unique facility has shallow water that allows us to fire munitions into the water when the tide is in, and to recover them when the tide is out. We cannot run away from that, and I hope that the Minister will confirm it. It allows us to test the strength of the design of the munitions and ensures that they will be safe and effective for our armed forces.

The environmental test centre is also based there, in which live munitions are environmentally tested and safely disposed of. All munitions have to undergo environmental testing before they can be accepted into service. Because of the huge area, the range offers the opportunity for the Army to carry out explosive ordnance demolition training, and that helps to prepare the forces for dealing with unexploded bombs. If the hon. Gentleman thinks that it is irrelevant, we should remember that one vital task carried out in Shoebury related to work on the Rolls-Royce Olympus engines following the tragic Paris airport crash of Concorde. Shoebury was involved in the testing of those engines, and the aircraft are now flying again.

I am well aware that we often get complaints from constituents about many things. I am aware of the complaints about the noise from Shoebury, because I live about a mile away, and I know what the position is. The situation honestly reminds me of those who call me on my mobile and say, "Will you do something about these telecom masts, Mr. Taylor? It's an outrage." We have to face up to our responsibilities. Shoebury provides unique facilities, and many tests have taken place.

I am sure that the Minister will announce today that there will be another test, but does he accept the fact that the tests already carried out by independent people showed that most of the complaints were a load of codswallop and had nothing to do with Shoeburyness at all? It is very disappointing that we should have such irresponsible action on a matter of importance and national security. The hon. Gentleman is well aware of the complaints I made to him about comments in the local press about what happened in Foulness. It was appalling—

Mr. Nigel Beard (in the Chair): Order. May I remind the hon. Gentleman of the need to leave time for the Minister to respond?

Sir Teddy Taylor: I shall, therefore, sit down and allow the Minister to respond. I hope that he will say what I have said: the complaints are ones that we should not take as seriously as presented.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Dr. Lewis Moonie): I shall do my best to reply to the points raised in the relatively limited time left to me. I recognise that this is an important issue for hon. Members' constituents, however difficult it may be objectively to fit them into what takes place at Shoeburyness. I recognise that were I to set out to build a new test and evaluation range, I probably would not build it at the mouth of the Thames. However, we have been using that range for 150 years, and there are several reasons why QinetiQ and the MOD feel that they have no option but to carry on using it.

Shoeburyness is one of the world's leading test sites and delivers services that make a vital contribution to national security. We are all agreed that our armed forces must have safe, effective and reliable weapons and equipment to do their job. The comprehensive testing regime to which all munitions entering, or already in, UK service are subjected is designed to ensure that they are as safe as possible. Some of that testing, particularly on the larger calibre weapons, can be done only at Shoeburyness because it is the only site in the UK that is big enough to conduct those activities.

The primary role of Shoeburyness is the testing and demolition of ordnance and explosives. Testing comprises accident simulation and environmental attacks on weapons to assess their safety and suitability for services, and proof firing of munitions to prove by sampling that they meet the specification that we require. Trials work is undertaken to determine weapon effects on structures and equipment and equipment vulnerability to various weapons. The weapons tested may be manufactured for UK or other NATO services. Shoeburyness also undertakes work to ensure that protection of national assets remains viable against attack by an aggressor using ever more sophisticated weapons. Occasionally, testing is conducted on the types of weapons that potential aggressors or terrorist organisations might use.

Disposal by detonation is undertaken on obsolete items if it is unsafe or otherwise inappropriate to break them down for disposal in any other way. I have no doubt that hon. Members have seen the kilns that we use for that. We try to conduct that part of our work with little noise pollution.

I shall now address the cost of the activity in Shoeburyness in environmental terms, in particular noise and vibration. QinetiQ is not exempt from noise legislation as some local residents believe, nor is it flouting the law with the scale or the number of detonations. Health and safety legislation sets a maximum acceptable level of noise pollution at 130 decibels, weighted for the audible range of the human ear. The decibel scale is logarithmic, which, as hon. Members know, means that roughly every increase of 3 decibels is a doubling in power. QinetiQ has a self-imposed noise limit of 125 decibels at the range boundary, which is well within the law.

The noise level limit is managed through the use of meteorologically based computer prediction equipment and through six monitors that provide real-time measurements from selected sites in north Kent and Essex. There is also a single monitor on site. If predictions show that activity is likely to exceed the limit, it is prevented from going ahead. However, a few safety tests are undertaken during the year that are lengthy and once started cannot safely be stopped. If unpredicted changes occur to the weather conditions, thus affecting noise propagation through the atmosphere, the resulting impact on local communities may marginally exceed the limit. Similarly, there have been a very few occasions on which, for national security reasons, a trial has been undertaken regardless of the QinetiQ imposed noise limit.

During the past year, some 35,000 individual explosive and gunfire events have taken place at Shoeburyness. The total number of complaints of noise nuisance and alleged damage to property during the most recently measured 12-month period was 919. Of those, 326 were from Essex, 103 were from the immediate vicinity of the site and 484 were from north Kent. Of the 919 complaints, 253 came from 10 individuals. It being reasonable that a single significant event is liable to generate several complaints, it is a fact that well over 97 per cent. of Shoeburyness demolition and explosive test activities generate no complaints at all. Furthermore, during one study period, there were regular recordings of complaints that related to sound and vibration levels at times when the site was either shut down for the weekend or closed for the evening. That may be difficult for hon. Members to accept, but it is true.

The MOD recognises that there can be implications from trials activities and the facilities management contract, placed upon QinetiQ as the site operator, expects it to manage activities in a manner that reduces the impact of generated noise. QinetiQ conducts its detonation activities within the statutory and site imposed limits and there has been no significant increase in either scale or frequency of such detonations during the past few months. The site manager has arranged for residents to visit, which has proved popular and useful. Many visitors have consequently declared a better understanding of what is going on.

Independent reports are being conducted to determine whether there is any correlation between the site's activities and the ground shock being experienced by residents in Essex and Kent. There is no clearly demonstrable link, but a more comprehensive study will be carried out to try to prove conclusively what effects our activities have.

In conclusion, I recognise people's concerns. I say in mitigation that Shoeburyness performs a valuable function, and, where we can, we try to move the noisiest activities to areas where they will cause residents fewer problems.

Kevan Sloan

1 pm

Mr. George Howarth (Knowsley, North and Sefton, East): On 15 May 2001, my constituent, Kevan Sloan, was in Tenerife, visiting his mother who works and lives there. He was arrested and charged with involvement in five robberies. Subsequently, he was acquitted of three of the charges and the prosecution dropped a fourth altogether.

Several of the allegations made against Kevan were, frankly, ridiculous. Indeed, well before the trial, he was able to demonstrate conclusively that he was not even on the island on some of the relevant dates. I shall comment on the evidence shortly, but first I want to make some general observations.

Kevan is a 26-year-old man from Kirkby in my constituency. He has no previous criminal record and has been in continuous employment at a local builders' merchant since leaving school. Indeed, his employers have been very supportive of him throughout and were able to provide firm evidence that he was at work in the United Kingdom on the dates of some of the alleged incidents. All of that indicates that he was a man of good character and standing.

It is astonishing that a young man of previous good character should suddenly turn into a one-man crime wave. People who rob supermarkets are generally hard-nosed criminals. It is highly improbable that, having never been in any trouble with the police, Kevan should arrive in Tenerife as a fully formed criminal. However, the impression given by the authorities at his trial was precisely that. I have pondered why that might be. The Fair Trials Abroad Trust, a British-based human rights charity that helps EU citizens who face miscarriages of justice abroad, has taken a close interest in Kevan's case. It has described the trial judge's conduct during the hearing as "questionable" and "xenophobic".

If that was the case, we must ask whether it resulted from a lapse of objectivity or a character flaw on the part of the trial judge, or whether there is some other explanation. It is a difficult call to make, especially as I was not present at the trial to witness the judge's behaviour at first hand. However, a parliamentary answer to me on 2 July 2001 from the former Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Bradshaw), threw some light on the issue. It explained that, in Tenerife, there are some 4,000 cases a year in which people seek consular assistance. That figure is far higher than the figures for some other popular foreign holiday destinations, such as Ibiza, where there are 2,000 such cases, Corfu, where there are 450 cases, and Benidorm, Majorca and Malaga, which, between them, produce some 550 cases a year.

That might provide a clue to why Kevan was dealt with so severely when the evidence for his conviction was, as I shall demonstrate, so unreliable. Even allowing for the fact that not all requests for consular assistance in Tenerife come from UK tourists in trouble with the police, many do. Given the obvious problems of lawlessness from UK tourists in Tenerife, it seems likely that Kevan was made a scapegoat for crimes committed by others. As judges in this country often put it, he was made an example of for others who might transgress in the future. Had he been guilty, that would not have been so unreasonable. However, to make an example of an innocent man is an unforgivable corruption of the basic principles of justice. I am not usually considered to be a bleeding heart liberal in relation to law and order issues; indeed, I suspect that many of my colleagues see me as even more hard line than my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. However, I am convinced that there has been a miscarriage of justice in the case of Kevan. I base that conclusion on the evidence as well as on the unacceptable conduct of the trial judge and of the appeal judges who heard the two subsequent hearings.

Kevan was convicted of robbing the La Familia supermarket opposite his mother's flat, which he used occasionally as a customer, on 15 May 2001. The only witness to the robbery was the woman serving in the shop at the time. Initially, she stated that she was not sure whether she would be able to recognise the perpetrator again. Three days later, she made a positive identification of the alleged robber from CCTV pictures. The pictures related to other incidents that did not go to trial and do not resemble Kevan at all. However, the witness then changed her mind again and, having previously been shown photographs of Kevan, picked him out in an identity parade. None of the others in the parade bore any resemblance to Kevan. That is hardly the behaviour of a reliable witness, nor is it the proper use of identity parades. It bears all the hallmarks of somebody manipulated into choosing one person, irrespective of guilt or innocence. Given that Kevan was staying across the road from the supermarket and was an occasional customer, it is highly likely that the person serving in the shop might recognise him, albeit in a different context to the robbery.

The witness gave evidence that the robber spoke in colloquial Spanish. Kevan does not speak Spanish at all, and even if he had some knowledge of the language, it is most unlikely that he would speak it with a colloquial accent. I have spoken to some colleagues with a knowledge of linguistics and of the languages concerned and they tell me that it would be inconceivable for somebody with a rudimentary knowledge of Spanish to speak it with a colloquial accent. It is obvious; consider the English of people who visit this country and speak with a foreign accent—it is not at all colloquial. Despite the fact that six reliable witnesses had stated at the pre-trial hearing that Kevan could not speak Spanish, and that the judge at the original trial acknowledged that no evidence had been produced that he could speak it, the judges at the appeal in 2002 concluded that he could have conducted the robbery in that language. Fair Trials Abroad believes that the judges at the appeal might have misread one of the defence witness statements referring to her own limited proficiency in Spanish as meaning that Kevan could speak it.

At the appeal, Kevan's defence produced five witnesses who provided the substantial alibi that, at the time of the robbery, he was with them in a bar some 270 m from the supermarket. Moreover, they gave evidence that the bar had only one door, so Kevan could not have left or returned without their having seen him do so. Finally, the robbery of which he was convicted, according to Fair Trials Abroad, bore a remarkable resemblance to the other four robberies with which Kevan was originally charged. As it put it:

"The judges made no comment on the fact that there was a clear series of robberies with the same pattern in all five cases."

Since Kevan was not even on the island when most of them occurred, it seems highly likely that all five were committed by the same person but that it was not Kevan.

Following the initial trial and an appeal, both of which were questionable and which produced unsafe verdicts, Kevan has served slightly more than 17 months of a three-and-a-half-year sentence for a crime that he did not commit. The appeal to the constitutional court in Madrid is pending.

In the past few weeks, Kevan has been moved to a part of the prison that holds prisoners on long sentences and he must share a cell with a non-English-speaking inmate. He has lost the support that he previously had from the network of English-speaking inmates. He is determined not to learn Spanish, because he believes that he does not belong in a Spanish jail and that doing so could compromise his defence, pending a further appeal to the court in Madrid. I appeal to the Spanish authorities to reconsider the decision to move Kevan from the prison's remand module to his present location, which is unsuitable and in which he feels entirely isolated.

Together with Kevan's family, Fair Trials Abroad and the Liverpool Echo, I have been part of a campaign to free Kevan. Earlier this year, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary kindly met me, together with Kevan's father, Tommy Sloan, and his mother, Eileen Forrester, who is in the Gallery today. My right hon. Friend recently raised Kevan's case with his Spanish opposite number, and I place on record my thanks and gratitude for his efforts.

Through his lawyer in Tenerife, Kevan has applied for a deportation order, which, if successful, could secure his release. He has gone to great lengths, however, to make it clear that, in so doing, he in no way accepts any guilt. My plea, and that of his family, is that Kevan's application for that order and his further appeal to the constitutional court in Madrid should be dealt with speedily and that he should be allowed to come home, where he belongs. In the meantime, I again urge the Spanish authorities to put him in a more friendly part of the prison with other English speakers.

Kevan has suffered far beyond anything that could be considered remotely reasonable for a crime that he did not commit. I hope that the Spanish authorities will take due note and act accordingly. I also hope that my right hon. Friend the Minister for Europe will ensure that those very real concerns and the details of this debate are passed to the Spanish authorities and that they take proper note of them.

1.12 pm

The Minister for Europe (Peter Hain): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth) for bringing Kevan Sloan's worrying case to the attention of the House. He is a former Home Office Minister and a highly respected, senior Member of the House, and I hope that his passionate advocacy on Kevan Sloan's behalf will be heard loud and clear in Madrid. I shall certainly ensure that the full record of this debate is passed to the appropriate authorities in Spain.

Before responding in detail to my hon. Friend's speech on the case, however, I should refer briefly to the weekend's terrorist outrage in Bali. Our consular staff in London and Bali have been working round the clock to do all that they can to help the relatives of British citizens who were killed or injured, and they will continue to do so. The Minister responsible for consular matters, Baroness Amos, will travel to Bali this evening. I express my condolences to all those affected, both in this country and in Australia.

I welcome the opportunity to highlight the assistance that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has provided to Kevan Sloan and his family and to explain what consular assistance we can and cannot provide to him and other British nationals abroad. I reassure my hon. Friend that we are committed to supporting Mr. Sloan and, indeed, all British nationals who are detained overseas.

Since Mr. Sloan's detention, his family and supporters have campaigned vigorously for his acquittal and release. They believe that he is innocent, as does his Member of Parliament. They all believe that he has been the victim of an unfair trial, and Fair Trials Abroad has also been involved in the case. My hon. Friend's powerful speech today and detailed criticism of the prosecution's case will, I hope, give the Spanish authorities cause for further thought. I especially noted the points that he made about the paucity of identification evidence, Mr. Sloan's inability to speak Spanish, the robber's accent being quite different from his own, the alibi that he provided, and so on.

The House will confirm that MPs do not lightly speak with such power and conviction about such cases unless they are strongly persuaded of the issues involved. However, the British Government cannot make judgments on the innocence or guilt of British nationals detained abroad. Our consular staff provide the same service to those detained abroad irrespective of innocence or guilt. The role of our consular staff is, in essence, humanitarian. Consular staff are responsible for looking after the welfare of British nationals overseas, including those who are detained or imprisoned. They can ensure that British nationals have access to a lawyer, know their legal position, have information about the legal and prison systems, receive the same treatment as other prisoners and are not discriminated against because they are British or foreign, and that any medical problems are dealt with quickly. We take any complaints of ill treatment very seriously, and raise them immediately with the relevant authorities.

We are fully aware of the pressures and frustrations that having a relative detained abroad can place on a family. Consular staff can help to keep families in regular contact with those detained in a foreign country, and can assist in updating them on the progress of any court hearings. Staff can also pass on messages from family members to detainees, and forward money for prison comforts. Clearly, circumstances and conditions vary, but consular staff aim regularly to visit British nationals detained abroad. Those held on remand can usually expect three or four such visits a year.

Since Mr. Sloan's arrest in May 2001, our consular staff in Tenerife and London have been in regular contact with Mr. Sloan and his family. Our vice-consul visited Mr. Sloan within 72 hours of his detention, and consular staff have visited him a further 10 times since that date. Our staff have also facilitated visits by family members outside the usual visiting hours and at weekends by liaising with the prison authorities on behalf of the families. When Mr. Sloan expressed concern about his transfer to another part of the prison in September this year, our vice-consul contacted the prison authorities straight away to determine the reason for the transfer. She then contacted Mr. Sloan's lawyer to inform him of these developments and to ensure that family visits were not cancelled due to the transfer.

We have also maintained regular contact with Mr. Sloan's lawyer during significant periods such as his trial and more generally throughout his detention. We have therefore ensured that the family in the United Kingdom has been kept informed of any developments. Our consular staff are not legally trained; they cannot offer legal advice, and under international law neither they nor we can interfere in the judicial process of another sovereign country. We would not tolerate any interference in our own legal proceedings, although I know that my hon. Friend is not asking for that.

However, we have sought information regarding Mr. Sloan's trial through our consular staff in Tenerife. His lawyer has stated that although he is very unhappy with the outcome, he is entirely satisfied with the way in which the court handled proceedings. Mr. Sloan must follow the guidance of his lawyer and, of course, he was convicted under Spanish law. His family and supporters have pointed out what they believe are several deficiencies in the prosecution's case; my hon. Friend spoke eloquently about those this morning. However, those are entirely legal issues and as such must be addressed by Mr. Sloan's lawyer, who is best placed to offer professional legal guidance and to take up any concerns with the appropriate local and judicial authorities. All avenues are currently being considered, including the possible referral of this case to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office pro bono lawyer panel for review. I understand that this is a difficult and frustrating time for Mr. Sloan and his family. They are convinced that he was the victim of a miscarriage of justice and, with my hon. Friend's active support, are campaigning vigorously for his release. We have been asked many times to intervene on Mr. Sloan's behalf and have been pleased to do so.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was able to meet Mr. Sloan's parents on 30 May. He made it clear that, as I have said, we could not interfere in the legal process of another country, but agreed to make formal representations to his Spanish counterpart. He subsequently met the Spanish Foreign Minister, Josep Piqué, in June and his successor, Ana de Palacio, in September. On both occasions, my right hon. Friend raised Mr. Sloan's case and put the arguments that my hon. Friend has put today. Mrs. de Palacio agreed to look into Kevan Sloan's case and I am sure that, as a lawyer herself, she will have a particular understanding of the arguments that my hon. Friend has made today.

Meanwhile, we shall ensure that Mr. Sloan's family are kept fully informed of any developments. We shall continue to provide Mr. Sloan with all possible consular assistance. Our consular staff in Tenerife will continue to visit him and maintain frequent contact with his lawyer. I shall happily take any questions from my hon. Friend if he has further points to make, but I understand that Mr. Sloan's mother has travelled here to be present at this debate. She has my sympathy in her quest for justice. We—our consular staff, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I—will stand ready to help in whatever way we can, given the constraints that are obvious to all when the independent judicial system of another country is involved.

Disability Living Allowance

1.21 pm

Mr. Elfyn Llwyd (Meirionnydd Nant Conwy): When the present Government came to power in 1997, I asked the Minister then responsible whether the disability living allowance forms could be examined urgently to make them more user-friendly. More than five years later, nothing has happened, despite the assurances then given.

The forms are long and complex but do not provide adequate space for applicants to add to tick-box and one-word answers to illustrate their cases further. Often, that is why they are turned down. For example, if an applicant can walk 100 m unaided, the mobility claim will almost certainly fail. What of sufferers of myalgic encephalopathy—ME—and multiple sclerosis, who sometimes have reasonable days but more frequently have bad days when it is not possible to walk 100 m? I have come to realise that many constituents who appeal have to do so because, in all honesty, they did not present their case very well on the form, and failed to qualify statements or add to the basic questions. They therefore failed to reach the golden threshold of the number of points required.

A recent survey by the Motor Neurone Disease Association, published in June 2001, showed that 52 per cent. of those questioned received help to complete the claim form. Respondents described the form as "very confusing" and "a nightmare" and said:

"the forms are too long and the questions asked are the same over and over again."

There is, to my mind, a glaring conflict of interest in the way in which medical assessments are carried out. General practitioners are paid more than £100 for the visit and for completing the form. I could name one or two doctors in Gwynedd who fail everyone initially, regardless of their condition. It does not take rocket science to see that a GP could feel under pressure to turn down applicants and preserve the status quo, in order to preserve that rather lucrative sideline, rather than supporting the applicant. I raised that matter on the Floor of the House recently, and interestingly, not a single medical practitioner contacted me to suggest that I had got it wrong. GPs' services are secured through a third-party agency, but I repeat my contention that that obvious conflict of interest compromises them.

The MNDA supports what I have said. I shall quote from some responses that it received. One said that the appointments with doctors were made at very short notice, and another that the doctor "was very rude and unhelpful. It felt like I was a scrounger."

Another said:

"He could not understand me very well because of my speech and had no idea of the severity of MND or its progression."

Another said:

"The assessment was totally degrading. My husband was totally humiliated. If we had known what the assessment was like we would not have gone through with it."

Furthermore, 58 per cent. of those questioned said that they had to wait for a month for such an assessment. The report says that only 46 per cent. of claimants received notification within one month that their claim had been successful, and 11 per cent. of respondents reported having to wait more than three months for notification.

Over the past six to seven years, an increasing number of constituents have come to my advice surgeries seeking assistance to proceed with an appeal. They invariably begin by feeling overawed at the prospect of conducting a quasi-judicial appeal without assistance. Frequently they must rebut evidence from a medically qualified person. Many decide that they are not up to it and want to forget the whole thing, which is the last response that anyone would want. Others decide to battle on. As a respondent to the report recently said,

"The appeal was hard work for a person feeling unwell."

I am legally qualified and have conducted countless appeals, and I can see clearly that the appeal procedure is very difficult for appellants in person. Despite the fact that tribunals are invariably staffed by three caring individuals who are patently independent and go out of their way to put appellants at ease, the procedure is daunting, not least because at the back of every appellant's mind is the awful financial prospect of failing in their appeal.

Since 1992 I have conducted appeals five or six times a year, and only one of those 60 or so appeals failed. I should like to think that that success rate was due to the quality of my advice and advocacy, but I suspect that the real reason was that the appellants should not have been refused in the first place.

A layman such as I can often see that a person's condition is deteriorating and will deteriorate further. A tribunal recently took a few seconds to decide a case in favour of a constituent of mine, and made the benefit "for life", as it was before the benefit integrity project. Back in November 1998, the Minister then responsible told me,

"We shall continue to improve the process so as to ensure that the right benefit is paid to the right people. As the hon. Gentleman knows, we recently announced that, in due course, we wish to replace the benefit integrity project with a fair and sensitive system for ensuring that DLA cases are correct."—[Official Report, 16 November 1998; Vol. 319, c. 587.]

To that I would say, "Hear, hear." However, the targets for savings achieved by the benefit integrity project were based on a belief that almost £499 million per year was involved, and that more than 12 per cent. of claimants were frauduient. Both those ideas were found to be totally unjustified. In fact, the savings achieved by the BIP—£8 million for 1997–98—have been totally wiped out by the administrative costs of £8.27 million for the same period. The cost of the new system of periodic review has yet to be estimated.

Little has happened to aid the sick and disabled, and they continue to be subjected to degrading treatment every three years or so. The project was supposed to be replaced by something that was fairer, but I fear that the periodic review is no fairer and is just the benefit integrity project under another name.

I shall give some brief examples of cases that I have conducted. A Mr. Roberts in my constituency had his left leg amputated after a road accident in 1995. He received high rate mobility from September 1995–96, which was cut down to middle rate from September 1996–98. He asked for a review in March 1997, received nothing until August and wrote back with the paperwork in November, only to be turned down on the grounds that he was out of time. I complained on his behalf, and the disability benefits director said that it was clear that Mr. Roberts had not received the standard of service to which he was entitled. The appeal went forward in August 1999, and his claim was allowed fully on appeal, nearly three years after it was refused.

A young woman from near Bala in my constituency was awarded the highest rate mobility component because she was suffering from chronic fatigue syndrome. She received the high rate from April 1994-98, reapplied in January 1998 and was refused. She asked for a review in February and was refused again. She sent in some other details, and eventually won an appeal—again, more than two years later. A lady in my constituency from Corris made her first application in March 2000 and was refused. She was suffering from severe arthritis. We appealed on her behalf, and the appeal came through in February 2002, nearly two years later.

A man called Patrick Breen in my constituency had his disability living allowance discontinued in October 1998, having suffered an unsuccessful knee operation in 1997 and further surgery in 1998. He partially lost his sight in 1994. He has recently had confirmation from doctors that he also had osteoarthritis. His doctor expressed surprise that the personal care element was disallowed, and said:

"at this current time I feel that a high level of personal care is of the utmost necessity".

I wrote on Mr. Breen's behalf on 27 October 1998 and did not receive a reply until 10 January 1999. The case went to appeal—in April 2002, believe it or not—and it succeeded on all points. That is another example of a few years wasted, anxiety created and so on.

A young man from Trefriw in my constituency, who suffers severely from myalgic encephalomyelitis, was turned down. He, too, had to appeal. While he was appealing, he was unable to heat his home properly or look after himself because of lack of finances. That is a disgraceful catalogue. Time does not permit me to deal with other cases that I could mention.

The Government have made some movement. The Social Security (Disability Living Allowance) (Amendment) Regulations 2002 will affect between 40,000 and 50,000 claimants. The new rules relate to lower rate mobility component, which is paid to people who can walk, but cannot walk outdoors in unfamiliar places unless they have someone with them—because of a visual impairment, for example. The alterations relate to claims based on fear and anxiety. A new provision, regulation 12(7), was inserted into the DLA regulations, stating that people who cannot take advantage of the faculty of walking outdoors without guidance or supervision from another person because of fear or anxiety will not be eligible for lower rate mobility component.

A second paragraph, paragraph (8), will state that regulation 12(7) is to be ignored if the fear or anxiety is

"(a) a symptom of a mental disability; and

(b) so severe as to prevent the person from taking advantage of the faculty in such circumstances."

The intention is that people who claim on the basis of fear or anxiety—because of agoraphobia, for example—will still be able to do so, but people who cannot demonstrate that their fear or anxiety is a symptom of a severe mental health problem will not be eligible for lower rate mobility component.

The Government claim that they are simply clarifying the law, rather than making changes. However, the new rule means that the often severe psychological effects of physical impairment must in future be ignored for the purposes of lower rate mobility component. That is an entirely new rule.

A growing number of voluntary bodies are becoming greatly concerned at the operation of the DLA—not surprisingly, perhaps, given what I have already said. The Headway Association recently wrote to me. In essence, its concern is about the DLA assessment process. It believes that the DLA is too fixated on finding physical or mental health problems and does not allow the recognition of cognitive difficulties, often the result of a head injury, which can cause problems as severe or worse than physical or mental health impairments.

As for the unfairness of the DLA assessment process, the Headway Association says that the DLA assessments place heavy reliance on independent fixed format medical assessments. They will often require the brain-injured person to explain convincingly in the interview how their condition impacts on their care and mobility needs. However, due to their cognitive impairment they might be unable to explain that to the medical examiner.

The Headway Association's experience of clinicians, particularly general practitioners, is that their professional knowledge of brain injury and its impact on the individual is sparse. Additionally, Headway Association members have experienced a range of attitudes from examining medical practitioners. Some are very mechanical in following the medical assessment script, while others are more discretionary, and we must query what assessment training is given.

Individuals with a brain injury may be deemed mentally competent yet suffer impairment of their cognitive abilities that directly impacts on their care and mobility needs. Even medical examiners who are enlightened on the subject of brain injury point out that they are required only to assess mental competence, not cognitive ability. As it is the province of clinical neuro-psychologists, it is unrealistic to expect cognitive ability to be reliably assessed by a non-expert medical examiner, typically a general practitioner, during a routine medical interview and examination, which, as I have said, often takes place swiftly and at short notice.

Hywel Williams (Caernarfon): Does my hon. Friend agree that the gap in the training of doctors who assess the DLA leads to wide variations, even in small geographical areas? That is widely seen as being entirely unfair.

Mr. Llwyd: I agree entirely. The DLA is, unfortunately, like postcode prescription. Cognitive ability is often the crux of the matter but it is not addressed, which is a haphazard way of doing things.

I wholeheartedly endorse the recommendations made by Headway:

"A separate section on cognitive ability should be included within the DLA questionnaire and medical interview.

For the EMP following the DSS assessment script, and where brain injury is claimed or diagnosed, a supplementary sheet of specialist questions could be devised to assess the cognitive and executive reasoning difficulties. There could be a number of them to target a particular neurological condition. In cases of alleged mental problems for those applying for incapacity benefit there is the opportunity to complete additional questions on how their condition affects their ability to work. Medical examiners are obliged to consider this when the problem becomes apparent during the interview. Where there is doubt, and to guard against the possibility of fraud, EMPs, Adjudication Officers and tribunals should be authorised to refer applicants who claim brain injury to a suitably approved clinical neuro-psychologist. They could produce independent reports on the cognitive difficulties of the applicant and how they have impacted on the care and mobility needs of the applicant.

The medical assessment procedure should be more flexible to allow the input of the carer. To give a complete picture of a person with a brain injury during an assessment it is often necessary to have their main carer present. This will help where a person's self image is at odds with their actual abilities."

I reiterate my call to the Government to review the application forms and make them more user-friendly. The periodical review procedure should be ended for cases in which a recipient of DLA has already succeeded once on appeal. I have been a Member of Parliament for more than 10 years and I am going through the third appeal with some applicants. Their condition worsens with every appeal, for which we have to wait through months of anxiety to present. I do not mind doing it—I am proud to do it—because it is part of my function. However, I say to the Minister that it is a waste of the tribunal's time and is grossly unfair and hurtful to people who feel "done" by the system.

It is also time to speed up the system. The examples that I have given are typical of the length of time an appeal takes. The system is currently failing the most vulnerable in our society, which will not do.

1.38 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Maria Eagle): I congratulate the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on choosing the subject for today's debate. The matter is of great interest to all hon. Members. He has raised a number of issues on which I shall do my best to comment.

First, I want to say a little about the DLA because there are some misconceptions—I am not saying that the hon. Gentleman has misconceptions—about what the benefit does and does not do. I shall set out the aim of the DLA before answering some of the hon. Gentleman's specific questions. It is a non-contributory, tax-free benefit that is not income related. It is there to contribute to the extra costs incurred by severely disabled people because of their additional mobility and care needs. It is not an extra payment for people with a particular condition. That is one of the things that most confuses people about the benefit; some think that because they have a certain condition, they should receive it. That might explain the point about variations that was made in an earlier intervention. It is possible for two people to have the same condition, but for their care and mobility needs to be very different. The system is designed to try to assess what those needs are on an individual basis.

Hywel Williams: Is the Minister claiming that decisions are entirely consistent from one assessment officer to another? I have encountered examples of people with very similar conditions seen by different doctors; Dr. Nice has allowed it but Dr. Nasty has not.

Maria Eagle: The hon. Gentleman has identified one of the problems of trying to administer the benefit: it has a large subjective element. That is partly because it is trying to deal with the effects on a particular person in a particular situation of a particular condition or disability. There is bound to be a certain amount of subjectivity, whether of the decision maker or the doctor.

Our job in administering the benefit is to try to be as consistent as possible, but it is not to achieve equality in benefit between two people with a particular condition. Because of the way in which it is designed, the benefit has to deal with the effect on the individual of the health condition or disability. There are difficulties in terms of consistency, and in terms of the many issues raised by the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy and his colleague, the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Williams).

For the record, I accept that there are sometimes difficulties in accessing the benefit. Every Member of this House has had constituency cases in which things have gone wrong. We try to minimise errors and to put things right when they go wrong, but there is an inherent difficulty in administering this benefit. In the last five years, expenditure on DLA has increased by 23 per cent. in real terms, to some £6.5 billion, and 2.35 million disabled people are in receipt of it. That is an increase of some 15 per cent. over the last five years. There is no evidence that the difficulties of claiming are preventing people from accessing the benefit. The trend is upwards; we are getting the benefit to people who are eligible for it as best we can.

The hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy will accept that the need for care and help with mobility is a personal matter and varies between individuals. The affects of a particular disability can vary from person to person, according to circumstances. It is therefore difficult to be objective. The diversity of cases for which the benefit has to cater makes it inherently difficult to administer. We have embarked on a programme of improvements, but the hon. Gentleman says that he has not seen much evidence of that. I shall go through some of the things that we have done, and some of the things that we are hoping to do, now that we are introducing a proper IT system into the disability benefit unit, which we have not had until now. The hon. Gentleman will know that one of our difficulties in respect of the benefit is that it has been clerically administered. That has its own difficulties, because there are inefficiencies in clerical administration, especially when files are sent to Blackpool and have to be sent back.

The hon. Gentleman referred to a predecessor of mine who said that the Government's aim was to get people's benefits right at the outset and keep them right. That is indeed our aim. We are trying to develop processes that will make the system simpler, more straightforward and more responsive to the needs of disabled people who claim disability benefits. We are trying to remove the need for a single "catch all" claim pack, the difficulties of which were referred to by the hon. Gentleman. The claim pack must enable people to set out the effect of their condition or disability on their care and mobility needs, so we need more than a form that asks people what condition they have. The claim pack is bound to be long and more complex than we would like, but we are currently developing a new claiming process both for attendance allowance, which is being trialed, and for disability living allowance. In tests, we have managed to reduce the claim pack for attendance allowance from 44 to 16 pages. We are hoping to be able to replicate that for disability living allowance, although DLA is slightly more complex because of the mobility component. The trials on the AA claim pack for very elderly people have been fairly successful and we hope to apply the lessons that we have learned from that to DLA.

Features of the first stage of the process include a shortened interactive claim form completed through discussion with the customer on the telephone. I accept that people with impairments of various sorts can find it very difficult to complete forms, but the benefit inquiry line should be able to help them. Customers can talk to someone on the telephone, text phone is available, and there are other ways in which customers can access the service. We hope to be able to tailor questions to the customer's needs rather than them having to answer all the questions that might be useful. We hope that medical evidence relating to previous claims, already held by the Department, will be used to speed up the decision process. That might answer some of the hon. Gentleman's points about repeat claims. At the moment, all the information is held in files in Blackpool and is not immediately accessible. Once the IT system is up and running, we should be able to access such information instantly.

Mr. Llwyd: I appreciate the fact that the Minister is responding to the subject in a thoughtful and helpful way, something that does not often happen in such debates. I follow her arguments, but there is a problem with the helpline, because many people have difficulty speaking about their private affairs and some have speech difficulties. Does the Minister agree that it seems ridiculous that a person who has a degenerative disease and who has succeeded on appeal the first time around, should be put through the hoops two or three times subsequently? Surely that is wrong.

Maria Eagle: I shall come to the latter point in due course because there are particular issues relating to chronic and deteriorating conditions.

In respect of the helpline, if customers find it impossible to get the help that they need, we do our best to arrange home visits. We try to make arrangements that will suit the customer. It is not in our interests for inadequate claim forms to be returned because that just extends the process. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will accept that we want to administer the benefit, which has inherent difficulties, as well as we possibly can, with the aim of getting to eligible people the money that they need as soon as possible without the hassle that they might have previously experienced. We are all on the same side in that we all want to get this right.

On IT, we are beginning to acquire the capability to access information relating to previous claims more quickly. We are not there yet, but we are introducing IT in disability benefit units where initial claims are handled. We hope that, in due course, we shall see significant improvements as a result.

At every stage, development proposals on claim forms are presented to a forum of disability organisations, the modern service working group, to ensure that the changes meet the needs of and are in the best interests of disabled people and are not just administrative expedients. Those organisations can tell us whether we are on the right track. I hope that hon. Members will accept that we are doing our best to improve the administration, although I accept that there are still problems with it.

The hon. Gentleman more or less said that there is a continuation of the benefit integrity project and that periodic inquiry is no fairer than the benefit integrity project. Periodic inquiry was designed to do something very different from the benefit integrity project. Whereas the benefit integrity project appears to have been designed by the previous Administration to meet targets, periodic inquiry is a random check. Cases are chosen randomly from the case load and a visiting officer is sent out to complete the form. The idea is to try to ensure that people receive the right benefit. In fact, it is far more frequently the case that the benefits of someone who has gone through a periodic inquiry are increased rather than decreased, which gives the lie to the idea that periodic inquiry is the same as the benefit integrity project.

Annabelle Ewing (Perth): Does the Minister have any statistics to back up her assertion that periodic reviews result in great news for people who are receiving benefit?

Maria Eagle: I do indeed. In fact, the hon. Lady has anticipated my next remark.

Results from the first two years of periodic inquiry have identified that in 75 per cent. of the cases where care or mobility needs changed, the inquiry led to higher entitlement. That gives the lie to the idea that periodic inquiry is the benefit integrity project with a different name. In fact, customer reaction to it has generally been very positive. When I visit those of my officials in disability benefit units who do periodic inquiries, I always ask them what reaction they get when they knock on people's doors. Generally, I am told that they and the process are welcomed. One might understand why that might be the case, as 75 per cent. of the cases result in increased benefit. I do not recognise the description of periodic inquiry as some form of rehashed benefit integrity project. Its aim is to ensure that people get the right benefits for their needs.

The hon. Gentleman complained that sometimes people have to reapply for their benefits. Sometimes people on indefinite awards do not have to reapply. It might become clear that their needs have increased when we visit them on a periodic inquiry. Our aim is to try to get people on the right level of benefit so that they get the support to which they are entitled, not to cut the costs on a targeted basis, which I understand was the purpose of the benefit integrity project.

I am sorry if the hon. Gentleman has come across examples where periodic inquiry has seemed to operate like the benefit integrity project. If he would provide me with individual examples—obviously, not today—I would be more than happy to review them. It is certainly not our general impression from what comes back to us or from our statistics.

The hon. Gentleman rushed through some points about GPs at the beginning of his remarks, and it was not clear to me whether he was referring to the GP reports for which a decision maker might ask if they need more evidence because they are not sure about a form that has been returned, or whether he was referring to the examining medical practitioner or some combination of both.

Mr. Llwyd: It is the EMP.

Maria Eagle: The EMP is someone to whom our decision maker can resort if they do not feel that they have enough information to make a determination of the claim. It is certainly true that some of them are GPs. It is also true that our contractor SchlumbergerSema has been strengthening its management of the contracting doctors, at our behest. They receive significantly more training than they used to on appropriate behaviour.

I know that there are complaints about individual EMPs. I encourage hon. Members and their constituents to complain if they have come across any EMP whom they believe is behaving in an offhand way, making assumptions or not treating them with due respect and dignity. Arrangements are in place with SchlumbergerSema to deal with complaints in a way that can result in an EMP, a GP, or whoever is doing the report, being thrown off our lists, as people are. If there are sufficient numbers of complaints, we will investigate them. Some doctors are retrained.

Mr. Llwyd: The Minister has been generous in the debate. I see that my hon. Friend the Member for Caernarfon is here. He and I have a complaint in common. I will not name the person here despite privilege, but he has been reported to the General Medical Council and remains on the books of the third party—the contractor.

Maria Eagle: I should be happy to have further details from the hon. Gentleman if he would like to forward them to me. Under the new contract with SchlumbergerSema, strengthened procedures are in place to ensure that doctors who do not do their job appropriately do not do it at all. It is not our intention to subject disabled people and people with health conditions to degrading treatment or to make them jump through hoops to receive benefit. That is not what we are about. The hon. Gentleman must surely agree that we sometimes need more evidence than that provided on the form, and that sometimes there is no alternative to an examining medical practitioner. However, there is no reason why people should experience what he has described as happening to his constituents. We want to stamp that out. If he would like to send me details of the individual in question, I will look further into what he has said. I am aware that there are EMPs who have been removed from the lists and who no longer receive instructions to deal with this sort of case. It is not the case that removal never happens; it does, but we need to have the complaints to ensure that we pursue the bad eggs.

The hon. Gentleman made some important points about what Headway had to say to him about cognitive impairments and brain injury. We want to ensure that our procedures get to the nub of the issue and that those people who are eligible for the benefit receive it.

We are always open to representations about such issues, and I encourage Headway and other organisations to contact us. We have training and guidance for our decision makers about how such issues should be dealt with, but I do not pretend that it is perfect. We can always improve it, but we do set out to ensure that it is as good as it can be. I have some problems with the hon. Gentleman's suggestion about referring to clinical neuro-psychologists. We are not in the business of trying to medicalise the benefit beyond the degree to which it has already been medicalised—there are doctors' reports. Disabled people would not like that. They do not want the benefit to be turned into an assessment of how bad their condition is. The benefit is about dealing with care and mobility needs, and the person best placed to tell us what those needs are is the person concerned or their family and friends. That is the basis of the benefit, so we must be careful not to go too far away from that. I therefore have some concerns about the idea of bringing in clinical neuro-psychologists if it can be avoided. It would also be bound to lead to more delays. However, I am happy to take up issues and points that some of my officials raised about particular problems. The issues that Headway raised with the hon. Gentleman are also important.

The hon. Gentleman also talked about the changes to the lower rate mobility benefit. There have been debates in the other place about that issue, but I reiterate that the aim of that change was to keep the benefit true to its original intentions. It is not the case that people who have fear and anxiety and a physical impairment cannot receive the lower rate mobility benefit. We hope that the change will affect only a very small number of people, and I hope, given what I have been able to say to him today, that the hon. Gentleman will accept that that is by no means all that we have been doing to try to improve the administration of DLA and to ensure that those who are eligible for the benefit receive it, receive it quickly, and at the level to which they are entitled.

Question put and agreed to.

Road Traffic Speed

[Relevant documents: Ninth Report from the Transport, Local Government and the Regions Committee, Session 2001-02 HC557-I, and the Government response thereto, Cm 5621.]

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Heppell.]

2.30 pm

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nantwich): Last year in this country, we killed 3,450 people, seriously injured 37,110 and slightly injured 272,749 on the roads. There was, however, no great public outcry. There was no mass lobby of Parliament, nor people running into the streets producing banners because we have, extraordinarily, almost become accustomed to the fact that people die in road accidents. It is as if the great hand of God has fallen on them to bring down some well-deserved punishment, whereas in reality there is a direct connection between the human being, the motor vehicle, and death on the roads.

It is tremendously important that the Select Committee on Transport, Local Government and the Regions decided to look into the issue because it was so concerned, not only about public attitudes but about the attitudes of Government and elected representatives to the startling and frightening facts. Had there been an equal number of deaths from any other cause, there would have been an enormous outcry and we would all have received vast numbers of letters. We have talked for some time about the need to do something about the number of deaths on the roads, but many of the contributory elements have become obscured. This is one of the most important reports that the Select Committee, under the previous banner of Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs, managed to produce. It certainly received an enormous response from the general public.

I am used to receiving letters that refer to me as an antisocial old socialist bitch— and to that I might even plead guilty; I see no reason to discount any such gentle descriptions of my character—but many of those letters encompassed exactly what is wrong with our attitude towards road death. Many of them were intensely personal, not in the sense that people recounted only their personal experiences, as one might expect, but in that they argued that we must have cars, we must be able to drive them as fast as we like and, in many instances, we must not comply with the more irritating rules of the road, the deliberate purpose of which is to restrict the motorist. That is revealing because it shows how large the gap is between the reality of what we do with motor vehicles and the public perception. We wanted to address that gap in the report.

We were able to say:

"Most deaths of car occupants take place on rural roads, but most crashes and pedestrian deaths occur in urban areas."

We were able to highlight the number of children who are injured or killed by motor vehicles. We were able to point out the facts—not new, but well known—that large numbers of children suffer because they live in more deprived areas, are more likely to be playing out in the street close to dangerous roads and are often not as well supervised as they might be.

We considered who was responsible for speeding, why they speed and what reasons they give. It became obvious that many drivers did not know the speed limits. They do not regard speeding as a serious offence, and think that they are unlikely to get caught. They do not appreciate the damage that they do, because others bear most of the cost. They may be in a hurry or feel pressured—many of those who break speed limits are on work-related journeys. The comfort of their cars and the design of the roads mean that it "feels right"—a frequently given reason—to drive quicker than is legal or safe.

Lest hon. Members think that the Committee was exaggerating, I should say that individual Members expressed frightening views during our attempts to reach an agreement on the text. People said, "Of course I ought to be able to drive my car very fast after I reach Manchester in the middle of the night, because I am a good driver and I am totally in control of the car." Indeed, I learned a new declension: I am a good driver; he, she or it is not as good as me but ought to be allowed to drive; he, she or it is totally incapable of driving and should not in any circumstances be allowed to drive. That seemed to relate to everyone who those people met on the road. None the less, all of them were clear about motorists' need for a policy that enabled them to drive as they thought fit.

After many years of large-scale road safety campaigns, we are failing to convince even large numbers of motorists that there is a direct connection between speed and death. Anyone who worked in accident and emergency, or anyone who watched the mangled bodies being taken off motorways, could tell us about it. Any member of the motorway police could tell us of the strain put on them by constantly having to attend frightening accidents. They all know the cost of disastrous road accidents not only in terms of bones broken and lives destroyed, but in terms of the effect on large numbers of families. Despite that, we still do not appear to be putting the required drive, energy and sums of money into our concern about what is important.

The Government are serious about wanting to do something, but we were considerably worried by lacunae in the reply to our report. We considered how Departments across Whitehall did not necessarily work together to achieve the ends that are needed. We looked at the fact that the Home Office did not put sufficient emphasis on the likes of road traffic policing. One would have thought that that was obvious, but when people talk about the core policies for policing, road traffic work is not at the top of the list where it should be—even though it must constitute a large amount of the costs and difficulties presented to police forces.

Mr. David Kidney (Stafford): On that point about Departments supporting the priorities for casualty reduction, the Home Office is about to produce the first national policing plan. Would my hon. Friend expect to see a reference to road traffic policing in it?

Mrs. Dunwoody: I most certainly would. We said that we ought to have a national speed management strategy, so that is exactly the type of measure we want.

The national health service bears not only the practical brunt of having to deal with many policies, but the costs of having to deal with those injured and sick. It should therefore be one of the key bodies that decide policies, where they could be improved and how we could change public attitudes towards what we think is essential.

We said that a national speed management strategy ought to be established that would "highlight the effect of decreases in speed on reducing casualties", and encourage local authorities to be active in setting targets and reducing numbers of casualties. We also said that we ought to consider

"examples of success and good practice".

However, there were several points that the Government clearly failed to address, and I want to put them in context.

We said that it was important to have a hierarchy of rural roads. There is already a clear set of distinctions, because people assume rural roads are safe when they are not. The reason why we spent so much time discussing the need for specific controls outside rural schools and in rural villages was because we recognised that fact. However, the Government reply said:

"It would be costly financially and environmentally. Given the infrastructure and behavioural changes required, the road safety and quality of life benefits would take too long to realise."

I am not sure what that means. Does it mean that because it is going to cost a lot and is difficult to do, we should not start? Frankly, the problem costs a lot at the moment, especially to Government Departments. What do the Government mean when they say that "benefits would take too long to realise."?

Too long for what—for the current Government or the next, or for the people whom we represent, or for the 2010 targets? I want a clearer statement than that. We must assume that the policy is a long-term one and get on with it. Of course, it will take time to implement, but does that mean that we should never start, even if we can show that it would bring significant casualty reduction benefits? I do not think so.

We were also concerned about those famous safety cameras. I may as well be honest with the Under-Secretary of State for Transport, as he is a straightforward Minister who does his best to reply to all the difficulties we raise. The Government sometimes seem to allow themselves to be led a bit by the press—especially, dare I say it, the tabloid press. What research have the Government done and what evidence is there that we would do much better if we had bright yellow cameras that are clearly visible to the motorist from a great distance? How do they know that that would be more successful than continuing our existing policy, which is not to hide the cameras but to put them where they are not necessarily immediately noticeable, and to use the evidence that that produces?

We have research on what safety cameras achieve, but no evidence to suggest that we should have a policy whereby motorists are told that they are being monitored when they break the law. People do not put notices on their houses saying, "If you burgle here, you will be in a certain amount of difficulty." We assume that people know that they will be in trouble if they break the law. Why are bright yellow speed cameras that can be seen from a considerable distance essential? The evidence is that, far from improving road safety, such devices slow down motorists where they can see the camera and allow them to speed up as soon as they get around the corner. I do not think that that is what anyone wants, and I am certain that it is not what the Government want. They are simply responding to pressures, when the issues should be considered more closely. Why is there no consistency about where we direct resources? Either we decide that we should have camera partnerships and that the police should have the same duty, or we leave the situation as it is.

Turning to the question of leadership, the Government have a responsibility to show that they take road casualty figures seriously all the time, and not only occasionally. They must show that their measures are part of a long, consistent and urgent policy, because that is the only way to persuade the general public. Even today, we received a briefing from a normally responsible motoring organisation that suggested that people wore seat belts only because they had had a long period of education. People wear seat belts because it is the law. They started to wear seat belts because it was the law, not because someone was seeking to persuade them.

Mr. Kelvin Hopkins (Luton, North): Does my hon. Friend agree that it is when the law changes that attitudes change? Seat belts provide an example: before the law was changed, there was a great hostility to them; straight afterwards everyone accepted them.

Mrs. Dunwoody: In one accident and emergency department in the middle of London, the day after the seat belt legislation came in, some 40 per cent. of the accident work disappeared. That was as clear as daylight. The Government should push hard to ensure that people understand these things and that they respond to them.

We can ask the Government to do a better job in several respects. Why have they not responded to the recommendation that they should identify how much a comprehensive national package of traffic calming measures would cost? The reality is that people do not respond to being told to drive slowly; they need some form of control.

How are local authorities expected to produce the large transport programmes that they are required to deliver, having received large capital allocations? We heard evidence that more and more local authorities face difficulties in finding trained staff—not people who are prepared to accept responsibility, but people with very specific skills. They need the sort of parallel investment in training and revenue that would enable them to employ staff who are capable of carrying out the type of policy that the Government want implemented.

I finish on what is, for me, one of the most important parts of this important report—the matter of child pedestrian deaths. The Government's response, which is that they are going to "commission further analyses" of the very high child pedestrian fatality rates throughout the United Kingdom is extremely disappointing. Why was there a three-year delay before further research was requested? Why are we still waiting for what we already know to be underlined? Why are we waiting for so many traffic safety schemes that will separate major traffic streams from pedestrians? That is one of the easiest and most sensible ways of contributing to safety.

We need lower speed limits. More local authorities must look into what happens not only near schools, but in residential areas. Why is the design of local distributor and residential roads, which could provide a more forgiving road environment, or the provision of money needed to encourage local authorities to go ahead with such policies, still not being pushed at Government level? Why have we still not got right our attitudes towards simple things like road crossings?

Such policies are vital. The developments to which we would have expected the Government to respond have been quietly brushed aside. The Government say that intelligent speed adaptation should be taken forward by industry in response to public demand, not by the introduction of a mandatory requirement for suitable devices, but we know that industry does not respond with either the speed or the urgency that are essential for major policy change.

Those well-meaning media programmes that constantly refer both to vehicles and to speed do not require viewers to consider the implications of a public education policy about speed. We tried hard to get evidence from the television companies, and they were prepared to talk to us, but even the BBC did not seem to understand that part of its public remit ought to be to persuade people of the harm we are doing to so many children and other people through our neglect and carelessness.

I pay tribute to those who helped me with this report. That is not just the Members of Parliament from the previous Committee, but our senior Clerk, Dr. Harrison, and Mr. Rob Gifford, who was one of our most valued and important advisers.

I want to say one thing to the House. As elected Members, we have special responsibilities. Sometimes, we have responsibilities to lead, and sometimes to follow. In this case, I hope that we will lead. I hope that we will not continue with the carnage that we accept day by day. We cannot allow emergency services to be diverted so frequently to dealing with the effects of people's carelessness and incompetence. We must be prepared to sort out the money to change not just the mechanical things that Government and local authorities can do, but the attitudes of those who respond to them.

Mr. David Drew (Stroud): I am sorry to interrupt my hon. Friend's peroration. There is one area that does not directly affect the new Ministry, but which has had an enormous impact on a small number of cases in which I have been involved, and that is sentencing. One talks about fines and disqualification, but in the ultimate cases—those of death or serious injury—there is certainly confusion in the criminal law over which sanctions should be applied. There also seems to be much confusion concerning the role that insurance companies play in protecting the injured party, or the party who may have committed the offence. Would my hon. Friend like to say a few things about our need to sort that area out, as well as the lesser offences?

Mrs. Dunwoody: That is why I said specifically that we needed to consider all of Government policy throughout Whitehall. I certainly do think that the insurance industry has a very specific role to play. Through training, magistrates can be encouraged to take such matters very seriously. On bad days, I sometimes say that if I wanted to get rid of anybody, I would do it with a motor vehicle not only because it is more efficient, but because I could escape suitable punishment more often than not.

We should be looking at the involvement of the police, the highways authorities, the Government and all the relevant private sector organisations. We should really be saying to the public at large, "You have in your hands, in partnership with the Government, the ability to reduce road deaths and injuries, and that is something we desperately need to do in this country. We are careless of human life. Help us to change that." I say to the Government that they must lead and urgently implement policies that will have a material effect. Above all, they must understand that to be popular in this particular field is to finish up abandoning many adults and children to an uncertain future.

2.53 pm

Chris Grayling (Epsom and Ewell): I start by echoing the words of thanks of the Chairman of the Committee to all those who worked with us on the preparation of the most substantial report that the Committee has produced during the past year. Its coverage of an important subject is comprehensive in breadth and depth. As ever, I pay tribute to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) for the customarily expert and fair way in which she chaired the inquiry, which has made a valuable contribution to an important debate in this country.

Far too often, we allow ourselves to be distracted by high profile and distressing incidents in other modes of transportation, while forgetting the serious issues affecting our roads, where there are casualty numbers that would be totally unacceptable in any other form of transport. It is therefore all the more appropriate that the Select Committee should have worked on this useful contribution to the debate. I hope that the Government will take note of many of the recommendations made in shaping future policy.

It is important to note in any discussion on road safety that we have some of the safest roads in Europe, but within an overall picture of good, albeit still unacceptable, figures on accidents and casualties on our roads compared with our European partners, the report identifies a specific problem in urban areas. The number of fatalities and serious injuries, including injuries to children and other pedestrians, is unacceptably high and needs to be tackled.

It is clear from our discussions that improvements could and should be made to Government policy on the deployment of resources and to the regulations that affect how our roads are monitored and policed. The resourcing of policing in particular does not fall within the remit of the Minister's Department, but in an environment in which Ministers need to talk across Departments, he needs to play an important role in the debate.

The Minister will be aware that the Government are currently reviewing the resources available to police forces throughout the country. That review is likely to lead to significant changes in future funding for police forces. The evidence to date suggests that there is likely to be a transfer of resources from what are undoubtedly the most congested parts of the country, such as the south-east of England, to urban areas and parts of the north. The likely consequence of that is serious for the policing of our roads.

If, as a result of Government formula changes, a home counties force is faced with the loss of 2, 3 or 4 per cent. of its budget every year for the next few years, that cannot but have an impact on the policing issues to which the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich referred. The home counties are the most congested parts of our country: their motorways are jammed and over-congested, and people take diversions down country roads and narrow lanes in an attempt to find a faster route to work. I hope that the Minister will impress on his colleagues that the Government cannot afford to allow traffic policing to be eroded, with the consequent adverse effect on safety standards on our roads.

That is happening at a time when the behaviour of some motorists is alarmingly inappropriate. Anyone who travels outside London at the weekend will be aware of the sometimes erratic behaviour of motor cyclists and motorists on country roads, such as driving at high speed and other dangerous driving. If that sort of behaviour is not properly monitored because our police forces do not have the resources to watch roads where they know a problem exists, not only will that problem not disappear, but it will worsen. I hope that the Minister will have a quiet word with some of his ministerial colleagues and make clear to them the consequences of under-resourcing policing in areas where road policing is a particular issue.

I draw the Minister's attention to the signage of speed limits in urban areas, which the report touches on. The issue concerns me because there are too many roads in this country where it is unclear to most drivers how fast they are allowed to drive. Too many roads have the feel of a 40 or 50 mph limit, but are actually 30 mph. Local authorities throughout the country would dearly love to provide clearer signage on urban roads to remind people that they can travel only at 30 mph. It is madness that in this day and age it is illegal for a local authority to put up a 30 mph repeater sign. That rule exists for historic reasons dating back to the 1930s, but when local authorities are putting up cardboard signs on street lamps, painting diamonds on roads, and finding any way they can to remind people that they are in a 30 mph zone, surely it is not beyond the wit of the Government to find a legal framework that will allow them to do that properly and effectively wherever they perceive a problem. I hope that the Minister will take that relatively simple step and ensure that authorities have the powers that they need to take local decisions where they believe a problem threatens or one already exists.

The principle of local decision making is also relevant to the rules about the siting of speed cameras, on which the report touched. As the Committee discussed the issues, we found it extraordinary that the framework for decisions about the siting of cameras was so rigid. I do not argue for a mass proliferation of speed cameras, but surely a police force or local authority should be able to draw attention to a stretch of road where circumstances have changed. Perhaps there is a new housing estate or a new road connection that has increased traffic levels, or perhaps traffic flow in general has expanded dramatically.

The police force or local authority might perceive a risk of a serious incident occurring. Perhaps there have been several minor incidents, and they fear something more serious. Surely it should not be Government policy to insist that they may not site a speed camera at that potential black spot until the accident that they are trying to prevent has happened. I hope that the Minister will think through that element of the Government guidelines again. Common sense suggests that a simple modification of the rules to allow local decision making would not distort the system, but could prevent some of the problems that the Chairman of the Committee and other hon. Members identified in the report.

The third element we picked out was the bias in Government safety spending towards other modes of transport. Huge resources go into the railways to prevent accidents on the mode of transport that is undoubtedly the safest. If a tiny fraction of the money spent on rail safety were spent on school pedestrian crossings, it could make a significant difference to safety standards on urban roads throughout the country.

I hope that as the Government review policy for the future, they will take a step back and say, "Yes, of course we need to invest in safety on our railways. We need to invest in safety for our aviation systems and on buses and coaches, but we must ensure that not all the money goes to other modes of transport and that enough is left over to pay for schemes that can make a real difference." When parents have to mount a vigorous campaign to secure the money for one crossing, as they had to in my constituency recently, we realise just how little is in the pot. However, I hope that when the Government consider how the cake is distributed, they will consider the impact on safety that the smallest schemes can have and ensure that they are not squeezed out by grand projects.

Helen Jackson (Sheffield, Hillsborough): On that very useful point, does the hon. Gentleman recognise that, on occasion, the Government do stump up the money, and we are grateful for it? In my constituency, for example, one trunk road across the Pennines was an accident black spot. After two four-year-olds were killed, there was a huge local campaign and petition that, in a six-month period—not long in Government terms—resulted in their stumping up £500,000 for speed cameras. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the message is starting to get across, although we need to go much further?

Chris Grayling: I thank the hon. Lady for those comments. In many ways, she shares the experience of my constituents, because the campaign to which I referred followed the tragic death of a small girl. No one would suggest that the Government get everything wrong. This Government, like previous ones, have done many good things on safety. Our roads have become much safer in recent generations, which is down to the good work of good people in Governments of all political persuasions. However, as the hon. Lady says, that does not mean that it is not the job of hon. Members to bite the ankles of Ministers and say, "You could do more if you did this."

We must all encourage people to take greater responsibility for safety issues. That includes not only motor cyclists going around country lanes at extraordinarily high speeds, or car drivers who take delight in racing each other on a Sunday afternoon, but also people who ride bicycles in urban areas. They may be the victims of inappropriate driving practices and are often killed or injured as a result, but many themselves break the rules of the road on too many occasions. I suspect that everyone in this Room has stood at a pedestrian crossing in London when the traffic lights were at red and a cyclist has sped through at high speed, paying no attention to the rules of the road.

There is a responsibility on the shoulders of pedestrians who jaywalk, on cyclists who ignore red lights and on those who use the roads irresponsibly to take a step back and say, "Perhaps I shouldn't be doing that." It is the job of hon. Members in our community roles, the job of Governments, who have a remit in public education, and the job of the other agencies with which we come into contact and can encourage, to steer our society towards better behaviour when safety is at stake.

The report is a useful contribution to the debate. I hope the Government will take up the many ideas, insights and pointers it offers. I have already apologised to the Minister for being unable to stay for the winding-up speeches, but I know from his previous comments, and from his nodding head while I have been speaking, that he is listening and taking on board what is said. I hope that some of the ideas in the report will not be merely discussion points but will be followed through as actions in due course.

3.6 pm

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): I start by congratulating the Committee on the report, especially the Chairman of the Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody). The report contains a great many facts and the experiences of people throughout the country. It seeks to deal with an ever-increasing problem: speeding on our roads and the dangers that it causes.

I learned a great deal from the report, which clearly shows what we can do if the will to do it exists. Many of the changes proposed in the report would not cost a lot of money. I represent a constituency in inner London and, week-by-week, I receive letters from residents of all ages, but especially from youngsters and elderly people who speak of their concerns—often their fears—about the dangers that they face in the area where they live from vehicles that travel too fast. Often, the drivers of those vehicles have no concern whatever about the driving conditions in the area. That is something that all hon. Members will have seen in their constituencies.

The report spells out clearly, on pages 5 and 7, what excessive speed does. Page 5 states:

> "Death and serious injuries on our roads bring misery to hundreds of thousands, including the relatives and friends of the dead and injured . . . We have one of the worst child pedestrian safety records in Europe . . . Excessive and inappropriate speed is the largest single contributor to deaths and serious injuries on our roads and significantly reduces the quality of life in many urban and rural areas."

We know what is happening. We are also clear about the cause of deaths and injuries. Page 7 of the report says:

> "Every day, year in and year out, about 10 people are killed on our roads. In 2000, 3,409 people died, including 857 pedestrians . . . Many of these deaths and injuries are avoidable."

We are clear about the cost to our communities of excessive speed. My hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich referred in her speech to something that I find extremely sad. Many drivers, whatever vehicle they drive, do not fully understand what can happen to a pedestrian who is hit by a car. The report says:

> "Hit by a car at 40 mph, nine out of ten pedestrians will be killed. Hit by a car at 30 mph, about half of pedestrians will be killed. Hit by a car at 20 mph, nine out of ten pedestrians will survive."

Why is there not a greater Government campaign to make drivers more aware of what speed can do to pedestrians?

The report should be compulsory reading for anyone who is caught speeding and for people taking their driving test. It shows not only the dangers of speeding but the cost. On page 12 it states:

> "The cost of road accidents is very high. The DTLR estimated that the 'medical and ambulance costs attributed to road traffic accidents' was £540m in 2000 . . . The full cost to the nation of road traffic accidents is very large; a DTLR study has estimated it to be £17 billion in a single year."

Sadly, many drivers have no knowledge of the dangers. The report points out that:

> "many drivers do not know what the speed limits are . . . they do not regard speeding as a serious offence and they are unlikely to get caught . . . they do not appreciate the damage they do because others bear much of the cost".

What can we do? Indeed, what must we do? This excellent report highlights the issue. We must ensure that there is more effective enforcement. That could be introduced without any great cost. A much greater education campaign is needed. I realise that that could take longer, but a start must be made. We need to change people's attitude to driving at excessive speeds. As others have already said, nothing makes me check my speed more than the presence of traffic police. The report says that there has been a significant reduction in the number of traffic police. Is the authorities' attitude to that changing? If the Government are committed to reducing speed and the dangers that it presents, it surely cannot be right to reduce the numbers of police traffic patrol officers in the areas that we represent.

There is no doubt that what the driver of any type of vehicle most fears is disqualification. That is the real deterrent, not a fine. A fine may present problems, but people find the money. That is why I and, I am sure, the overwhelming majority of people, support a policy of disqualifying more drivers who are caught speeding.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) made an important point about the attitude of the courts. Many aspects of law and order that come before the courts are debated in this House. I have spoken about several matters that have caused untold harm and disruption to my local community, but when the people responsible for the disruption appeared before the courts, the magistrates who heard the cases had no idea—even when they reached a guilty verdict—about the extent of the damage to the community. Equally, many courts and the magistrates who sit in them do not, when they hear cases of people driving at excessive speed, fully realise the dangers and problems that it causes.

The report demonstrates what can be achieved. It was interesting to read about comparisons between the United Kingdom and the Netherlands. In the Netherlands, where many under-20 mph zones can be found, the total number of accidents has been reduced by 56 per cent.; accidents in which people have been killed or seriously injured by 90 per cent.; accidents involving child casualties by 64 per cent.; and pedestrian accidents by 54 per cent. That clearly shows the enormous benefits—for cities and rural areas alike—of tightly enforced speed limits.

We must educate motorists far more than we do now. The report states clearly how we could achieve that. We should "establish a comprehensive, all-the-year-round publicity campaign . . . establish campaigns targeted at specific groups . . . make speed-related hazards a part of the hazard perception tests to be introduced in the driving test—[Interruption.]

Mrs. Dunwoody: The motorist is trying to fight back.

Mr. Cox: The report is excellent—[Interruption.]—and much work has gone into its preparation. All Members of Parliament hope—[Interruption.]—that in six months or a year's time, the report will not be forgotten. The report clearly shows—[Interruption.]—what speeding can and does do to so many people throughout the country. It also shows what could be done if the authorities, national or local, were truly committed to tackling the problem. That is the challenge faced by the Government and local authorities throughout the country. I hope that in the coming months, the right policies will be introduced and followed.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Nicholas Winterton): Before I call Mr. Brake, may I apologise for the false fire alarm. On behalf of the authorities of the House, I apologise profusely to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) for the unnecessary interruptions to his speech.

3.19 pm

Tom Brake (Carshalton and Wallington): I welcome this important debate, so ably initiated by the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody). In common with other Members, I am sorry to hear about certain people—Government Members—describing her as an old socialist. I shall not repeat the word that she used next.

Like the hon. Lady, I have encountered people who believe that their freedom to drive should not be constrained in any way. However, what they must realise is that a driver's free and fast-flowing traffic is a pedestrian's nightmare. Pedestrians end up taking their lives in their hands when they try to cross a road, especially in urban environments.

Did the hon. Lady notice the editorial in the Evening Standard a couple of days ago? Although that paper has run an aggressive campaign against congestion charges, the editorial was supportive of the need for measures to be introduced to slow traffic down. It agreed that statistics had established beyond doubt that speed kills, that too many people drive too fast and that we should slow down. The hon. Lady should be more confident about support for the type of measures recommended by the Transport Committee.

In research on traffic speed, Direct Line insurance found that more than half Britain's motorists favour speed limiter technology being fitted to all new cars on a compulsory basis, and 53 per cent. are in favour of limiters being fitted to all cars retrospectively. Hon. Members may be surprised at the level of support for such measures.

I disagreed with the hon. Lady about the effectiveness of covert versus overt speed cameras. As far as I am aware, no research has been carried out to establish which type is more effective. I suspect that research was not conducted on covert cameras before they were all painted yellow; so little comparison can be made.

To what should the Government respond in the Transport Committee report? First, the Government should be bold. The Evening Standard editorial that I mentioned was prompted by its front page, which referred to the shock cut in speed limits that the Government were apparently going to announce. I understand that the moment the front page came off the printing presses, the Department for Transport contacted news outlets to deny that there was any truth in the matter. That would concern me because the article seems to be picking up on the Transport Committee's recommendations and the Government's response.

The Government are supportive of the Committee's recommendations in relation to revised guidance for local speed limits. For example, recommendation O states:

"The Government should publish as a priority revised Guidance to local authorities on setting local speed limits".

The Government's response states:

"we propose to revise and publish new guidance in 2003."

In recommendation P, the Committee recommended specific guidance for local authorities on speed limits. In their response, the Government did not say that they disagreed with that recommendation. When the Government disagree with Select Committee recommendations, they say so. If the Government do not disagree, the Evening Standard editorial correctly picked up on what the Government were hinting at.

I am alarmed that the Government felt it necessary to deny so quickly that anything was in the pipeline. They should be bold. I have referred to the body of evidence from Direct Line insurance and to the Evening Standard editorial which suggest support for the measures, so there is no need for the Government's apparent timidity. The hon. Member for Epsom and Ewell (Chris Grayling) rightly highlighted the need for action to be taken on rural roads. A one-size-fits-all speed limit for roads of different classification is illogical. A flat-rate speed limit for motorways is equally unreasonable and illogical, and it is appropriate for the M25 to have variable limits.

We urgently need the rural road hierarchy that has been promised. Unfortunately, all that we are getting are plans for demonstration projects—there appears to be nothing concrete in the pipeline. I hope that the Minister will take this opportunity to set out precisely the demonstration projects that the Government will support and to tell us in which parts of the country they will be.

Gregory Barker (Bexhill and Battle): I agree that we need variable speeds on rural roads. Does the hon. Gentleman think that there should be variable speeds through rural villages? There are villages in my constituency in which there is a 40 mph limit and there are those that are lucky to have a 30 mph limit, but there are 40 villages in East Sussex in which there is no speed limit whatsoever. Speed limits should not vary throughout rural communities. All villages want a limit of 30 mph or less.

Tom Brake: There are places in which variable speed limits might be appropriate, but it is equally clear that there are many villages, settlements and towns where it is appropriate to have a 30 mph zone that everyone understands and, we hope, respects. Several speed limits are dictated by weather conditions and so on and we should be more flexible. I hope that the Minister will set out the demonstration projects that the Government will support and the funding that will be available.

Several hon. Members referred to policing and enforcement. It is fortunate that I asked a question on 25 January about the number of mobile traffic units that operate radar guns in the Met police area. I received a response on 14 October. I did not think that that was a particularly speedy response as I had an eight-month wait for it, but I am pleased that it eventually arrived. The response reveals:

If the police say that there are at least seven devices, let us assume that there are a maximum of 10—I am sure that they would have used a larger number if that were appropriate. At a rough guess, if there are 4 million cars in London of which about 1 million are in use at any moment in time, the statistics suggest that people have a one in 100,000 chance of having their speed checked by a mobile hand-held speed detection device. In other words, people have a very small chance, if any at all, of being caught or checked by the police.

The information that the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety supplied to hon. Members for the debate highlighted a report by Claire Corbett of Brunel university. She has identified, as hon. Members know, that the way to stop people offending is to increase their chance of getting caught. There is very little chance of being caught, in London at least.

I would like the Minister to set out the Government's position on congestion charges. We had an interesting visit to Transport for London yesterday. Its representatives commented on the role that they expect congestion charges to play in reducing accidents. That is why I want a clear statement from the Government on whether they support congestion charges and, especially, the charges that will be introduced in London. There is confusion about the Government's position on congestion charges and whether they think that the charges will reduce accidents.

Mrs. Dunwoody: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am afraid that you will not be aware that the Committee that I have the honour of chairing is about to start an inquiry into congestion charging. Part of the work that we did yesterday was a preliminary look at what is happening. Therefore, when the Minister begins his reply, I hope he will bear in mind the fact that we would like him to hear the evidence before he reaches a final conclusion—although he must have a view, of course.

Tom Brake: I thank the hon. Lady for that intervention. She has discreetly wrapped my knuckles, but I am sure that the Minister will respond appropriately.

Mr. Christopher Chope (Christchurch): The hon. Gentleman says that the Government's policy on congestion charging is unclear. I refer him to what Lord McIntosh of Haringey said in the other place on Tuesday of this week:

"the Government have always been supportive of congestion charges and we have been supportive of the plans for congestion charges put forward by the Mayor of London. That matter was discussed with the Secretary of State on 26th September."—[Official Report, House of Lords, 15 October 2002; Vol. 639, c. 701.]

Therefore, although the Secretary of State was ducking and weaving on this issue yesterday, a senior Minister in the other place has confirmed what we have always believed to be true.

Tom Brake: I thank the hon. Gentleman for that intervention. He has correctly highlighted the fact that there are differences of opinion between Ministers on congestion charges, which are easy to focus on.

My final point is about joined-up thinking. This report identifies that a countrywide package of traffic-calming schemes could be introduced at a cost of £3 billion, and that that could result in the national health service saving about £100 million a week. I know that the Committee wants the Government to look at that package again. I hope that the Government will allow some joined-up thinking and action to take place by recognising the substantial savings—potentially £100 million a week—that could be derived from introducing those traffic-calming measures, and that they will therefore offset the expenditure against the savings that will be made elsewhere. If the Government were to do that, it would be a good example of joined-up thinking.

Mrs. Annette L. Brooke (Mid-Dorset and North Poole): Does my hon. Friend share my concern that many local authorities currently seem very reluctant to introduce 20 mph zones, even though they can do so? I am also concerned that, in my experience, the local police say that if there is not an enormous amount of capital expenditure they will not police such zones.

[Mrs. Annette L. Brooke]

Therefore, in my area at least, it has been impossible to have 20 mph zones outside several schools where we would like to have them.

Tom Brake: I thank my hon. Friend for that timely intervention. If the Government were to allow this joined-up thinking to operate, and if they recognised all the possible savings that could be made, they might be willing to assist local authorities to introduce the measures to which she has just referred, and which, on cost grounds, local authorities are probably not in a position to introduce at present.

The Transport Committee has clearly set out measures—many of which are very simple—that could greatly improve road safety. I urge the Government to be bold; they should implement these recommendations. With thousands of lives at stake, everything is to be gained.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Nicholas Winterton): Before I call the next speaker, I should point out that 10 hon. Members want to participate in this debate, and that they include the two Front-Bench spokesmen. Clearly, it is important that the Minister and the shadow Minister should have an opportunity to make positive contributions to this debate. Therefore, I ask all hon. Members to be as disciplined as possible in their remarks, so that everybody can have their say.

3.33 pm

Mr. David Kidney (Stafford): I declare an interest. I am a co-chair of the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety, a charity that provides parliamentarians with research-based solutions to transport safety issues.

When I started reading the report, I was immediately struck by its trenchant language; it was biffing the Minister about the head. However, by the time I had reached the end of the report, I realised that the language was justified. The report is nothing less than a clarion call for action on behalf of all those who lose their lives, suffer ridiculously serious injuries or are bereaved when loved ones lose their lives on the roads. We should not wait a minute longer to take the action that we know needs to be taken to reduce the number of casualties.

In the light of those comments, the Government's response is disappointing. It does not address the seriousness of the issue or of the report itself, which deserves a much better response than the Government have given so far. I welcome the Government's support for the position of the Transport Research Laboratory, which sometimes receives unfair criticism for its reports of research findings. From all the research in this country and around the world, we can say that high average speeds and variability in speed lead to more crashes on the roads, and that a driver is six times as likely to be involved in a crash if he is travelling 25 per cent. faster than average speed. Our priority should clearly be to reduce the fastest speeds to achieve the greatest gain in road safety. As a rule of thumb, we can achieve a 5 per cent. reduction in crashes for every 1 mph reduction in average speeds.

I want to touch on the four themes of leadership, public support, resources and the future. In terms of leadership, the Prime Minister launched "Tomorrow's roads: safer for everyone", which contains our casualty reduction targets for the next 10 years. The targets are challenging. They will require leadership and a consistent approach across the road safety lobby. However, we have seen several mixed messages from the Government so far.

Outside the subject of road traffic speed, we have seen the Government duck the issues of pedestrian protection and the reduction of the alcohol limit for drinking and driving. On road policing directly, last year saw the second round of local audits of the crime and disorder reduction local partnerships. I conducted a survey of every police force in the country, to ask them whether their audits had included requests to the public for their responses on road traffic policing. Only about half of them did so. Naturally, that reduces the opportunities for the public to say that they want road traffic policing to be a priority.

When I asked police forces why they had not consulted on the issue, I received responses such as that of one assistant chief constable who said:

> "It is my understanding that the priorities for Crime and Disorder strategies were felt to be more likely to be focused on crime and disorder rather than road safety, not least because road safety is being dealt with elsewhere."

A second force wrote that it had positively been advised by the relevant Government office that road traffic matters should not be included in the audit process. What sort of message is that to the country about the Government's determination and leadership in driving down road casualties?

Worse may be to come. The first national policing plan is due to be published at the end of November. The Home Office is now up to the 10th draft, and I understand that it contains not a single mention of road traffic policing. I hope that the Minister will make inquiries about that and have something to say about it to the Home Office if it is the case. The Government clearly have to get a grip and provide leadership, not least so that they do not let down all those dedicated individuals in councils, the police, health services and other organisations who are trying to reduce the number of casualties. The Government have to show leadership to the public and the commentators.

I come now to the issue of public support. Generally, the public would ask three questions about speed. First, what is the limit? They need to understand what the speed limit is for the road that they are on, which means that the Government have to say something about the national pattern of speed limits and the signing of them. The Committee made a simple and sensible suggestion about permitting repeater signs for 30 mph speed limits. The Government have responded disappointingly even to that basic recommendation.

Secondly, is the limit realistic? Drivers want to obey the law, but if they cannot see the sense of a speed limit and think that it is positively unreasonable, they will be hard pressed to obey the law even if they want to, unless, as my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich said, they are positively made to by a strong police presence. It is important to adopt a consistent approach to setting speed limits and to be able to justify them, so that when drivers see a speed limit sign, they trust that the limit is reasonable. Then it is important to enforce limits consistently, so the third question is whether the limit will be enforced.

The first element in enforcing speed limits is signage, but there are other issues, such as engineering—whether we can use traffic-calming measures to make people keep to a certain speed limit—safety cameras and police officers. I have said enough about signage. Engineering is probably the simplest, cheapest and most effective way to reduce speed limits. We have had some success in Stafford, where the authority introduced 20 mph speed limits. We recently received a report on the first of those schemes after it had been operating for 18 months. A whole-estate approach was taken on the Highfields estate, and there was no rat running as a result of the traffic calming. In the five years before the implementation of the scheme there were 20 crashes resulting in serious or slight injury; fortunately, there were no fatalities. In the 18 months following the introduction of the scheme, there was just one crash causing slight injury—a dramatic improvement in safety achieved for a reasonable financial outlay.

Mr. Drew: I thank my hon. Friend for organising the PACTS briefing this morning, during which I was able to raise the issue of the safer city project in Gloucester. I shall be careful what I say, however, because the last time that I raised the issue I received more correspondence in the vein described by my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) than I care to mention. That shows that we cannot take it as read that people understand why traffic calming is used and why we try to make drivers behave more responsibly. It is not always the natural speedsters who are critical. It is often those who are disabled or people who work for the ambulance service who seem to have a problem with some of the measures, so education must be part of the process, not a final add-on. Will my hon. Friend comment on that?

Mr. Kidney: I agree with my hon. Friend. It is important that we show leadership. Both as a Government and as politicians, we have a responsibility to explain why traffic calming is necessary in certain areas in our constituencies. It is important that we justify the measures and stand up to be counted. That is why I raised the subject of speed cameras.

We have received the first-year reports of those forces that have taken advantage of the netting-off scheme, which uses some of the income from speeding fines to pay for speed cameras. In those areas covered by the scheme, 47 per cent. fewer people were killed or seriously injured at camera sites. In the eight pilot areas, where the scheme has been running for longer, there has been an 18 per cent. reduction in the number of people killed or seriously injured at camera sites.

Speed cameras are popular with the public. I differ slightly with the Committee in its criticism of the Minister's decision on the conspicuity of cameras. I believe that his decision is an example of good old-fashioned political nous, heading off possible criticism that the scheme is more about tax revenue than road safety, which would make it unpopular.

The presence of police officers is vital. In the summer, I spent a day of the recess on patrol with a police officer on the M6 motorway. In a commendable scheme, four police authorities have pooled their officers to police the motorways in a consistent way throughout the west midlands. The scheme shows how thinly resources are spread; with more resources, the police would be able to give a better service to the public who use the roads. That service would include not simply stopping people and punishing them but reducing casualties and congestion. There is a need for police officers to be physically present. That brings me on to resources generally, so I shall say no more about police forces.

Local authorities have received a welcome boost of Government finance for local transport plans. That is appreciated and is becoming noticeable on the ground. Through local transport plans, an integrated approach has been adopted, with an emphasis on public transport, walking, cycling and safety. Staffordshire, which has a casualty reduction partnership, has an impressive record. It took the lead with speed cameras in 1995 and there have been dramatic reductions in casualties on the roads. An estimated 250 people who would have been killed or seriously injured since 1995 are alive and walking about today because the presence of speed cameras reduced road speeds. They are good value for money, and it is a good amount of money. It is ironic that the problem that local authorities are encountering is skills shortages; there is a lack of the right sort of engineer to implement the measures for which they now have the money.

I said that I wanted to talk about the future. Mention has been made of intelligent speed adaptation. That refers to speed limiters, which can recognise the speed limit where a vehicle is and can consequently limit its speed. They are not new; they are used on heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles and some of the top ranges of motor car offer them as an optional extra, something attractive. I have been to the Motor Industry Research Association premises at Nuneaton and driven the second prototype intelligent speed adaptation car, which is being trialled. It drives like any other car and one does not notice any difference in performance except that it will not let one exceed the posted speed limit. It is a remarkable vehicle. I believe that it represents the future and could cut something like one quarter of deaths and serious injuries on our roads.

The next demonstration of the car for Members of the House of Commons and the House of Lords will be on 20 November at Brent Cross. Six parliamentarians are invited on that occasion. I am sure that if there is more interest, other demonstrations can be arranged. The next stage is a programme that will start in Leeds next year. Twenty vehicles with intelligent speed adaptation will be let loose on the roads of Leeds to see how they work on a bigger scale.

What we need to hear from the Minister is not that it will be left to the market to see how speed adaptation develops but that certain things will be done to ensure that it is a success. The most obvious is the digital mapping of speed limits. The Government should say now that they will provide the resources to make that happen, so that by the time that we are ready for the scheme to be national, the infrastructure is in place. The other little thing that the Government could do is to encourage some fleet operators to offer their fleets for larger trials of speed adaptation and give it the opportunity to prove itself.

[Mr. Kidney]

We need five things: a commitment across government, including in guidance on crime and disorder reduction partnership audits and in the national policing plan; to have all Government Departments signed up to the road safety agenda; a clear, consistent message, designed to make speeding as socially unacceptable as drinking and driving; clarity in speed limit policy; and best practice in education, engineering, enforcement and evaluation. Most of all, we need leadership from the Government.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again, let me give the House more specific guidance. A number of people still want to speak. I have no authority to demand this, but I should be very grateful if Back Benchers would limit their remarks to 10 minutes. That will give the Front Benchers full opportunity to participate.

3.48 pm

Gregory Barker (Bexhill and Battle): I am mindful of your words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and shall endeavour to conclude in much less than 10 minutes.

I pay tribute to the Chairman, the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), for her terrific introductory speech and to all the Committee for having produced this excellent report. I am particularly glad that in introducing the subject the Chairman showed such passion and vigour. We should all be passionate about the subject, because it is a matter of life and death. I have particular reason to understand that because, early in September, my teenage nephew was knocked down on a road on the way to school. But for the incredible professionalism and dedication of the East Sussex ambulance service and then the intensive care team of doctors and nurses at the Royal Sussex county hospital, he would not be alive today. Although he remains in hospital, I am glad to say that it looks as though he will make a full recovery.

The hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) spoke about the impact that the different speeds of 20 mph, 30 mph and 40 mph can have on the survival rates of those involved in traffic accidents. The points that he made were spot on. They must not be lost amid arguments about expenditure, budgeting and inconvenience to drivers. We must think of the casualties first and last.

I want to articulate the feelings of those in many rural areas, especially in my constituency. People there feel that their areas are blithely given a mandatory 40 mph speed limit, when so many towns and urban areas will as a matter of course be given a 30 mph or even 20 mph speed limit. East Sussex county council is currently undertaking a village speed limit review. In the county, 41 villages have been identified that have no speed limit at all. The council is in the process of identifying the right level of speed limit to be imposed. It thinks that the limit might be 30 mph, but in some cases it might be 40 mph, depending on the investigations into current speed.

I believe passionately that all communities, rural or urban, should as a matter of right be able to put a 30 mph speed limit through the centre of their communities. In my village of Peasmarsh and the neighbouring village of Beckley, there is a 40 mph speed limit that takes one straight past the school in Beckley and the village shop in Peasmarsh. It runs past the memorial centre, and there is not even a proper crossing. Elsewhere in my constituency, whether in Catsfield, Herstmonceux, Boreham Street, Bodiam—I could go on much longer—people are desperate to slow down the traffic that runs through the heart of their communities.

East Sussex county council has a prioritised action list of 140 villages identified as in need of traffic calming, but the budgetary restrictions on the council mean that only between four and six of those calming measures can be carried out each year. Even if no further scheme is identified, that means that it will take at least 20 years before all those schemes are implemented. Then and only then can the council begin to think about a mandatory 30 mph limit in all villages. That is clearly totally unacceptable. I want the Government not only to empower local authorities so that they take can action in theory, but to deliver the resources so that they can take it in practice.

Two points occurred to me during the debate. The first is about driver habits and technology. This year, I have bought a more high-performance car, which is capable of faster speeds. In fact, the impact on my driving behaviour has been to lower my speeds, especially in built-up areas, because that sporty car has a digital display in the dashboard that tells me my speed. It has a much more direct impact on my driving than the old-fashioned needle dial. I can see instantly when it flicks above 30 mph. I am aware that the speed indicator is vague on many cars. New technology has a role to play in confronting drivers with their speed.

The second point is about taking a delegation of my constituents last year to Poundbury in Dorset to look at the development there. I was struck by how town planning in the building of that new community had reduced the role of the car. There is no proliferation of signage, but the design of roads has made them safer for pedestrians. All too often in villages or housing estates, there are broad, sweeping roads with wide corners and clear views, which just give a clear indication to a driver to put his foot down. It certainly does in my village, Peasmarsh. In Poundbury, however, blind corners have been built deliberately so it is impossible for drivers to get up any speed at all before they have to brake, halt and turn. Town planning has an important part to play in preventing future accidents.

I know that the Minister is a decent man and will aspire to implement many of the recommendations in this excellent report, but it is no good willing the end if one does not will the means. I would like him directly to address what he is going to do to ensure that the recommendations in the report are actually implemented, on a time scale that will be meaningful to people who have young children now, and who do not want to wait until they have grown up and left school before their roads are made safer. What will he do to ensure that a fraction of a vast Government budget of £418 billion will be diverted to saving the lives of our children?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. David Jamieson): I hope it is appropriate to intervene, Mr. Deputy Speaker, just in case there is not time later on to cover the point. The hon. Gentleman will know that most of the safety plans throughout the country are delivered by local authorities and through the moneys that we put into local transport plans. As has been pointed out, those have been substantially increased in the past two years: one of the members of the Committee says twofold, but I would say they have increased threefold in the last two years. Those are moneys for local councils to take decisions. Will the hon. Member for Bexhill and Battle (Gregory Barker) commit a future Conservative Government to those levels of spending on local transport plans?

Gregory Barker: Sadly, I am only a lowly Back Bencher, so I cannot commit a future Conservative Government to anything. A very senior Member sits alongside me, but I have a feeling that he will keep mum. I take on board the Minister's words about the funding of the transport plan. Can I, therefore, have an assurance from him that he will intervene, and contact the Deputy Prime Minister to ensure that the threatened cut of up to £44 million in the funding for East Sussex county council is not implemented? Some £44 million stands to come out of the budget of East Sussex county council.

The Government have vast resources available. They have to wrestle with priorities, but I cannot think of a higher priority than saving the lives of children, elderly people, and the thousands of people who die unnecessarily in car accidents every year.

3.57 pm

Mr. Tom Watson (West Bromwich, East): As local authorities, the highways agency and car manufacturers grapple with technological advance, and as the police deal with increasing demands on their time, this grim report has come as a timely reminder to us all that inappropriate speed is one of Britain's biggest killers. We are all trying to achieve, through the initiatives that we have talked about today, a culture shift in driver habits similar to that concerning drink driving in the 1970s and 1980s. I welcome the report's assertion that we should have an evidence-led speed management policy. I was particularly pleased to see that the recommendations of the British Medical Association were adopted in paragraph 15. It now seems that health statistics will be built into the database of accident spots.

Has the Minister considered whether the insurance industry could play a role in establishing an accurate picture of where road traffic accidents occur in Britain? Every time I look at my insurance policy bill, it is always a reminder to me that the industry is aware of every last penny that is spent on road traffic accidents in Britain.

The emphasis in the document on reducing risk is important. The £10 million that the Government are about to spend on the pilot network of pedestrian training schemes, particularly in deprived areas, should be welcomed. At the risk of derision from everyone in the room, I have to say that I am a member of the Tufty club generation, and we have to bring up a new generation of young people who have road safety at the heart of their education.

Paragraph 30 of the report, which recommends an increase in dedicated cycle routes, is timely. In a letter, my neighbouring Member of Parliament, the Minister for Transport, told me that he had doubled the funding for dedicated cycle routes. That may have been partly in fear of the Chairman of the Transport Committee and partly because he is a committed cyclist. I was tantalised by the announcement from the Department for Transport, which said that my constituency, West Bromwich, East, was to be the recipient of some of the additional money. Imagine my disappointment when I realised that it had the column wrong, and it was the constituency of Madam Deputy Speaker, my hon. Friend the Member for Halesowen and Rowley Regis (Sylvia Heal), which was receiving a grant for a primary care trust to do cycle education training. You cannot win everything; we may have better luck next time.

People know that speed kills, but I am not sure whether they appreciate when they are the wheel of a vehicle what different speeds do. I wonder whether the Department for Education and Skills has a role to play in that respect. For instance, the national curriculum might use the speeds of vehicles when practical examples are required in maths training. Although the information is built into the highway code test, young people are schooled to pass the test rather than to make the correct risk assessment when they are driving. There is no Education Minister present today, but I want us to make progress in that respect.

Caroline Flint (Don Valley): Is the hon. Gentleman aware that many young people are allowed to take their cycling proficiency test in school? Lots of American high schools organise driving tests, which the students take in school. What does the hon. Gentleman think of that idea?

Mr. Watson: It is an excellent idea, which we could explore in future debates.

The report focused on particular types of drivers who are most vulnerable to speeding, and I want to focus on the commercial sector. The role of business in accident prevention is often overlooked. Accidents caused by speeding company cars and other working vehicles claim an incredible number of lives each year, and the figures are on the increase. More than 1,100 people die every year in work-related road accidents in company cars or commercial vehicles. Statistically, company car drivers are the worst motorists—last year, almost a third were involved in an accident—and they are significantly more likely to have been involved in a road accident than any other group. For a variety of reasons, company car drivers tend to be less responsible than other drivers. Three quarters of them make telephone calls while in their cars. More worryingly, 16 per cent. admit that they are always under pressure from their bosses to drive to ever-increasing deadlines. No matter how good the speed management of a road, drivers who feel pressurised to speed will continue to do so. The only thing that will change that is a serious call in the workplace to change the way in which businesses treat their drivers, but companies would sooner keep their costs down and increase their short-term productivity by encouraging employees to drive inappropriately fast.

Fortunately, in the long term, statistics can demonstrate financial incentives for companies to change their car-driving policies. The average cost of repairing a company car is £750; a van repair costs nearly £1,400 and a commercial vehicle £4,500. Those figures do not include the cost of lost productivity of an employee taken out of the work environment.

[Mr. Watson]

There is an incentive for companies to introduce risk assessment schemes, but when only one in five commercial drivers and company car drivers receive risk assessment, it is no surprise that the TUC has today called for the Health and Safety Executive to put pressure on companies to give adequate risk assessment training to their employees.

There is a lot more I would like to have said on this matter, but in deference to my colleagues who have not spoken I shall close this part of my speech. I want to mention briefly the engineering involved in road traffic management. It has been said that traffic-calming solutions are often simple, but I wonder whether the pool of expertise in traffic calming on which local authorities can draw is being used appropriately in areas where there are unusual roads.

One of my constituents, a retired police sergeant, Mr. Leonard Phillips, wrote to me recently about the Newton road in my constituency, which has a difficult junction and a blind bend on an incline, and is currently a 40 mph road. After 20 years of savage accidents and in spite of three speed cameras, a speed-checking warning camera and numerous traffic signs, we still have not got the engineering right to reduce the number of road traffic accidents. My personal view is that we should simply lower the speed limit. Council engineers inform me that there would be other safety hazards if they were to introduce traffic lights.

I wonder whether the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions could have a pool of experts to provide a best practice guide for local authority engineers. I also wonder whether there are disparities in road traffic safety budgets between local authorities. If my own borough of Sandwell were to receive an increase, we might be able to get a long awaited zebra crossing on the Hamstead road, which causes many of my constituents great concern.

A mild criticism of the report is that paragraphs 60 and 61 on the siting and colour of speed cameras were a little harsh. It seems logical that we should put speed cameras at the most appropriate places on roads and that we should target accident black spots first. As I said at the start of my speech, if we want to achieve a culture change in Britain, we must take public opinion with us. Motorists and the public alike have a genuine fear that if we allow unfettered use of safety cameras, we will simply have a forest of safety cameras that are used to generate revenue rather than to increase safety. However, I understand my colleagues' concern that the colour yellow might give prior warning to speeding drivers.

I end my remarks here so that everyone can speak this afternoon.

4.7 pm

Mr. Kelvin Hopkins (Luton, North): I shall be brief, as many of the things that I would have said have been said already in hon. Members' fine speeches.

I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), who spoke brilliantly. She produced a splendid report that I, like others, support.

I will address my remarks primarily to my hon. Friend the Minister and his ministerial colleagues, as there are historic precedents for changes in the law governing driving and motoring that we should bear in mind. In the past, we delayed introducing measures that have since saved thousands of lives, and people died in the mean time as a result. Delay is deadly, and I hope that the Government will take the bull by the horns and act quickly so that many lives are saved.

The introduction of the law on crash helmets is an example. I do many things in my constituency. I am a patron of the local acquired brain injury group, several members of which had crashes on motorcycles before crash helmets were required and were damaged for life. Of course, many others died. After that, we had the issue of seat belts. I was one of the people who bought seat belts for my car, fitted and wore them. I was mocked by some of my more macho friends who thought that it was a little feeble and that I should be bold and drive fast. We all know that culture. I told them that I wanted to live. I studied engineering and applied mathematics when I was younger, so I know about the laws of motion and the forces of deceleration. We know what happens to a tomato when it is dropped from a first-floor window on to a concrete pavement. I think of that when I think of the human body hitting a solid object. We must think in those terms. The human body is frail, soft and easily damaged. I have often said that if one walks along the pavement into a lamp post at 4 mph, one can do serious damage to one's head. Imagine the impact at 40 mph. A little understanding of engineering and science helps in these matters.

Two of my dear friends in my youth died in car accidents. They might not have died had they worn seat belts. As soon as seat belts were introduced, people immediately adapted to them and there was no problem. However, there was a serious problem about wearing seat belts in other people's cars. I used to wear a seat belt in other people's cars and was chastised by my friends, who felt that I was accusing them of being bad drivers. I used to reply, "No, it's not you; it's the youngster who tears round the corner and crashes into you." At that point, they would make some unparliamentary remark about my cleverness, but I shall leave that on one side.

Every year that we delayed implementing the compulsory wearing of seat belts, 300 people died on the roads and many thousands more were seriously injured. Simply by implementing the compulsory wearing of belts, which did not cost much, we have saved tens of thousands of lives. Therefore, acting quickly now that the evidence is before the Government is vital.

A local police officer has made representations to me that, whatever we do in technology terms, we must also have the personnel to police it. Technology is not a perfect substitute for police officers in the traffic division. We need traffic police as well as technology to ensure that the law is enforced.

Tom Brake: I raised the issue of speed cameras and hand-held devices with my local police force, which said that it took four officers to use them: two at the point where they used the gun, and two at the point where they tried to stop the driver, in case there was an altercation. That means that 25 per cent. of the police in the London borough of Sutton are taken off street patrolling to use the hand-held device, so I agree that resources are key to the issue.

Mr. Hopkins: I thank the hon. Gentleman for that intervention.

I repeat that the Government must act and should not be nervous about challenging the remnants of the macho culture to which I referred. It is diminishing; people are becoming more sensible and the culture is changing. There was a time when the motorist was such a fearsome beast who would vote against any Government who dared to impose restrictions on driving that every Government trembled every time they challenged him. However, that is not the case now. Families with children, elderly people and the great majority of motorists know that the restrictions are sensible. Therefore, the Government have nothing to fear from public opinion by acting quickly and strongly to reduce death on the road.

4.12 pm

Mr. Mark Lazarowicz (Edinburgh, North and Leith): I, too, congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), the Chairman of the Select Committee, and the rest of the Committee on producing an excellent report, not least because of the wealth of information that it brings together. The wealth of detail that it provides fully justifies, if anyone needed further justification, radical measures to tackle the menace of speeding on our roads.

I endorse in the strongest terms possible the Select Committee's call for the urgent and radical action that is required to effect a dramatic reduction in the numbers killed and injured on our roads. I, too, welcome what the Government have done so far. In my city, thanks to funding from the Scottish Executive, 11 20-mph zones are in operation, and another 20 are in the pipeline.

However, I share some of the disappointment expressed by some hon. Members that more has not yet been done to take the Government's safety strategy further forward. We seem to be caught in a world of feasibility studies, demonstration projects and pilot studies; a more comprehensive approach is needed on implementation. I know that there are demands on civil service time and the Government have limited time to introduce legislation, but it was a pity that, after the end of a consultation on road traffic penalties, the Government took almost a year and a half to come up with a response. It is a little concerning that the response does not say when we might see in legislation some of the required changes. I hope that the Minister will say today when we will see some of the changes recommended in the review.

The problem with a delay in making legislative proposals is that it can give the wrong message and suggest that we are not taking the issue as seriously as others. We must make it clear by legislation and effective enforcement that when we say we want to change attitudes we mean it. The most effective way to change attitudes is to underline it with effective enforcement and powerful legislation.

I urge on the Government early implementation of the recommendations of the road traffic penalties review, particularly regarding two-tier penalties for speeding to make the consequences of speeding over a certain limit even more serious. I support the Select Committee's recommendation about the decision to paint speed cameras yellow and to impose restrictions on where they can be sited. It was a mistake, not just because of the reasons that my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich gave earlier, but because it risks sending out the message that catching speeding motorists too effectively is somehow unfair and that a little bit of speeding is okay. We must challenge and change that. I hope that the Government will reconsider the guidance that they have issued on speed cameras.

Mr. Kidney: I mentioned earlier that we have had cameras in Staffordshire since 1995. The police have had no problem with painting them yellow, giving notice about where they are and choosing where to put them. They even put the locations on the internet. None of that has damaged their ability to reduce accidents involving fatalities and serious injuries. Is my hon. Friend making too much of a meal of this point?

Mr. Lazarowicz: I respect what my hon. Friend says, but there is little indication either way of the effects of different approaches to speed camera positioning. I accept that in some cases advance warning about speed cameras can encourage speed reduction but—this point is made in the report—it is dangerous to give the message that it is only at those points that one might be caught for speeding. In Scotland, where the matter is devolved, our cameras are still grey. It would be interesting to see a comparison between the effect on policy in Scotland and England.

Speed cameras are an important method of tackling this problem precisely because installing them is now self-financing. Although some of the measures suggested by the Select Committee to tackle speeding are expensive and we should not shy away from spending, many would not require large sums of money, or much legislative time. On the national speed limit for instance, I find it hard to understand how we allow vehicles to be driven up to 60 mph on so many country lanes and minor roads. Like most hon. Members, I am old enough to remember the time when the national speed limit was 50 mph. The current limit was put in place simply by an order. A one-paragraph order could bring it down to 50 mph again. It would not require Second and Third Readings and Committee stages in both Houses. It could be dealt with very easily and speedily.

We do not need legislation to encourage the police and the prosecution authorities to ensure that they enforce the existing speed limits rather than allow, as they still do in too many places, a 10 mph leeway. Let us spend more money on street safety schemes. Let us also make it easier to put speed reduction schemes such as 20 mph zones in place. I agree with the hon. Member for Mid-Dorset and North Poole (Mrs. Brooke) and my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Hopkins) that we must make it legislatively possible for 20 mph zones to be put in place. In my city of Edinburgh, the council tried to operate the schemes and found that carrying out the physical work required by the guidance could be a major task that might inhibit full implementation. The council wants to introduce a 20 mph scheme in Edinburgh's new town in my constituency, but the guidance requires entry points into a 20 mph zone from a 30 mph zone to be marked with physical entry features, not just by signs. As hon. Members will know, the new town is a world heritage site, so it is not a matter of laying down cheap concrete. The entry points must be high quality and prestigious architecturally. The council estimated that it would cost £500,000 to introduce a 20 mph zone in an area of only one square mile. Ideally, the default speed limit in urban areas might be 20 mph. It would be easier to declare 20 mph zones in larger areas within towns and cities, which would reduce costs dramatically and help to put speed limit schemes into effect more quickly.

Perhaps because I have young children, I feel strongly about this issue. Having children made me much more aware of our severe accident record for children in comparison with our generally good accident record compared with the rest of Europe. I want to tell the Minister that I am not alone in feeling so strongly about the issue. The attendance of hon. Members at today's debate suggests the strength of feeling on the matter. I have never heard anyone at my surgery complaining about speed limits or speed cameras. Rather, people come to see me time and again demanding action to control speed limits and stop traffic speeding through their streets. Constituents want more 20 mph limits and more home zones—and they want them now. They want speed limits enforced, not ignored. I am sure that the Minister appreciates that, and I ask the Government to build on what they have already achieved with more action, more quickly.

Mr. David Drew (Stroud): I shall be brief. As always at this stage of the debate, it has all been said. I shall not elaborate on points that have already been made, but I want to respond to a couple of issues that have not been fully covered.

I follow my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, North and Leith (Mr. Lazarowicz) in stressing the extent to which the planning system can cause problems when traffic calming measures are put in place. If I were not present here today, I would be attending a presentation on traffic calming. The area where I live has been fortunate in getting its humps taken out: it is a cul de sac, so the humps did not seem an effective use of funds. For the rest of the estate, however, we are seriously considering putting traffic calming measures in place. Why getting that done has taken so long is partly a question of money. When the process started, the funding did not seem too great, but it turned out that an inordinate amount was involved. Is there enough flexibility in the system for people to have limited but effective traffic calming in their areas?

Returning to this morning's briefing, it was interesting to hear about behavioural changes in drivers rather than physical barriers alone. It may not be cheap, but if physical barriers can be used to make people think harder about how they are driving, it could be a way forward.

I have had previous dealings as a councillor. I am still a parish councillor, as I always tell people, so I have a vested interest because I shall be putting the measure forward and we will ask for a contribution. The planning system involves delay and, in the past, I have visited people with objections to try to persuade them to remove them. I have had some success with that. It is not often that a politician claims success for something that he has done directly, although maybe he does claim success for things that he has not done.

The way in which a small group of people—sometimes business men with vested interests—can create effective opposition, despite the fact that the vast majority of people want traffic calming, should be examined. I know that that is not the Minister's direct responsibility, but I hope that, if and when we get planning changes, the rule will be examined through negotiation and liaison with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to try to make the desired changes more rapid. Most people want to slow down vehicles and they want action sooner rather than later.

My next point has been alluded to several times in the past, but I shall make it a direct challenge to the Minister. I cannot understand why we are shilly-shallying around by not banning people from using mobile phones while driving. I speak as a cyclist, which is why I am here today. I ride my bike around Stroud, which is why I am much fitter than I used to be. There is one thing that I find galling and that puts me in more peril than anything else. In my experience, nine out of 10 motorists are very good with regard to cyclists, but one out of 10 puts the safety of a cyclist in the lap of the gods. If that one out of 10 is using a mobile phone, the cyclist prays. Those motorists pay no attention whatsoever.

Mr. Hopkins rose—

Mr. Drew: I have obviously started something here. I certainly give way.

Mr. Hopkins: I wonder how my hon. Friend would deal with several of the motorists in my constituency who use mobile phones but have darkened windows in their cars so that one cannot see them using the phones.

Mr. Drew: There is always somebody who can come up with a worse experience.

I do not know why we cannot ban people from using the damn things. People do not need to use a hand-held mobile phone while driving, although the Minister will probably find a reason why. I know that there was a private Member's Bill relating to this, but I hope that we can get on with doing something.

Mr. Jamieson rose—

Mr. Drew: We will get the answer now.

Mr. Jamieson: Just in case we do not have time to cover this point at the end, my hon. Friend might have noticed that we put out a consultation during the summer with a view to introducing legislation that would ban such use of hand-held mobile phones.

Mr. Drew: I am pleased. I am always in favour of consultation, but sometimes we want action.

I draw a parallel with what we did about drink driving. Evidence showing that we reduced incidents by two thirds demonstrates that if we provide the leadership about which my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Kidney) spoke, we can change cultures. It is not easy, but it does happen over time.

I have already intervened on my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), so I shall say briefly that the report is good and gives us much to work with.

I must be careful about what I say about the safer city initiative because it does not extend to my constituency. I shall expand a point that I have made previously. A lot of work must be done to persuade people that holistic changes matter in addition to individual aspects such as traffic calming or the changes to driving behaviour that are encouraged. That requires time, effort and money. The initiative has obviously worked, but no doubt I will receive much criticism from Gloucester citizens for saying that and I will be told to keep my nose out of it. However, I occasionally ride through Gloucester—we do not yet have private estates in terms of cities.

Hon. Members mentioned problems in rural areas. Displacement is the largest current problem caused by congestion. That is the problem that I have with congestion charges, because we must understand where motorists are likely to go. They are likely to use cut-throughs in rural areas. The standard of driving is that of the one in 10 motorists to whom I referred. They drive like a bat out of hell because, if they have been caught up in congested areas of cities, they try to make up time by driving very fast on rural roads. The situation requires enforcement rather than believing that just changing speed limits will make a difference. Many of our villages do not have pavements and people have to rely on walking or cycling to cover short distances—although not sufficiently, in my opinion. If we are to encourage that, we must reduce the speed of traffic. That is achievable. It involves making general changes to speed limits, and the use of repeater signals, so that we can make it clear what speed people should be driving at. I accept that saying, "We did not know that this was a limited area," is an excuse. I hope that those things will happen.

The Government have a big agenda to address, and the Select Committee has done us a favour by setting that big agenda and taking it forward. I hope that all of us—the hon. Members who are present and the people who have come to listen to the debate—agree that this is an incredibly important issue.

I recently received a letter asking why I do not believe in the death penalty, as there are so many child killers out there. My response to that is always, "Well, there are other child killers who—maybe—we do not take seriously enough, and they happen to be people who drive cars." I do not want to use emotive language, but we could do something about that. It would lead to a genuine bonus because many more children would live, due to the changes that we would introduce.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Nicholas Winterton): Before I call the next speaker, I want to say that we are on target, so I hope to call the three remaining speakers before the winding-up speeches.

Mr. Tony McWalter (Hemel Hempstead): I welcome the report—although perhaps not quite as much as other hon. Members, judging by the tone of the debate. I agree that speed is a problem when it is excessive or inappropriate—those terms are often used interchangeably.

I am a motorist, and I am conscious of the extraordinary improvements in my life that a fairly fast method of conveyance has made possible. I am the Member of Parliament for Hemel Hempstead. In the past, the Member of Parliament for that constituency would not have been able to see his children every morning, but I can do that, thanks to a motor vehicle. After I get the train, I am able to convey myself across the Hertfordshire countryside so that I can take my children to school most mornings when I do not have very early meetings.

Motoring is life-enhancing and enjoyable. I speak as an ex-long-distance lorry driver. I have taken motor cycles over most of the countries of Europe. I have driven a sports car for many thousands of miles. Motoring has been one of the pleasures of my life. The fact that it gets you from A to B faster than a horse and cart or a paddle boat is an integral part of that enjoyment. Motoring extends our horizons and it gives us opportunities that we would not have if we did not have motor vehicles. I therefore do not want to start by condemning speed as such.

I do condemn two things, the first of which is excessive speed, which I define—as did the old highway code—as travelling at a speed at which you cannot stop in the distance you see to be clear. That seems to me to be the most fundamental problem. Accidents are often not caused by the straight-line speed of a vehicle, although I do not deny that sometimes—say, when a crash is caused by a blow out—the straight-line speed of the vehicle might make the resulting injuries more serious than they would otherwise have been. However, for the most part, travelling at excessive speed is not the problem. One must drive one's vehicle not in such a way that one avoids hitting people at 10 mph rather than at 30 mph, but in such a way that one avoids hitting people at all.

In the motoring world, a sense grew that motoring was so enjoyable that roads were entirely for motorists, so I welcome the part of the report that points out, as we did in a debate in Westminster Hall 15 months ago, that roads are meant to be shared by lots of different users. We have already heard from my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) about his cycling. Many people other than motorists are road users—cyclists, horse-riders, pedestrians and children playing.

Mr. Lazarowicz: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. McWalter: In a moment.

We should understand that ownership of our roads is shared—there is a varied set of stakeholders. That creates different characteristics, and people should fulfil their obligations depending on the character of road that they are traversing. There is utter confusion at the moment. I know of a road so full of different colours, markings and scratchings that nobody has a clue what they mean—the markings are supposed to take the place of a pedestrian crossing, which would be more expensive. People did slow down for about the first three days after they appeared, and promptly resumed their speed when they realised that the markings did not mean very much.

I would have liked something about road markings to have appeared in the report. One of the most fundamental and brilliant road markings in British motoring history is the speed limit that, in effect, says, "You must go at no miles per hour." It involves painting the road black and white and adding a flashing orange light. It says, "If there is somebody in the vicinity of the entrance to this piece of road, you have no priority and you must stop." It is one of the most brilliant pieces of road safety provision. Now we have a complete mess, which was not sorted out by the debate 15 months ago, and I welcome the opportunity to begin to sort it out. However, that will not happen if we fail to distinguish between excessive speed and speed as such.

I have been fighting tooth and nail in my constituency to get 20 mph limits, so I am pleased to hear that some hon. Members have achieved them. As the report says, in a couple of my villages—Nettledon and Water End—cars whistle through at such a rate that it is impossible for someone sensibly to visit a neighbour living on the opposite side of the road. There is a 30 mph limit—East Sussex will be envious of that—but nobody respects it and it is never policed. In any case, the road is a rat run and the limit is never protected. I do not merely want a 20 mph limit: I want that limit to be policed.

I welcome what the report says about rural roads, where I want a 40 mph limit to be introduced. I said that I enjoy motoring, but I do not enjoy motoring on roads that only have passing places where vehicles are hurtling at me at 60 mph. If I am doing 30 mph, an impact with a another vehicle travelling at 60 mph would be a 90 mph impact, and one or the other, if not both, of the drivers would perish, unless I am quick enough to get out of his way—it nearly always is a "he".

The report is right to urge a 40 mph limit, but it must be policed. However, limits are never policed and where there are clear limits, people will continue not to honour them. Where are all the traffic police? They are on the only roads that are not meant for shared use—motorways. There should be no pedestrians or learner drivers on motorways: they are intended for motorists. It is interesting that the "Toad of Toad Hall" fixation, in which the only people who matter are motorists, extends to policing. If policing traffic is about protecting horse-riders, cyclists, pedestrians and children at play, traffic police should be where those people need to be protected. We have failed utterly to do that.

The fixation with motorway limits is a fixation about the death of motorists, but people are 10 times more likely to perish on a rural road or a council estate road than on a motorway. Because of the fixation with speed, the report appears to be opposed to the idea that cars and motor cycles allow us to do things that we could not otherwise do. I know that the Committee vote must have been fairly close on the matter. As I urged the Minister in the previous debate, there is no reason why motorists should be limited to 70 mph on roads that are entirely for motorists.

I spent most of the summer doing 80 mph on French roads—the limit is 81 mph. That is not especially dangerous, although it becomes dangerous when someone approaches from behind at 130 mph with the intention of blowing the other driver off the road. That is dangerous and causes accidents, and in two weeks in France it happened to me more often than it happens to me for the other 50 weeks of the year in Britain, because our driving codes are a great deal better than theirs. Of course, it still happens in Britain, but has anyone ever heard of someone being prosecuted for travelling too near another driver at an unreasonable speed? I never have. What happens is that people are prosecuted for the straight-line speed that they are doing, even if they have temporarily speeded up to 90 mph to get out of the way of a car that is travelling at 130 mph. Both drivers are penalised in that situation. We should try to arrive at an understanding of speeding whereby we prosecute "hurtling", as I called it in the previous debate. That means prosecuting people who travel at a speed at which they cannot stop within the distance they see to be clear.

We have to establish a sense of shared ownership of most of our road system, and the report goes a long way towards doing that. We should give local authorities the opportunity of creating not only 20 mph zones but 5 mph zones in places where children play. We should not conduct the debate in such a way that we think entirely about speed, rather than excessive speed. It is time that we recognise that motoring brings tremendous benefits and value to people in terms of family life and other things. If we can get the balance right, we should accept the report and even entrench it, but we should ensure that the traffic activity is conducted away from motorways. Let the motorways be policed by cameras, but we should also allow higher speeds on motorways to ensure the journey times that people now expect without the dangers that currently oppress them.

Caroline Flint (Don Valley): I welcome the Select Committee report and the opportunity to take part in the debate. I must own up to the fact that in a previous life I worked in the transport and planning department of the Greater London Council and oversaw some project administration in west London. Some of my babies are still out there. Today, I shall focus on my constituency and its experience in dealing with road traffic management. I shall cite cases of constituents of mine, some of whom have been tragically affected when speeding has caused the death of a loved one.

One hon. Member said earlier that more pedestrian crossings were needed. I do not know if it is the case today and I do not claim to be an expert, but when I worked in transport and planning, the experts' argument was that there were more accidents at pedestrian crossings than elsewhere. That is an easy answer. If a slower speed limit is not imposed on the approach to pedestrian crossings, people may be doing 30 or 40 mph when they come up to the crossings. Pedestrians often have a false sense of security when they walk on to the crossing, thinking that cars are going to slow down.

That is the heart of the debate. An holistic approach is needed to the problem. It is not just that we need to reduce speeds—we must also consider the nature of the community in which the car is travelling and whether we make it easier for the car. Should the road and the built environment be dominated by the motorist's needs or by the needs of the community and pedestrians? I shall elaborate on that later.

The Government should be congratulated on their efforts to encourage speed reduction, as well as on tackling issues such as home zones and urban planning.

We should not regard roads as separate from the residential areas where we live, or the places where we shop or work. Some of the problems are caused by the officers in charge locally who advise councillors. If they do not agree with communities who want lower speed limits, they can produce dozens of reasons why those lower limits should not be introduced, such as not enough people are being killed or maimed; people will not obey a reduced speed limit; or the route is part of a major road.

Like many Members present, I represent a mining constituency. It includes urbanised areas as well as villages in the countryside. There are many A-roads where the speed limit changes from 60 to 40 mph, and there is no effort to reduce the speed limit when the road goes through a small village. One such area is Austerfield, which I shall mention again.

There is a real problem with changing the mindset of people who have operated in a pro-car, pro-road culture for many years. Many councillors in Doncaster—certainly the cabinet member responsible for the matter, councillor John Hoare—are engaged in trying to consider the community's needs, which are not merely based on statistics that determine that a certain number of accidents or deaths must take place before speed reduction can be considered. I urge the Government in their guidelines to local authorities and through the Local Government Association to ensure that the voices of communities that demand lower speed limits are heard, not simply dismissed if they do not fit in with the technicalities of calculating the statistics on road deaths.

Austerfield is on an A-road, and people wanted to reduce the speed limit from 40 to 30 mph. It took two years for them to obtain an order, and I am pleased to say that the notice has now been put up on a lamppost. I do not want to be too partisan, but two Conservative councillors went along with the recommendations from officers that the speed limit should not be reduced. That is a classic example of councillors listening to the experts rather than to the local community and not feeling able to counter the experts' arguments.

In that case, we successfully opposed the recommendations, but there are many other communities in which the people want to reduce speed limits. In Warmsworth, residents raised a petition for a 20 mph zone, but were told that it would not be possible to implement it before 2004. Auckley parish council wanted to introduce a 20 mph zone outside three local schools and has been specific about which areas it wants to target, but it has been told that the issue is low priority. There is a problem with the mindset of some highway officers who are unresponsive to public demands.

Resources have also been mentioned, but so many issues have been raised today that a bottomless pit could be required to take them all. It is often argued that road safety measures cost too much. As I have seen when I have gone in to do battle with highway officers, they sometimes provide so much for one particular area—chicanes, road bumps, signs, road markings—that traffic-calming measures can be introduced only in a few other areas.

I am not an expert in the matter but, as a layperson, I question why it is necessary to overload one stretch of road with so many different types of traffic-calming measures to achieve a result. As a driver, and as one who has listened to constituents who live in areas where such schemes have been introduced, I have found that the flashing sign is one of the most effective measures. If a sign starts flashing when a driver approaches a village, it has a huge psychological impact. More is not necessarily best. If a measure is effective, and if it would allow us to cover more areas, so be it. It is not good enough to deny some communities a simple flashing sign on the basis that millions of pounds have been spent on one or two stretches of road in Doncaster.

Also on the subject of resources, we should look laterally at the other pots of money from which the Government provide funding. Some hon. Members say that such money is not allocated to their constituencies but we in Doncaster have neighbourhood renewal money and new deal for communities money. Some of that money can be used to examine the built environment to make it safer for people and to improve the quality of their communities and homes. If the way in which traffic and the road environment has an impact on the home environment is not examined, it should be. If the money were used, that would relieve pressure on the Highways Agency's other budgets so that it could get on with dealing with those areas that currently receive no money.

Much more lateral thinking is needed across departmental boundaries about how we can examine the whole picture. The Department of Transport should ensure that other Departments with responsibilities for regeneration, planning for quality homes and streets, and policing have a budget to examine that important issue. I have seen for myself how urban planning in communities throughout Europe has had a huge impact in slowing cars down by, as was mentioned earlier, creating obstacles for them to go round and making it difficult for them to go from A to B. In this country, we are sometimes too focused on detail such as high-quality lighting. I am not against that, but the danger is that we will create an environment in which the car is king—or queen—and rules the roost.

Several new housing developments are being built in my area. If we must change, let us assess the impact of planning on such developments and how we can make what can be very large estates much more amenable to communities. We should have kids playing in the streets, not just another outpost of car culture. We need planning to determine how roads are built around an estate.

Town and parish councils are another source of resources, although they might not like me saying that. I pay tribute to Mr. Barry Livsey and his town council, Finningly, which paid for a speed gun for the local community constable. In partnership, one can work with others to find resources. The Countryside Agency has a fantastic fund called the "Vital Villages Campaign", which provides several types of grant for transport and for slowing down cars going through communities. The key point is that we must make people aware of such sources of money so that they can work in a more imaginative way across different funding lines to achieve what they want to achieve.

We know that not wearing seat belts was a major cause of road deaths. It is a fantastic tribute to a Labour Government and to Barbara Castle that we managed to change the law on seat belts. Speeding, drinking alcohol, driving without a licence or insurance, driving when disqualified, and the use of mobile phones all present real challenges for the Government.

In concluding, I should mention Mr. and Mrs. Fox, who tragically lost their son in a road accident because of speeding and who keep me informed of their campaign for reducing speed limits. The Department of Transport should discuss with the Home Office, the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Solicitor General how the criminal justice system deals with survivors and victims of road accidents and their families. I sometimes think that dealing with speeding offences is not seen as warranting the same sensitivity as when someone is raped, murdered or severely injured. I will not go into detail, but there are many questions to be asked about how Mr. and Mrs. Fox's case was dealt with. It is important to note that people deserve justice, and it needs to be understood how seriously a speeding offence can affect real people's lives.

Mr. Patrick McLoughlin (West Derbyshire): I would like to declare that I am joint chairman of the all-party road safety group along with two other Members, one of whom is here this afternoon.

I congratulate the Committee on its report. I would also like to thank the Select Committee Chairman, who addressed a public meeting in my constituency in September in Carver. Concern was expressed at the meeting about the road traffic regulations and a speed limit that is believed to be excessive—a belief with which I agree. There is also an attempt to reduce to 30 mph the speed limit on the A623 through Carver. The hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) would doubtless agree that the presentation was very effective.

I would like to echo the point made by the hon. Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint). When we make representations to local authorities on the introduction of new speed regulations, they seem to come up with a huge number of things that need to be done to put them into place. Perhaps the Minister should review the type of regulations that local authorities insist are complied with before they will even consider putting in 30 mph speed limits or any road-slowing mechanisms. We tend to go for a gold-plated job, rather than considering whether more could be done for similar money that would have a far greater impact.

There is another matter on which the Committee should be especially congratulated. The very nature of its report means that it has brought plenty of publicity to the issue. If I have a criticism of the Government it is that I recall we had a debate in the Chamber on road safety every year until 1997. Since 1997, similar debates have not taken place on the Floor of the House, which I regret. They enabled us all to think a little about some issues that surrounded road safety. I do not think that there is a problem with the commitment of any politician on road safety. We all come across fatalities in our constituencies. West Derbyshire has a huge number of visitors, with more than 20 million people coming into the Peak national park each year. Obviously, the result is serious road congestion problems, but also fatalities on the roads.

It is important that the Minister consider how local authorities bring in regulations and other speeding measures. When I was at the Department of Transport with my hon. Friend the Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope), we launched a campaign that still runs today—the "Kill your speed, not a child" campaign. The report shows the difference that speed makes to the likely outcome of an accident. Nine out of 10 pedestrians would be killed if a car hit them at 40 mph, but half of them would be killed at 30 mph. At 20 mph, nine out of 10 pedestrians would survive. We have to put that message across.

We must also tell the Government that they should look closely at how local authorities implement safety measures. When roads are constructed, the implications for and the impact on neighbouring roads should be considered. The A50 in my constituency is basically a link road between the M1 and the M6. I have never regarded it as the Doveridge bypass, as I was pressing for it to be. The impact of its completion on subsidiary roads in the area has not been dealt with at all, and such matters can bring serious problems.

I was told that the speed limit on the A623 could not be reduced to 30 mph because it would cost a lot to put up all the necessary signage, make certain road pattern changes and possibly put down differently coloured tarmac to make people aware that they were entering a 30 mph area. One night, I drove through a village called Idridgehay that had a 30 mph speed limit. There was no warning, only a 30 mph sign as one enters the village. People respect the limit because they know that there is danger, but they need to be warned of the danger in such areas.

Although I congratulate the Committee and thank its Chairman personally for coming to West Derbyshire to listen to that specific case, I urge the Government to consider how local authorities sometimes use all the regulations that have to be implemented as a reason not to do anything, or to do deal with an extremely limited number of cases. The Minister could make a quick impact in that regard, which would benefit everyone. I could say much more on the issue, but as time is short I shall leave him with that message.

4.59 pm

Mr. Christopher Chope (Christchurch): This has been a really good debate. Following up on the point made so excellently by my hon. Friend the Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. McLoughlin), when I was the Minister responsible for roads and road safety, we had an annual debate in the House of Commons main Chamber, which went on for five hours. We can see from today's debate that three hours is not enough to do justice to one aspect of road safety. I hope that the Minister will take back a strong message to the powers that be that we need a full debate on the wider issues of road safety in the main Chamber during the new Session. I congratulate the Committee and all who have spoken in this debate on the wisdom that they have brought to it. We know that the issue is serious for so many of our constituents.

It is a mistake for us to be caricatured as anti-motorist. I know that the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs Dunwoody) was only joking when she said, in response to an interruption, that that was the motorists fighting back. That sort of joke can be misinterpreted. The hon. Member for Hemel Hempstead (Mr. McWalter) brought a degree of balance to the debate. We must emphasise that we have, for the most part, highly responsible and good motorists in this country. We have the best road safety record in Europe, but our motorists have to put up with the highest tax burden on motoring—£38 billion a year. They also have to put up with the lowest investment in roads anywhere in Europe, apart from Greece, and they have to put up with that lack of investment at a local level as well.

Let us pay some tribute to our motorists, and give some balance to the debate. As the hon. Member for Hemel Hempstead said, what is important is that speed should be appropriate for the circumstances. Obviously, all speed limits can only be a proxy for the requirement set out clearly in the highway code that people should not go too fast for the circumstances. One does not need a PhD to explain that if it is raining, icy, dark and windy, or if there are children around, people will have to moderate their speed more than in cases where those circumstances do not apply.

We thought at one moment that the Government were going to adopt a completely new 20 mph speed limit for all urban areas. That would be a very big mistake. I do not know if the Minister is going to announce it this afternoon, but I think that if he were, it would be a big mistake. It is quite obvious to people that on many urban roads, in particular circumstances, a speed of 30 mph is perfectly all right. To have a mandatory 20 mph speed limit would be the wrong solution.

When I was in government, we introduced the 20 mph zones, and we introduced the idea that to reinforce those zones we had to have engineering measures that would reinforce the requirements on the motorist to respect any changes in conditions. When I was a Minister I went to Holland—I do not know if the present Minister has been there—to look at some of its zones, in which there is a very good road safety record.

I want to concentrate on one aspect: road engineering. Inevitably, if a Committee produces a report just on speed, it will miss out other areas in which the Government can assist. Traffic-calming measures are largely issues of engineering. The Transport Research Laboratory report No. 382 is entitled "The Numerical Context for Setting National Casualty Reduction Targets". It is an important report and one of the speakers has already referred to the laboratory and the expertise it brings to the subject. It says that in setting out the different policies and the different impacts that they can have on reductions in road casualties, new road safety engineering measures are highest in the league table. Some of those are the areas covered in this excellent report. Road safety engineering measures require resources.

Perhaps it is just spin or leaks from the Department, but I am concerned about what the Government may do to try to meet the demanding but quite proper road safety targets that they have set. The previous set drove down road casualties significantly. Perhaps the Government are worried, as I am, that in 2001 there was the first increase in deaths and serious road injuries for many years. However, it would be wrong of the Government to think that they can just blame motorists and say that it is all because motorists are driving too fast. Many accidents are caused by errors of judgment that have a disproportionate impact. A small or momentary error of judgment, as the hon. Member for Hemel Hempstead will know from his experience as a lorry driver, can result in a fatality.

The essence of engineering measures is to try to reduce the impact of those errors of judgment in terms of road casualties. That is why we introduced motorways and dual carriageways. That is why we have crash barriers down the middle of motorways and white lines. It is amazing that, under this Government, a special pressure group has been set up to try to have white lines painted more clearly on some country roads. That should go without saying. The local highway authority should be responsible for keeping white lines clear. Those steps and traffic-calming measures are designed to mitigate the impact of errors of judgment.

We cannot force people to use pedestrian crossings, but we can encourage them to do so if we provide them. As my hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Chris Grayling) said, one sometimes wonders whether there is a mismatch between the resources allocated to safety on the trains, for example, and those allocated to safety on the roads. For a relatively modest investment, one can put in pedestrian crossings and get a very good return.

Another example of something that provides a good return on an investment is 20 mph zones. On page 5 of the response to the Committee's report, the Government say in answer to recommendation (d):

> "We are giving separate grant funding of £3.5 million over financial years 2001-02 and 2002-03 to 28 local highway authorities to introduce 20mph Zones".

Let us consider exactly what that means in context. It means that 28 local authorities will have £125,000 each to spend over two years. However, £125,000 scarcely buys one zone or pedestrian crossing. By giving so little money, the Government are washing their hands of the responsibility to go for it in a big way. If we could get motorists to travel at much lower speeds in urban areas, particularly where there are children, we would have an enormous dividend in improved road safety and be able to reverse the awful statistic that this country has a much higher number of child deaths than elsewhere. I hope that the Government will consider the issue of resources and not just play party politics with it.

Yesterday, the Secretary of State for Transport announced that there would be an extra £145 million a year to deal with some pinch points on our main road network, but what is £145 million, given that motorists collectively pay £38 billion a year in taxes? Spread over five years, £145 million is only £1 per motorist per year. That is not big money, yet the Government dressed it up as a major announcement. They need to put many more resources into this area, as the Committee identified. However, just talking about putting more money into transport plans is not the whole answer, because those plans embrace public transport as well as expenditure on roads. I hope that the Minister will respond to the legitimate cry for help and more resources for local authorities.

5.9 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. David Jamieson): This has been a full and interesting debate in which 14 contributions have been made. First, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) and her Committee on their report and on giving us the opportunity to debate such an important matter. My hon. Friend did not do herself proud: I have enormous admiration for her. She is dogged and determined, but I have always found her most charming. The report has given us the opportunity to review a number of important matters. My hon. Friend started with chilling statistics. Nine people a day are killed on our roads and about 10 times as many are seriously injured. The figure for minor injuries was so large that she struggled with it for a moment: more than 250,000 each year suffer a minor injury. Although we have one of the best records in the world for casualties on roads, those figures are not satisfactory and are certainly not matters for complacency.

Together with the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Linda Gilroy), I did a project with schoolchildren in my area. We asked them what they would like local government to do. It was interesting that the top issue was road safety, speed and the danger they felt when on the road. We have taken that forward with the local authorities and have taken some of the matters back into central Government. My hon. Friend the Member for Hemel Hempstead (Mr. McWalter) made an important point. It is not speed in itself that concerns us, but the casualties of speed. We must tackle the problem of inappropriate speeds and people simply ignoring speed limits. The hon. Member for Bexhill and Battle (Gregory Barker) raised the case of his nephew who was knocked down and is still in hospital. Will he convey the best wishes of the House to his nephew? We wish him a speedy recovery.

I shall make some general remarks and then try to answer as many of the specific points as I can. The report makes a vital contribution to the road safety debate. It is just over two and a half years since the Prime Minister announced our road safety strategy. The strategy sets challenging targets of a 40 per cent. reduction in the number of people killed or seriously injured, and a 50 per cent. reduction for children, which reflects the large numbers of children who are killed or injured. The information that the Select Committee has provided will help us to reform and refine our policies as we progress towards our targets and objectives.

We have a generally good record on road safety, but we want to improve it. It will not be easy. We noted the Select Committee's concerns that on the surface we appear to be moving too slowly and that the promises made in the strategy are taking too long to come to fruition. We in government share the Select Committee's impatience to get action on so many of the matters that my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich raised. However, we must ensure that the action that we take and the resources that we use on any matter of road safety, particularly where speed is involved, are proportionate and appropriate to achieve the desired outcome.

I am aware of the re-education and effort needed to deal with complex matters involving engineering and human behaviour. However, we are confident that we are well on target to meet those ambitions to reduce casualties on our roads by 2010. As a number of hon. Members have pointed out, inappropriate and excessive speed accounts for about one third of all road deaths and injuries. In real terms, that equates to over 1,000 deaths and 10,000 serious injuries each year. Although some commentators have challenged that, there is plenty of evidence and we have had a realistic estimate. We welcome the Select Committee's support, based on the evidence that it received during its deliberations. We are not surprised that it found the scale of the speeding problem unacceptable. I assure the hon. Lady, the members of the Select Committee and the House that it is unacceptable to the Government as well. We are aware of the need to take action to deal with excessive and inappropriate traffic speed and to reduce its effects on accidents, with the tragic consequences and suffering that they bring.

We are working on many fronts with local authorities, as it is they that have the local knowledge and, in many instances, are best placed to introduce measures, supported by guidance and funds from the Government. A good example is the success of the Gloucester safer cities project. For five years it has considered road safety, in particular how speed management can be addressed over a wide area. Although its final report is not due until next spring, the results so far are very encouraging—deaths and injuries are down by as much as 38 per cent. I commend the project to those who have not had a chance to see it as an example of the efficient use of resources to achieve interesting and valuable results.

The "Road Safety Good Practice Guide" was published in 2001 to assist local authorities and practitioners. A number of hon. Members have said that good practice should be distributed. This guide is an excellent example of how we can pass experience from one area to another, so that they can learn from each other. I strongly commend the document to those who have not seen it. We shall keep it regularly renewed so that it is always relevant.

My hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich made some important points in addition to the matters raised in the report. She spoke about the importance of Government departments working together. I agree with that. We have worked particularly closely with the Home Office on matters of sentencing and with the police. A number of hon. Members have questioned the commitment of the police force and the Home Office to road policing. A brief statement has been sent to me by the Home Office. It says:

> "We fully recognise the important contribution that road traffic policing makes to reducing deaths and injuries on the roads. That is why improving safety and reducing casualties is one of the police service's over-arching aims and objectives. We do not propose to change this."

I hope that that will assist hon. Members who raised the point.

Mrs. Dunwoody: Does the Minister interpret that as meaning that there will be a clear statement to chief constables that road traffic policing must be part of their core responsibilities, or as being a general statement that we are worried about road safety?

Mr. Jamieson: Of course, that is a matter for the Home Secretary, but I think that the statement that I read out is clear. There is no intention to change the fact that it is an over-arching aim of the police service to commit itself to traffic policing.

My hon. Friend also mentioned the important fact that safety cameras and the safety camera partnerships have reduced casualties. I strongly believe that cameras should be clearly visible. They show that that is a place where casualties and hazards occur. However, the proof of the pudding is the fact that, at the sites where cameras have been placed, there has been, on average, a 47 per cent. reduction in casualties. That is the evidence that we need that the cameras should be clearly visible.

Tom Brake: If research were to demonstrate that covert cameras were more effective in reducing accidents, would the Minister support a change?

Mr. Jamieson: If good evidence were produced to show that any road safety measure was effective, of course we would look at it carefully and implement the measure where appropriate. I can tell the hon. Gentleman that, on the sites that were chosen because they suffered from having a considerable number of casualties, the presence and visibility of the camera substantially reduced the number. That is not mere academic research, but practical and tangible evidence before our eyes, which we cannot ignore.

My hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich spoke about sharing good practice and traffic-calming measures. My previous comments on the document suggest how to achieve that. To underline an important point, it is local authorities that deliver many road safety schemes that help to reduce casualty rates, particularly in connection with speed. We have provided guidance to local authorities, so that their local transport plans include appropriate measures for improving road safety. Most important, we have provided the resources for local authorities to carry that work out.

I referred in an intervention to local authority funding. My hon. Friend's authority has had twice as much funding for local transport plans in its current financial year as it had two years ago. Substantial resources will help local authorities to deliver their plans. It is important for hon. Members to examine the local transport plans in their constituencies carefully to establish whether they are meeting their constituents' objectives.

The hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) chided us for not spending enough. We may not be, but I can assure him that we are spending substantially more than was spent under Conservative Governments. If the hon. Member for Bexhill and Battle will not, perhaps the hon. Member for Christchurch will intervene to clarify whether the Conservative party would meet and match our funding targets for local transport plans.

Mr. Chope: The Conservative party is committed to doing all that is necessary to reduce casualties on our roads. Unlike the present Government, who have presided over an increase in fatalities for the first time in a generation, we had consistent policy success in reducing such fatalities.

Mr. Jamieson: I think that that was a no, but it is good to have that cleared up.

My hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich also spoke about child casualties and asked why we are waiting for schemes to be developed. Several good schemes, such as the home zone scheme, already involve schools. One in my own constituency has been hugely successful, even within the short period in which it has operated. The safer journey to school initiative and many others adopted by local authorities are a response to people's needs in their own locality. There is no blueprint for improvements, which must be appropriate to local needs.

The hon. Member for Epsom and Ewell (Chris Grayling) made some interesting points, although sadly he is no longer with us. Other hon. Members referred to signage of speed limits and 30 mph repeaters. The problem is that they would have to be rolled out throughout the country. Every authority would have to follow the same system; otherwise, confusion would arise between areas that did and those that did not follow it. This has been part of our law and has proved effective during the past 70 years. It is probably one of the most understood aspects of our road speed system.

The hon. Gentleman also asked about placing cameras in areas where no casualties had occurred. It is rather like sending healthy people to hospital. In a new development where a road had been built dangerously, we have to ask how that had happened. These matters should be considered at the early stages of the planning and development process. They were not considered on many estates years ago, but then many people living in estates had no cars. Today they do and these matters should be built into the design of our estates.

Mr. McWalter: I note with interest my hon. Friend's idea that an estate can be built dangerously. Surely the only danger is if the estate is used inappropriately. If the local authority is properly empowered, there is no reason why an estate should not be built where low speeds are an expectation. There is no such thing as a dangerous estate.

Mr. Jamieson: I beg to differ. Some of the estates built in my constituency in the 1960s had long straight roads with many intersections and were very dangerous. Now they have been traffic-calmed and given chicanes and traffic islands, and the casualty rate has substantially reduced. When we are building estates where people will be living, working and shopping, we should construct them so that pedestrians are safe to go about their business.

My hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) made important points about the effect of speed on pedestrians. He may recall the advertisement from my Department about the effect of travelling just 5 mph over the speed limit. The advertisement had high recognition value and, I believe, quite an impact. However, he was right in saying that we must change people's attitudes to driving and speed. We have recently studied the training of new drivers and completed a consultation on that matter. We were given some good ideas, especially by young people.

[Mr. Jamieson]

Another project that will start in a few weeks is the hazard perception test, which will be part of the driving test. It will involve putting hazards up so that people can see whether they are driving appropriately, as people may approach hazards at too great a speed.

Mr. McLoughlin: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Jamieson: I will not give way, as there is little time left and the hon. Gentleman was not present for the whole debate.

The hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Tom Brake) raised several points, not least about the Evening Standard report, which came as a considerable surprise to us. We did not know that we had made an announcement that all road speeds were to be reduced to 20 mph, but it is a newspaper's job to speculate. I think that the paper was anticipating some guidance that we shall give authorities on how they may introduce lower limits. In the end, such matters are for local authorities to decide. On local roads, local authorities must make the decisions, as they are best placed to respond to the local communities and take appropriate action, using the extra money that comes through the local transport plans.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Kidney) has a good record on road safety, and I appreciate his contributions. However, I shall gently take him to task on a couple of issues. He said that we had ducked the issue of pedestrian protection, but we certainly have not. By getting a voluntary agreement with manufacturers in Europe on pedestrian protection, we have brought forward by two years the implementation of the proposals. More people will be alive and fewer will be injured because of the action that we have taken.

My hon. Friend also said that we had ducked the issue of drink driving, but we certainly have not. We have the toughest penalties in Europe, some of the most stringent enforcement and the most powerful advertising. We have not ducked those issues but faced them head-on with appropriate and proportionate action.

This has been an excellent debate. Unfortunately, as always, there is insufficient time to cover all points. If hon. Members want to raise further points and want to correspond with me, I shall be happy to respond. However, I must conclude to give my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich the opportunity to make some concluding remarks.

Mrs. Dunwoody: With the leave of the Chamber, I seek briefly to commend my colleagues who have taken part in the debate. The debate has been serious and has acknowledged the importance of our report. It is important that when the House considers a specific safety problem, whether it is safety on rail, on road or in the air, it gathers evidence that informs elected Members of the size of the problem and the urgency of the need for change, and emphasises the need for our constituents to do something in their general interest. I believe that my Committee has contributed to that process, and that the Government realise how serious the matter is.

I make only one plea: do not let us have to come back here in 12 months' time and have the same debate for the same reasons and with the same difficulties. We are all motorists, pedestrians and users of transport, so let it be safe.

It being half-past five o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the sitting lapsed, without Question put.

HOME DEPARTMENT

PFI/PPP

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the difference was between the price offered in reaching preferred bidder stage and the final contract price for PPP contracts let by his Department in each of the last four years; and if he will make a statement. [45618]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 25 March 2002]: From the best information available, the Department has one project classified as a Public Private Partnership (PPP), but figures are unavailable due to the contract value being based on demand and therefore subject to variation.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the difference was between the price offered in reaching preferred bidder stage and the final contract price for PPP contracts let by his Department in each of the last four years; and if he will make a statement. [45603]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 25 March 2002]: From the best information available, I list the differences between preferred bidder price and final contract price in Private Finance Initiatives (PFI) contracts let in the four years since 1 March 1998:

Year	Net Difference £Million
1/3/98–28/2/99	+0.7
1/3/99–29/2/00	–22.0
1/3/00–28/2/01	–4.1
1/3/01–28/2/02	+0.5
Total	–24.9

Anglo-Italian Meetings

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last six months (a) he and (b) his officials have met their Italian counterparts; and what subjects were discussed. [56892]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 16 May 2002]: Home Office Ministers and officials participate on a regular basis in European and international fora at which their Italian counterparts are present. In particular, working groups of the European Union Member States meet routinely to discuss Justice and Home Affairs matters.

Specifically, the Home Secretary met briefly with the then Italian Minister of Interior, Mr. Claudio Scajola, on 16 November 2001 during a meeting of the Justice and Home Affairs Council in Brussels.

Two representatives of the Italian Ministry of Interior also visited the International Policy Directorate in the Immigration and Nationality Department on 14–15 January 2002 to discuss Italian proposals for the creation of a European border guard.

Correspondence

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter of 15 May from the hon. Member for Manchester, Central, regarding Mr. G S, Ref 14130/02. [71819]

Beverley Hughes: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 19 August.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter to him of 27 May from the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire, regarding Mr. Peter Elliott, a constituent. [71311]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 19 July 2002]: I wrote to the hon. Member on 26 July.

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for West Worcestershire of 21 January. [67619]

Mr. Hilary Benn: I apologise for the delay.

A reply to the hon. Member was dispatched on 8 July 2002.

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 23 August explaining that his letter had been transferred to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office who are responsible for dealing with the issues raised.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average waiting time is for acknowledgement of a passport when handed over the counter in Croydon. [72401]

Beverley Hughes: When a passport or other valuable document is handed into the Public Enquiry Office in Croydon, an acknowledgement letter is issued immediately by the counter officer, listing all of the documents received.

Border Controls

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions have taken place on (a) common border controls for the EU and (b) action against the clandestine transportation of illegal immigrants through member states. [73211]

Beverley Hughes: We discuss migration and asylum issues with our European Union partners on a regular basis. At the Seville European Council on 21 and 22 June, Member States agreed a range of proposals to deliver more rapid progress on migration and asylum. These include measures to increase co-operation between Member States' national border guard services and to tackle illegal migration. Work is already under way to take forward these proposals.

Operation Street Cred

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of Operation Street Cred in the Wirral. [72867]

Mr. John Denham: Operation Street Cred is a new initiative launched by Merseyside Police on 19 June to tackle youth disorder in Wirral. It is too early to make an assessment of the scheme but I have asked Merseyside Police to keep me informed of progress.

Police Identification Procedures

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average time is for fingerprint evidence to be processed in (a) England and Wales and (b) Thames Valley Police in each year since 1997. [73142]

Mr Denham: Figures for the average time for fingerprint evidence to be processed are not collated for England and Wales.

Thames Valley Police Fingerprint Bureau has a target that fingerprint evidence should be processed within 14 days. For 2001, the 14 day target started from the point where the request to process the evidence is received by the Fingerprint Bureau. In 2002 the 14-day target starts from the point when the request has been allocated to a fingerprint expert within the Bureau. Thames Valley Police have only compiled statistics on the time taken to process fingerprint evidence for the last two years, their figures are:

2001: Out of 622 cases, 97.9 per cent. of cases processed within 14.days.

2002 (to date): Out of 354 cases, 99.2 per cent. of cases were processed within 14 days.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent on Identikit support in each police authority area in each year since 1997. [73143]

Mr. John Denham: This information is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Internet Sites (Paedophilia)

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking about UK internet sites used as an incitement to paedophilia. [72701]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Incitement to commit a particular offence, for example of child abuse or of a child pornography offence, whether on a website or otherwise, can be dealt with under existing law. The Internet Watch Foundation (IWF) provides a focal point for reporting material which appears to be illegal. They assess the material and refer any they agree appears illegal to the police for investigation and the Internet Service Provider (ISP) hosting the material, in order that the ISP can close off access to the offending material. Where the material is produced or hosted outside the United Kingdom, arrangements exist for notifying the relevant law enforcement agency and ISP.

The IWF has also recently developed a policy on recommending ISPs to take down newsgroups that regularly contain, or whose names seem to advertise child pornography. We welcome this development and we will continue to monitor the position.

The answer I gave to my hon. Friend the, Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Lawrie Quinn) on 16 July 2002, Official Report, column 230W, detailed the work of the Home Secretary's Task Force on Child Protection on the Internet, including its work toward developing new offences and models of good practice.

Youth Offending Teams

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the population of the potential client group for each local authority with youth offending teams has been; how many offences have been recorded since the youth offending teams were set up; what the pro rata offence figures are; what the general, referral and drugs order funding was for 2002–03; and what the pro rata funding allocation for each offender was in that year; [72325]

(2) if he will publish the criteria for the way in which deprivation indices were calculated as part of the formula for funding youth offending teams in England and Wales, indicating differences in calculations made for youth offending teams in (a) England and (b) Wales. [72334]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The Youth Justice Board's (YJB) funding is for Youth Offending Teams (Yots) not individual offenders. The payments for general, referral order and drugs work in 2002–03 took into account levels of deprivation (covering employment, income, average of ward scores, ward ranks, extent of deprivation and the local concentration of deprivation) the size of the 10–17 population within each Yot area and its geographical size. The deprivation indices were supplied by the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions and are used as standard across Government. The formula was approved by the Home Office and the National Assembly for Wales.

A copy of the Youth Justice Board's outcome decision document has been placed in the Library. The annexes show the size of the 10–17 population and the individual grants allocations. The YJB's data covers convictions not offences.

For Welsh Yots, the Barnett formula was applied initially to arrive at the overall grant allocation for Wales. Individual allocations were then calculated by applying the YJB's funding formula.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet representatives of the Welsh Assembly Government, local authorities with youth offending teams in England and Wales, and the relevant, police, probation and health service bodies, to develop common criteria for assessing (a) funding needs and (b) the contribution of each partner to the work of the youth offending teams. [72335]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The Youth Justice Board issue grants to Youth Offending Teams on the basis of a common funding formula. They first consult Youth Offending Teams (Yots), their statutory partners (including Local Authority Chief Executives) the Home Office and the National Assembly for Wales. But they recognise that the contributions of local statutory partners vary, and plan to put proposals to Ministers on how best to tackle this. There are no plans for such a meeting at present.

Deaths In Custody

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths in custody there were in each of the last 10 years broken down by prison service region, indicating (a) where these were challenged at the inquest and (b) how many challenges were successful. [72329]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Details of deaths in custody for the last 10 years by current Prison Service area and function are set out in the tables. Figures for natural causes deaths are available from 1996 onwards. No information is held centrally about challenges at inquests.

Offenders (Clinical Audits)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the institutions being (a) built and (b) extended to deal with offenders; and whether these will be equipped with the appropriate information technology to enable high quality clinical audits to be carried out. [72330]

Mr. Hilary Benn [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales (YJB) is responsible for commissioning and purchasing juvenile offender secure accommodation from the Prison Service, private sector secure training centres (STC) and local authority secure children's homes, and for setting and monitoring standards.

This year 32 additional places have been opened at Rainsbrook Secure Training Centre and 32 more are due to open at Medway. The STC contracts require trainee personal medical records to be kept to support medical care and investigations, to inform contractors' annual reports and to facilitate any reports needed by courts. The STCs use information technology to maintain these records.

Mobile Telephone Theft

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of robberies recorded by the police in each of the 10 robbery hotspots involved the theft of a mobile phone in the latest period for which figures are available. [73226]

Mr. Denham: Centrally the Home Office does not collect or collate statistics on mobile phone robberies or thefts. Individual police forces do not all routinely collect such figures either, however some do for their own purposes.

Home Office Research Study 235, deposited in the Library, dealt with mobile phone theft and robbery. Information was collected from six police forces on the number of thefts and robberies involving mobile phones for the period 1998–99 to 2000–01. Five of these forces are participating in the street crime initiative covering the 10 forces where the robbery problem is most acute. The proportion of robberies involving the theft of a mobile phone in these force areas is set out in the table.

Prisons

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) adult males, (b) women and (c) juveniles were remanded into Prison Service custody in each of the last 12 months for which figures are available. [73215]

Hilary Benn: The available data are given in the table which shows the number of people received into Prison Service custody as untried prisoners every quarter since April 2001.

			Males by age		All females
Year	Quarter	All ages	Aged under 21	Age 21 and over
2001	Apr–Jun	12,500	3,300	9,200	1,050
	Jul–Sept	12,600	3,300	9,300	1,150
	Oct–Dec	13,700	3,500	10,200	1,150
2002	Jan–Mar	13,300	3,300	9,900	1,190

All data shown are provisional and rounded.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish for each prison the results achieved by the Prison Service on each of its key performance indicators during 2001–02. [72153]

Hilary Benn: The final key performance indicator (KPI) results achieved by each prison are given in the table, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. The cost per uncrowded prison place KPI is formulated at overall Prison Service level. The costs in the table are establishment costs only, which exclude Headquarters overheads and the figures are not therefore comparable with the Prison Service cost per place KPI. Costs for private prisons include an element of capital repayment and are not comparable with the public sector. Staff in private prisons are excluded from the Prison Service staff sickness KPI.

A summary of the performance of each prison is given in the Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts for 2001–02.

Asylum Seekers

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average cost of providing (a) cash-only support and (b) full support was per asylum seeker in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [72931]

Beverley Hughes: The information is not available in the form requested. The average cost of supporting an asylum seeker for one week was:-

£278* for a family.

Those receiving cash only support receive the following amounts each week.

Levels of support with effect from 8 April 2002

Qualifying couple	£59.26
Lone parent aged 18 or over	£37.77
Single person aged 25 or over	£37.77
Single Person aged at least 18 but under 25	£29.89
Person aged at least 16 but under 18 except a member of a qualifying couple)	£32.50
Person aged under 16	£33.50

*Rounded to nearest £1

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the extra cost of providing full support to those asylum seekers currently receiving cash-only support; and if he will make a statement. [72932]

Beverley Hughes: There are currently no plans to restrict the ability for asylum seekers to apply for cash only support. If in the future it is decided to do this a full appraisal of the costs and benefits involved will be undertaken.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals have been detected through the matching of fingerprints as having made two or more applications for asylum in each year since 1993. [73005]

Beverley Hughes: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 July 2002, Official Report, column 552W, which provided a cumulative total of the number of individuals detected since 1993. I regret that information requested is not available in any other form.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of failed asylum seekers were removed in the last year for which figures are available; and what the benchmark is against which delivery of the improvement, set out in the Public Service Agreement for which he is responsible, is to be measured. [71610]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The proportion of those removed in 2001–02 that were refused in the same period is only available by examination of individual case files at disproportionate costs.

11,500 failed asylum seekers and their dependants were removed in the last financial year.

As part of the Public Service Agreement process, the Treasury and spending departments agree, in the Technical Notes, the definition of the target and how its achievement will be measured. Following the same process as last time, the Spending Review 2002 Technical Notes will be agreed with the Treasury during the summer and published in the autumn. [72732]

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers previously placed in Yarl's Wood detention centre are now detained in Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement. [43240]

Beverley Hughes: Immigration detainees who are assessed to pose a control and security risk may be transferred from Immigration Service removal centres to prison accommodation in line with established policy. This will include a number of detainees who were held at Yarl's Wood at the time of the incident together with individuals held at other removal centres. In this respect, as in all others, detainees who were held at Yarl's Wood are not being treated differently to detainees held elsewhere, nor are they being recorded separately. Exact figures for the number of former Yarl's Wood detainees currently held in prison accommodation could be obtained only by examination of individual records at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers were dispersed to Glasgow in 2001; and how many applications for asylum since 1997 have been (a) granted and (b) refused. [46982]

Beverley Hughes: As at the end of December 2001, 4,750[1,2] asylum seekers (including dependants) were being supported in National Asylum Support Service (NASS) accommodation in Glasgow. The cumulative number dispersed to Glasgow in 2001 is not currently available.

Information on the number of applications for asylum since 1997 which subsequently resulted in the granting of asylum or Exceptional Leave to Remain (ELR), or refusals, is not readily available, and could only be obtained by examination of individual case records at disproportionate cost.

Information for 1997 to the first quarter of 2002 on applications for asylum, and initial decisions made, is shown in the table. (6) Cases decided under measures aimed at reducing the pre 1996 asylum application backlog.
(7) Include some cases where the application has been refused on substantive grounds.
(8) Data are available only for the period January to March 2002.
(p) Figures for 2000, 2001 and 2002 are provisional and subject to change.

Information on asylum applications and initial decisions is published quarterly. Data for the second quarter of 2002 will be available from 30 August 2002 on the Home Office website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.htm

Immigration Cases

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration cases are awaiting allocation to a case worker following receipt of application documents; for how many years the largest outstanding case has been waiting; and how many are from addresses in Beckenham constituency. [73112]

Beverley Hughes: I regret that the information requested is not available. We aim to decide 70 per cent. of all new general immigration applications on initial consideration within three weeks. At present such applications are taking on average around four weeks to decide but we are working to reduce this to three weeks as soon as possible. Applications that cannot be decided on initial consideration are allocated to a case management unit for further consideration. Some of these applications are, at present, taking up to 12 months to consider due to the large number of cases currently in the system. It is not possible to identify applications from addresses in Beckenham without scrutiny of individual case files at disproportionate cost.

Emergency Services (Deaths)

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths resulted from the failure of police and fire services to arrive at their destinations (a) on the day of the recent London Underground strike and (b) the same date in the previous year. [73027]

Mr. Denham: We are not aware of any police or fire service vehicles that failed to reach their destination on the days of the London Underground strike on 17 and 18 July 2002.

Freemasons (Police)

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on Freemasons in the police force. [73246]

Mr. Denham: Voluntary arrangements for the declaration of freemasonry membership have been established for the police, the judiciary and other parts of the criminal justice system. The Government have made no decisions about the format of and arrangements for public access to any registers.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers in (a) the Metropolitan Police, (b) Leicestershire Police and (c) Nottinghamshire Police have declared themselves to be Freemasons. [73247]

Mr. Denham: A voluntary survey of freemasonry membership was conducted by forces in 1999. From information provided by forces, the response rate was 34.4 per cent. in the Metropolitan Police Service and 35.1 per cent. in Leicestershire. This includes officers, support staff and special constables in both forces. Of those individuals who responded, 1.83 per cent. in the Metropolitan Police Service and 0.71 per cent. in Leicestershire declared that they were members of the freemasons.

Information in respect of Nottinghamshire Police is not available.

Foreign Students

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign students have received visas to enter the UK to work as seasonal workers in agriculture in each of the last five years, broken down by nation and region. [73055]

Beverley Hughes: The available information relates to the total number of persons who have been granted leave to enter the United Kingdom on the Seasonal Agricultural Scheme. Scheme participants must be students in full-time education and aged between 18–25.

The table shows the number of admissions into the United Kingdom by nationality for the period 1996–2000 inclusive. Information is not available for 2001.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what regulations are in force relating to (a) the employment of foreign students as seasonal workers in agriculture, (b) the standards of welfare and accommodation provided for foreign students employed as seasonal workers in agriculture and (c) remuneration of foreign students employed as seasonal workers in agriculture; [73056]

(2) which authority is charged with supervising standards of accommodation welfare and remuneration of foreign students employed as seasonal workers in agriculture. [73053]

Beverley Hughes: The Seasonal Agricultural Workers' Scheme (SAWS) is administered under Home Office oversight by seven approved operators.

A Code of Practice sets out the obligations of all those involved. The recruitment of workers is the responsibility of the operators. Operators must ensure that farmers provide suitable accommodation and access to recreational activities, such as the opportunity to learn English. Operators are also responsible for ensuring that farmers adhere to minimum pay regulations set out by the Agricultural Wages Board. The Board cannot set a minimum rate that is below the National Minimum Wage. Operators may withdraw workers mid-season and exclude farmers from the scheme if they do not provide suitable pay and accommodation.

Silverlands, Chertsey

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in place to recover his Department's investment in the refurbishment of Silverlands, near Chertsey, from the Department of Health. [73649]

Beverley Hughes: The Home Office is in discussions with the Department of Health about recovering funds expended on Silverlands and this will take into account the increase in the value of the property.

West Midlands Police Service

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been given to the West Midlands Police Service by his Department in each of the last eight years. [18912]

Mr. John Denham: The amount of money allocated to the West Midlands Police Authority is as follows:

Government funding

	Home Office Police grant £million	Revenue support grant (1) £million	National non domestic rates (1) £million	Home Office Crime Fighting Fund £million	Total £million	Change per cent.
1995–1996	163.2	83.2	49.5	0	295.9	6.2

2002–2003 (2)	206.2	96.9	65.2	11.8	380.1	3.8

(1) Police Authorities receive National Non Domestic Rates and Revenue Support Grant from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister
(2) The figures for 2002–03 are not directly comparable with 2001–02. The National Crime Squad/National Criminal Intelligence Service are now funded centrally, rather than through police authorities. On a like-for-like basis the comparable total for 2001–02 would have been £366.2 million. The year on year percentage change in 2002–03 is calculated on the like-for-like basis.

In addition, the following grants have also been made:

Capital

Under present arrangements, capital grant is paid to police authorities. Grant also continues to be paid towards the annual loan charges on capital sums borrowed under earlier grant rules.

Crime Reduction Programme

Under the Crime Reduction Programme over £26.7 million has been allocated since 1999 for projects in the West Midlands under the Reducing Burglary Initiative (£3.466 million), Targeted Policing Initiative (£1.754 million), Partnership Development Fund (£3.869 million), Domestic Violence Initiative (£1.2 million), Working in Schools Initiative (£2.4 million), CCTV Initiative (£14 million) and the Prostitution Initiative (£0.076 million).

Non-Lethal Weapons

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the non-lethal weapons approved for use by police forces. [20538]

Mr. Denham: Police forces have CS incapacitant spray, a variety of truncheons and the L21A1 baton round to use as less lethal options. These have all been extensively tested. The Police Reform Act 2002 introduces powers to enable the Secretary of State to make regulations to ensure that forces only use equipment that has been approved.

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will (a) estimate the cost of the investigation and (b) list the original reasons for the investigation given to the media, into Dr. Ali Dizaei; and if he will make a statement. (25133)

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 19 July 2001 relating to the costs of the investigation. The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the Metropolitan Police briefing to the media on 18 January 2001 said that Superintendent Dizaei had been suspended from duty on a significant number of counts of misconduct, following information received relating to a range of alleged disciplinary and criminal issues that covered matters of dishonesty, attempting to pervert the course of justice, personal misconduct and integrity.

Following Superintendent Dizaei's appearance at Bow Street Magistrates' Court on 28 January proceedings commenced and, as such, sub judice applies.

Retail Crime

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the correlation between (a) retail crime and street crime and (b) retail crime and drug abuse. [53501]

Mr. Denham: Research carried out by the Home Department about the correlation between crime against retailers and street crime offences has been based on interviews with 1,884 prisoners in custody, carried out in February and March 2000. The full results of this survey are expected to be published later this year.

In a study carried out in London, Liverpool, Nottingham and Sunderland in 1998–99, 64 per cent. of those arrested for theft from shops tested positive for opiates (including heroin) and 41 per cent. tested positive for cocaine. When interviewed, 85 per cent. of those arrested for shop theft reported using heroin or cocaine in the previous year.

In a study carried out on behalf of the Drug Prevention Advisory Service between October 2000 and March 2001, 23 per cent. of the 19,190 arrestees who sought advice on drug or alcohol addiction had been arrested for shop theft. Similarly, 38 per cent. of those who sought advice admitted shop theft to be a main source of income, whilst 48 per cent. admitted shop theft in the previous 30 days.

The survey of crime affecting retailers and manufacturers announced by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 23 April, the results of which should be available next spring, will also provide up to date information about crimes against retailers.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to address the problem of violence against shop staff. [71220]

Mr. Denham: The Home Office is working with the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) to raise awareness of the need to tackle work related violence as part of the Health and Safety Commission's three-year programme of work (2000–03) to help reduce the incidence of work-related violence. The HSE published "Work-related violence: managing the risk in smaller businesses" on 9 July 2002. The publication includes 10 case studies on reducing risk of violence to staff. The HSE has also published specific guidance for the retail sector "Preventing Violence to Retail Staff". "Don't Discount Crime", a new user-friendly crime reduction guide for retailers became available in May 2002. This is being circulated among their members by retail trade organisations (including the British Retail Consortium), who were actively involved in deciding its content and design. It is of particular relevance to small retailers and includes basic guidance on what steps to take to reduce crime as well as what to do in crime situations.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 May 2002, Official Report, column 605W, on retail crime, to the hon. Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Lepper), if he will list for each regional crime reduction director, the annual budget for crime reduction in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03. [71305]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon Member to the answer I gave the hon Member for Castle Point (Bob Spink) on 22 July 2002, Official Report, column 863W.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what study has been made of the link between alcohol and drug-related violent crime against retail staff. [71219]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: No study has been undertaken to look specifically at the link between alcohol and drug related violent crime against retail staff. However, we are aware from the British Retail Consortium (BRC) ninth annual survey published this year of their concerns about the level of crime affecting retailers and the concerns they have that this is being driven by theft by drug and alcohol abusers. We are carrying out a commercial crime victimisation study of retail and manufacturing sectors later this year (the first for ten years). This will give a firm basis for identifying the main crime problems affecting business and give valuable indicators of the best ways to tackle these issues.

Emergency Services (Refits)

Mr. Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps are being taken to ensure that all vehicles and control rooms are refitted by 2004–05 in the (a) police forces and (b) fire services; [50507]

(2) what is (a) the cost to date and (b) the projected cost of refitting vehicles and control rooms in the (i) police forces and (ii) fire services; [50506]

(3) how much funding has been allocated to (a) the police forces and (b) the fire services to ensure that all vehicles and control rooms are refitted by 2004–05; [50509]

(4) what the timetable is for (a) fund allocation and (b) the refitting of control rooms and vehicles for (i) the police forces and (ii) the fire services. [50510]

Mr. Denham: On 19 July 2000, the Home Secretary announced that the Government had provided £500 million to meet the costs of the new police radio system, "Airwave" (formerly Public Safety Radio Communications System, PSRCS).

Over the three years of the settlement, £191 million of capital funding has been made available for forces to spend on costs associated with Airwave installation and preparation, for example the refitting of control rooms and vehicles. A further £141 million in revenue funding has also been allocated for "one-off" preparation costs.

The Airwave programme consists of a phased national roll-out, determined by the forces and the main contractor in consultation with the Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO). The timetable for fund allocation is linked to this roll-out timetable. The capital allocation is released in advance, at an appropriate time, so that forces are ready for their roll-out date.

The service will replace existing radio systems with modern digital technology by 2005 in England and Wales extending to Scottish forces in 2006.

On 7 May, the Government announced that they would manage, support and fully fund a new national competition for the procurement of a national radiocommunications system for the fire service in England and Wales.

Police Officers

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults on police officers there were, and what percentage were in each police authority, in 2000–01. [58636]

Mr. John Denham: The numbers of recorded crimes of assault on a constable for 2000–01 and the percentage of these in each police force area, are given in the table.

Certain forces (including West Midlands) have moved to a more rigorous crime recording practice before or during 2000–01, in which a larger proportion of crimes reported to them are recorded. This may be a factor, along with the relative sizes of each force, in explaining why some forces' figures are larger than others.

Police Communications

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of claims by police officers of adverse effects on their health since the installation of the new telecommunications masts in the North West of England. [60530]

Mr. Denham: Prior to the Trade and Industry Committee report on Mobile Phone Masts the Home Office had asked the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) to assess the health and safety aspects of the TETRA technology used by Airwave. The NRPB report concluded that it is unlikely that the unique features of TETRA pose a hazard to health. The Home Office has nonetheless set up a comprehensive research programme to ensure that any residual health and safety concerns that have been received by forces and users are addressed. This includes consultation with epidemiologists and with experts in occupational health.

Criminal Records Bureau

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the laid down period for the Criminal Records Bureau to process an application for a disclosure; how long it is taking to process applications; and if he will make a statement. [64368]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 25 June 2002]: The Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) has published a set of customer service standards in relation to its response times for Disclosure applications:

Timelines of service	90 per cent. of Enhanced Disclosures issued within three weeks
	95 per cent. of Standard Disclosures issued within one week
	95 per cent. of Basic Disclosures issued within one week

— 382,884 Disclosure applications have been initiated.

— From these, 191,782 Disclosures have been issued.

— It is estimated that 40–50 per cent. of Disclosures are being issued within the three-week service standard for telephone applications (target 90 per cent. for Enhanced Disclosures). About 50 per cent. of both telephone and postal applications are being issued within five weeks.

The Criminal Records Bureau reviews its service standards regularly and accepts that it is currently not meeting these service standards. The Criminal Records Bureau is not yet meeting service standards. To address this, it has introduced a performance improvement plan including: revised procedures, recruitment of additional staff, improved management arrangements and extending working hours; a data entry backlog had been outsourced to Hays Plc's Chennai (India) data processing centre. Special procedures have been introduced for the most urgent cases.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money is owed within the Criminal Records Bureau; and (a) by and (b) to whom it is owed. [73288]

Hilary Benn: As at 31 March 2002 the Passport and Records Agency owed £1,387,126.28 to Capita in unpaid invoices.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average time between receipt of a communication by the Criminal Records Bureau and an answer being sent has been in the last year. [64234]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 25 June 2002]: The Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) offers three different ways to contact the Bureau—by telephone, by post or by email. The CRB aims to deal with all enquiries quickly and efficiently. Its target is to answer 90 per cent. of all telephone calls within 20 seconds. For week beginning 7 July 2002 the calls answered within target were 88 per cent., which represents an improvement on previous performance.

The CRB aims to reply to all emails that are sent to the CRB Website address within 24 hours of receipt and indications are that this target is being currently met.

The CRB aims to provide a response to written correspondence within one week of receipt. At present there is no information available to confirm to what extent this target is being met, as the details are not collated centrally.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent steps he has taken to improve the performance of the Criminal Records Bureau. [67925]

Mr. Denham: The Criminal Records Bureau has introduced a performance improvement plan including: revised procedures, recruitment of additional staff, improved management arrangements and extending working hours; a data entry backlog had been outsourced to Hays Plc's Chennai (India) data processing centre. Special procedures have been introduced for the most urgent cases.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the costs to voluntary organisations of becoming registered bodies with the Criminal Records Bureau due to (a) charges and (b) administration costs. [72390]

Hilary Benn: The fees to become a registered body were announced on 15 February 2001. There are one-off charges of £300 for registration, and of £5 for each additional counter-signatory nominated by the registered person. The administrative costs incurred by registered bodies will depend upon a range of factors including the size of the organisation and the number of applications to be processed.

EU Committees (Scottish Executive Representation)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the EU Committee for the European Refugee Fund (ERF) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [70930]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: A date for the next meeting of the European Union (EU) Committee for the European Refugee Fund has not yet been set. It is likely that the next meeting will take place some time in the autumn.

The Committees consist of a representative of each Member State who may be accompanied by additional experts at the expense of the individual Member State. In practice, the United Kingdom is represented on each Committee by a Home Office official and an official from the United Kingdom Permanent Representation to the EU in Brussels.

Immigration and asylum matters are reserved subjects and consequently officials from the Scottish Executive have not been members of, and have not attended, the European Refugee Fund Committee. The Scottish Executive is however consulted as necessary on the policy issues arising from the implementation and functioning of the funding programmes.

Christopher Alder

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a public inquiry into the events surrounding the death of Christopher Alder in police custody in 1998 and subsequent events; and if he will make a statement. [73306]

Mr. Denham: I would refer my hon. Friend to the letter dated 5 July that he received from my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. Until a decision about whether disciplinary proceedings are to be instigated has been taken and any disciplinary action which might emerge has been completed, it would not be appropriate to consider any request for a public inquiry.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department has taken following the killing of Mr. Christopher Alder in Hull Police Station; what representations have been received from Mr. Alder's family; what has been the response; and if he will make a statement. [6749]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to my letter to him of 15 August 2002, a copy of which is in the Library.

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many antisocial behaviour orders have been issued in London broken down by (a) London borough and (b) London constituency; and if she will make a statement. [72835]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 24 July 2002]: An anti-social behaviour order (ASBO) is a civil order made by a court which currently can be applied for by a local authority or the police. The table shows the number of notifications received by the Home office of ASBOs issued within Greater London by local government authority up to December 2001. Data are not collected by constituency area.

Number of anti-social behaviour orders reported to the Home Office which have been issued as from 1 April 1999 to 31 December 2001 within Greater London by local government authority

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate has been made of the success of antisocial behaviour orders in cutting (a) vandalism, (b) crime, (c) nuisance behaviour and (d) prostitution and other related activities. [26929]

Mr. Denham: The Home Office review of anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) found that ASBOs are successful in reducing anti-social behaviour, and can also act as a deterrent. The review's findings indicate that graffiti and criminal damage were addressed in 36 per cent. of ASBOs, criminal behaviour was addressed in 22 per cent., noise nuisance was addressed in 28 per cent. and prostitution was addressed in five per cent.

Police Telephone Response

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average waiting time is for a telephone call to a local police station which is answered by the central answering service for Avon and Somerset Police. [73262]

Mr. Denham: Management of call-handling in Avon and Somerset is the responsibility of the Chief Constable.

The Chief Constable has informed me that callers to the Avon and Somerset Communications Centre at Portishead, in June 2002, would have waited, on average, 30 seconds.

Detection Rates

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police authorities have the (a) highest and (b) lowest detection rates in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [73223]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is as follows.

Detection rates—2001–02

Highest	Dyfed Powys	64 per cent.
Lowest	Metropolitan Police	14 per cent.

The overall detection rates are not the best indicator of police performance because detection rates can be affected by a number of factors, including changes in the mix of crime types in a force area. Variations across the country remain worrying, however, and the Police Standards Unit is working with forces to address this.

Numbers of detections rose across England and Wales by 2 per cent. in 2001–02. There were rises in numbers of detections in all crime types except for fraud and forgery—for example, numbers of detections for: burglary rose by 6 per cent.; robbery by 19 per cent. and violent crime by 3 per cent. Once the increase in numbers of crimes due to changes in police recording are taken into account, the detection rate in England and Wales appears stable. Detection rates in 11 forces improved, while a further eight forces showed no change in their detection rates.

Weekend Imprisonment

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the use of weekend imprisonment in other countries. [73221]

Hilary Benn: During the review of the sentencing framework ("Making Punishments Work"—July 2002), the team looked overseas to see how other jurisdictions had handled or dealt with the issues involved in sentencing reform. Of particular interest to the review, in contemplating possible changes to the framework in England and Wales, were those jurisdictions, which had examples of flexible sentences including differing forms of intermittent custody. An analysis of the review's findings is contained in Appendix 4 to the report.

Chief Inspectors

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on pay and responsibilities for the rank of chief inspector within the police service. [72866]

Mr. Denham: It is for the Secretary of State to determine the pay of police officers of all ranks in England and Wales. In doing so, he is required to take into account any recommendation made by the Police Negotiating Board (PNB), the statutory negotiating body, on which all the main police organisations are represented, including the Police Federation, which represents the interests of chief inspectors.

There is a national salary scale for chief inspectors. Currently, there are five points on the chief inspectors' scale, ranging from £39,153 to £42,309 outside London, and from £40,761 to £43,911 in London. Where individual chief inspectors are placed on that scale depends on a number of factors, including when they attained the rank of chief inspector, the length of time they have spent as chief inspectors and the length of time they spent in the rank of inspector.

Under a PNB Agreement reached on 9 May, and approved by the Secretary of State, changes to the pay scale of chief inspectors will be implemented from 1 April 2003. With effect from that date, there will be only three salary points for chief inspectors, one for chief inspectors who were in post on 31 August 1994, and two for all other chief inspectors. Chief inspectors who were in post on 31 August 1994 will receive £42,711 outside London and £44,313 in London. All other chief inspectors will start on £40,362 (£41,973 in London), the first point of the scale, and then progress to £41,973 (£42,780 in London). Once they have completed a year at the top of their scale, chief inspectors will be eligible for the new competence-related payment of £1,002 a year.

Chief inspectors perform a range of duties and responsibilities, and while many of the activities are common, there will be different responsibilities for operational and detective officers. All officers in the rank of chief inspector are required to exhibit leadership and management qualities and to take on responsibility for community safety and local crime initiatives, which includes developing local crime and disorder strategies. Operations chief inspectors would be responsible for developing, implementing and monitoring local crime and disorder plans, for formulating contingency plans for major incidents, and for managing public order and major incidents. Detective Chief Inspectors would primarily be responsible for managing and advising on criminal investigations.

Police Ranks

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) sergeants, (b) inspectors and (c) chief inspectors there were in March 2000; and how many he estimates there will be in Spring 2003. [72865]

Mr. Denham: On 31 March 2000 there were 18,500 sergeants, 5,941 inspectors and 1,574 chief inspectors in the police service in England and Wales.

We have set a target for there to be 130,000 police officers by March 2003 and are on track to achieve this. It is for individual chief officers of police to determine, within available resources, the number of officers there should be in each rank.

Police Custody Deaths

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 July 2002, Official Report, column 1248W, how many of the deaths resulted in (a) an internal inquiry, (b) an external inquiry and (c) compensation being paid to the next of kin of the victims. [73248]

Mr. Denham: All deaths in police custody are subject to a full police investigation. Where such a death occurs the police are required to refer the investigation to the Police Complaints Authority (PCA) for supervision. It is the responsibility of the PCA supervising member to approve the appointment of the Senior Investigating Officer (SIO), either from the force where the death occurred or from another force, and to agree the terms of reference for the SIO covering the parameters of the investigation. The PCA recently published their supervision manual which sets out the Authority's approach to supervision and the standards its supervising members will apply.

Under the Police Reform Bill the PCA will be replaced by a completely new body called the Independent Police Complaints Commission (IPCC). The IPCC will be at the heart of a new police complaints system, the key objective of which will be to increase public confidence and trust in the way in which complaints against the police are dealt with. In order to achieve this the IPCC, which will be wholly independent of the police and which will have its own investigating teams, will be able to choose to investigate complaints itself. There will also be improved access to the complaints system for complainants, and significantly greater disclosure of information to complainants.

Information about the number of deaths that resulted in compensation being paid to the next of kin of the victims is not collected centrally.

Commercial Poppy Growing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what purpose commercial poppy growing has been licensed in Hampshire; and if he will make a statement. [72846]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Approximately 400 hectares of opium poppies are being grown in the United Kingdom, mostly in Hampshire, to provide some of the raw material required for the manufacture of medicines such as codeine and morphine. The amount represents but a small proportion of the total required, which is sourced mainly in Australia, India, Spain and Turkey.

This is the first time opium poppies have been grown commercially in this country for medicinal purposes, although smaller amounts have been grown traditionally for culinary use of the seeds and for dried flower arranging.

Cultivation of the opium poppy is not subject to the licensing requirements of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 but details are furnished to the International Narcotics Control Board under the estimating and statistical provisions of the United Nations Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961. The process is being monitored by the Home Office Drugs Branch which has arranged for police to be informed of the growing sites.

Criminal Justice and Court Services Act

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parents have been imprisoned as a result of their children's truancy under the provisions of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000. [73229]

Hilary Benn: The availability of imprisonment on a sentence in cases where parents who know that their child is not attending school and have taken no reasonable steps to secure their attendance came into force on 1 March 2001.

Statistics for 2001 will be available in the autumn.

Mahmoud Abu Rideh

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take following the statement of Mr. Justice Collins at the Special Immigration Appeals Commission regarding the condition of Mahmoud Abu Rideh and if he will make a statement. [65252]

Beverley Hughes: Further psychiatric assessments of Mr. Abu Rideh have been carried out and a warrant authorising his transfer to Broadmoor was signed on 19 July, after approval of the Home Secretary. Mr. Abu Rideh is now in Broadmoor and is receiving treatment.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what proportion of the public service agreements of his Department set out in the document "Public Services for the Future 1998" have been met; and if he will make a statement. [68712]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 10 July 2002]: The comprehensive spending review undertaken in 1997–98 produced 31 targets for the Home Office over the period April 1998–March 2001. Out of these 31 targets 19 have been achieved (61.30 per cent.), six have been transferred to other Government departments as a result of machinery of Government changes (19.35 per cent.) and six have been rolled forward (19.35 per cent.).

Out of the 19 that have been achieved, many have been incorporated into Public Service Agreement, Spending Review (PSAs) or Service Delivery Agreement (SDAs) through the SR2000 process. Out of the six that were rolled forward, five did not have completion dates within the timescale of 1998–2001 and have been extended into PSAs or SDAs in the SR2000 process, with more clearly defined dates and targets.

The Home Office Annual Report was laid before Parliament in July and outlines in more detail performance against targets. The attached tables outline which targets have been met and which have been rolled forward.

1. To reduce vehicle crime from its current level by 30 per cent. within 5 years.	Rolled forward. 1. Reduce the key recorded crime categories of: —Vehicle crime by 30 per cent. by 2004 —Domestic burglary by 25 per cent. with no local Authority area having a rate more than three times the national average, by 2005; and —Robbery in our principal cities by 14 per cent. by 2005.
2. An improvement in police efficiency of 2 per cent. a year.	Achieved—target rolled forward. 17. Ensure annual efficiency gains by police forces are worth in total at least two per cent. of overall police spending in that year.
3. Launch the new evidence based crime reduction programme.	Achieved
4. Tackle domestic violence through a range of practical measures including increasing public awareness, improving agencies' response and developing an information base.	Achieved—target contributing to new PSA. See PSA target 1 in Table 2.
5. Agree an annual target, with the United Kingdom (UK) Anti Drugs Co-ordinator, for the police to ensure efficient and effective action against drug suppliers	Achieved. (Now incorporated as SDA in PSA 4)
6. Publish survey results on levels of fear of crime and set targets for improvement in specific areas	Achieved—target rolled forward into new PSA. See target 2 in Table 2.
7. Reduce the time taken from arrest to sentence or other disposal.	Specific targets set. 8. Reduce by 2004, the time from arrest to sentence or other outcome by: —Reducing the time from charge to disposal for all defendants, with a target to be specified by 31 March 2001; —Dealing with 80 per cent. of youth court cases within their time targets; and —Halving from 142 to 71 days by 2002 the time taken from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders and maintaining that level thereafter.
8. Reduce the time taken from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders from 142 days to 71 days	Achieved. See target 8 in Table 2 below.
9. Improve the satisfaction levels of victims and witnesses with their treatment in the CJS.	7. Improve by five percentage points the satisfaction of victims and witnesses with their treatment by the CJS by 2002 and thereafter at least maintain that level of performance.
10. Reduce the number of terrorist incidents securing effective well-co-ordinated and proportionate anti-terrorist policies	Achieved
11. Prepare new UK-wide anti-terrorism legislation	Achieved
12. Develop closer and more effective international co-operation to counter terrorism	Achieved. This has become a Service Delivery Agreement and is ongoing.
13. Increase the percentage of identified crime groups: under investigation; in respect of which arrest have been made; in respect of which prosecutions have been brought; and which have been dismantled.	Achieved—target rolled forward into new PSA. 4. Disrupt 10 per cent. more organised criminal enterprises by 2004.

14. Ensure the two-year reconviction rate for those receiving community sentences remains below the rate predicted for those offenders.	9. Reduce the rate of reconviction:
15. Reduce the reconviction rate for persistent young offenders.	—Of all offenders punished by imprisonment or community supervision by five per cent. by 2004 compared to the predicted rate; and —Of all young offenders by five per cent. by 2004 compared to the predicted rate. Achieved. Achieved. Forms supporting SDAs to reconvictions target (no. 9)
16. Improve supervision programmes run by the probation service and prison regimes that require offenders to face up to their offending behaviour, and introduce a system of independent accreditation covering probation as well as prison programmes 17. Double the number of completions of accredited offender behaviour programmes (OBP) from 3,000 to 6,000 a year by 2001–02, including an increase from 680 to 1100 in those completing sex offender programmes (SOTP)	Achieved—target rolled forward. (SOTP target not achieved). This has become a Service Delivery Agreement under target 9.
18. Reduce the proportion of discharged prisoners who are at Level 1 or below for literacy and numeracy skills by 15 per cent. by April 2002	Achieved—this has become part of the Service Delivery Agreement and reworded to read: Increase the educational and vocational qualifications of offenders with: —23,400 accredited educational/vocational qualifications in 2001–02 and 36,200 in 2003–04 including an increase in the number of level 2 basic and key skills awards from 18,000 to 21,000 in the Prison Service; and —12,000 completions of level 2 basic skills awards in 2003–04 with 6,000 completions in 2002–03 in the Probation Service. Achieved. Further extended as SDA to reduce to 10 per cent. by 2004.
19. Reduce the rate of positive random drug tests from a 20 per cent. target in 1998–99 to 16 per cent. in 2001–02; and to provide access to voluntary drug testing for all prisoners by April 2002 20. Pilot Drug Treatment and Testing Orders; provide treatment for problem drug users in prison which is then followed through under post-release supervision; increase number of offenders entering treatment programmes as a result of arrest referral schemes and post-release supervision	Achieved. Roll-out of orders, arrest referral etc. has become a Service Delivery Agreement.
21. Maintain existing performance of no escapes by high risk prisoners; and the overall rate of escapes from prisons to be no higher than 0.17 per cent. of average prison population. 22. Promote race equality and develop new indicators to measure improvement.	Achieved — target rolled forward into new PSA. 10. Maintain the current low rates of prisoner escapes including no category A escapes. Achieved—target rolled forward into new PSA and indicators developed.
	16. Promote race equality, particularly in the provision of public services such as education, health, law and order, housing and local government, and measure progress by the annual publication of Race Equality in Public Services, a set of race equality performance indicators across the public sector; and achieve representative workforces in the Home Office and its police, probation and prison services. Achieved - now incorporated into PSA 16. See target 16 in Table 2.
23. Set targets by June 1999 to increase the number of people from ethnic minorities in Home Office and its services 24. Increase the quantity and quality of people's involvement in their community and ensure fulfilment of the vision of the Giving Age.	15. Make substantial progress by 2004 towards one million more people being actively involved in their communities. Achieved. Transferred to Lord Chancellor's Department July 2001
25. Incorporate the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law 26. Improve the level of public confidence in the democratic process, through the introduction of PR for European elections; by legislating for the registration of political parties; by introducing a new system of controls on political party funding; and by carrying out a review of electoral procedures and making recommendations during 1999	Transferred to Lord Chancellor's Department July 2001
27. Introduce legislation providing for freedom of information	Achieved. Transferred to Lord Chancellor's Department July 2001
28. Reduce the time taken to final decision of asylum applications to six months by April 2001.	13. Ensure that by 2004, 75 per cent. of substantive asylum applications decided within 2 months.
29. Reduce fire related deaths in the home by 20 per cent. by 31 March 2003, from an average starting point of 380 a year 30. Reduce the number of fires by 31 March 2002 to a level lower than that currently projected on long-term trends (projected levels: 608,100 pa–633,500 pa)	Transferred to Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions July 2001 Transferred to Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions July 2001
31. Improve fire service efficiency by two per cent. a year	Transferred to Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions July 2001

Accommodation Centres

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what child welfare frameworks and inspection regimes will apply to accommodation centres under the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Bill; and to what extent it is his policy that the provisions of the (a) Children Act 1989, (b) Children (Scotland) Act 1995, (c) Care Standards Act 2000 and (d) Regulation of Care (Scotland) Act 2001 will apply. [55331]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 10 May 2002]: I will write to my hon. Friend.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 3 July, on accommodation centres, when (a) he and (b) representatives of his Department have discussed the use of the former Royal Air Force Turnhouse site with BAA Lynton; and if he will place in the Library the minutes of the meetings. [69194]

Beverley Hughes: There has been dialogue over recent months between representatives of the Home Office officials and BAA Lynton.

The details of this dialogue cannot be placed in the Library for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Dublin Convention

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the EU Committee on the system for comparison of fingerprints for the effective application of the Dublin Convention (Eurodac) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [70928]

Beverley Hughes: The EURODAC system itself is not yet operational. There are no immediate plans for the Committee established by Article 23 of the EURODAC Regulation to meet. Immigration and asylum matters are reserved subjects and consequently officials from the Scottish Executive are not members of the Committee. A Home Office official and an official from the United Kingdom (UK) Permanent Representation in Brussels will represent the UK at meetings of the Committee.

Paedophilia

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were (a) reported for and (b) convicted of offences related to paedophilia and how many of the latter were repeat offenders in Wales in the last five years; [71004]

(2) how many of those convicted of offences relating to paedophilia (a) lived, (b) worked and (c) were reported within 10 kilometres of a children's home in Wales in the last five years; [71003]

(3) how many people were (a) reported and (b) convicted for offences related to paedophilia per person aged 18 and under in Wales, in the last five years. [71024]

Hilary Benn: There is no definitive list of offences relating to paedophilia. The information collected centrally relates to a range of offences (including those involving direct contact with the victims and others that do not) against victims of a variety of ages, some of which span the legal age of consent to sexual activity.

The government have announced that they will publish in the autumn its plans for comprehensive reform of the framework of sexual offences.

Marsham Street

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which consultant is advising on his new Department's building in Marsham Street; and for what reasons this consultant is tendering for hydrofluorocarbon air-conditioning. [71356]

Beverley Hughes: As announced on 26 March, the contract for the Home Office's new Head Quarters building in Marsham Street has been signed with Annes Gate Property (AGP). Battle McCarthy is the consultant in the design team retained by AGP's design and build sub-contractor, Bouygues UK Ltd. The Home Office also retains an environmental specialist through its external surveyor monitoring the design development by AGP and their sub-contractor.

For AGP, Bouygues UK Ltd is tendering for the hydroflourocarbon (R407C) refrigerant in the air conditioning as this substance achieves environmental friendliness and gives best value for money. The substance has a positive rating in the Building Research Establishment Environmental Assessment Method (BREEAM), which is the recognised evaluation process for measuring the environmental level of a building and it also meets all UK quality standards.

Refugees

Ann McKechin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what schemes his Department (a) has in place and (b) plans to put in place to assist refugees living in Scotland find employment. [71724]

Beverley Hughes: The National Refugee Integration Forum, which consists of representatives from Government departments, local authorities, the voluntary sector and refugees themselves, oversees the development of the overall integration strategy for refugees across the United Kingdom (UK). Access to employment is a key to enabling refugees to achieve their full potential in the UK. The Forum has established an Employment sub group to look specifically at the barriers to work that refugees face, and how these barriers can be removed.

Amongst measures examined so far are the provision of appropriate English language training, provision of information about the UK labour market, and raising awareness amongst potential employers of the skills and qualifications that refugees bring with them to the UK.

The National Forum has also assisted in the establishment of a Scottish Refugee Integration Forum, chaired by the Minister of Social Justice Margaret Curran MSP, to look at the issues facing those refugees who have settled in Scotland. Mirroring the National Forum, the Scottish Forum has also established a satellite group to consider the barriers to employment from a Scottish perspective.

The Home Office also funds a number of refugee integration initiatives in Scotland through the Refugee Integration Challenge Fund and the European Refugee Fund. These are:

Glasgow ESOL Forum (£26,000): A project to train ESOL tutors for refugees, rent premises and obtain teaching materials

YMCA, Glasgow (£42,779): The project aims to assist asylum seekers whose applications for asylum or exceptional leave to remain are granted, by assisting with access to accommodation, providing training in English and in the life skills cultural and other aspects of life in Scotland.

Scottish Refugee Council (£50,579): To establish Refugee Community Organisations (RCO's) in Scotland that support refugees integration into the surrounding community and assisting refugees to set up their own RCOs.

Passports

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British passports have been issued to individuals previously citizens of the overseas territories broken down by (a) territory, (b) age and (c) sex; and what assessment he has made of the efficiency of the operation. [71653]

Beverley Hughes: There is no single system for issuing passports to people who are British citizens under the British Overseas Territories Act 2002. Those who are resident in the United Kingdom may apply to the usual Passport Office for their region. Those resident in territories where British passport issuing facilities are available locally or through a convenient British diplomatic post may apply in the territory. As a temporary measure until alternative arrangements are in place, applications in other territories are being sent to the Liverpool passport office for processing. Figures are available only for those applications dealt with at Liverpool and are given in the table. Applications from UK residents are being dealt with at the same speed as other first applications: 2 weeks for the standard service, 1 week for the fast track service at United Kingdom Passport Service counters. The total turnaround times for applications from overseas territories dealt with in Liverpool depend mainly on transport links between the territory and the UK; the Liverpool office handles the application within the 2 week standard service.

Applications dealt with 21 May to 18 July 2002

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information will be held on the proposed passport card. [72547]

Beverley Hughes: The proposed passport card will hold the same personal data as currently contained in the United Kingdom passport. In addition biometric information is being considered for inclusion in both passport cards and passport books.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his estimate is of the number of fraudulent UK passports in existence and circulation. [72107]

Beverley Hughes: It is not possible to say how many fraudulently issued United Kingdom passports there are in existence or in circulation. The UK Passport Service does not routinely collate comprehensive information on the number of passports which have been identified as having been issued on the basis of fraudulent applications. Also, the Passport Service is not always informed when such passports come to light.

The Passport Service does measure detected fraud and has recently identified some 800 fraudulently obtained passports through its automated check on the death records of under 18 year olds in England and Wales. Details of these passports have been circulated to law enforcement agencies in the UK and to authorities abroad.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what examples of passport cards in other jurisdictions he studied in his proposals for a passport card. [72123]

Beverley Hughes: The concept of a card form of a passport has only recently been embodied into published International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO) specifications (1999). Officials from the United Kingdom Passport Service have exchanged ideas about the development of passport cards with Canadian and Australian colleagues. Information has also been exchanged with Swedish, United States and New Zealand passport officials

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the US Government regarding the acceptability of his proposed passport card as a replacement for the traditional passport for UK citizens entering the US. [72122]

Beverley Hughes: The UK Passport Service's plans for a passport card are based on it not being a replacement for the passport book. Individuals will be issued with both documents.

The card is planned primarily as a convenient travel document for United Kingdom citizens to use in Europe. In addition an extension of its use, via bilateral agreements, to countries not requiring UK citizens to hold a visa will be pursued. Discussions between officials from the United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand have indicated a secure passport card would be acceptable, but no formal approach has been made to gain acceptance from these countries.

The US is currently revising its border control strategy, including visa waiver arrangements. This may impact on the acceptability of a UK passport card in the US.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) European Union and (b) international standards with which a passport card must comply. [72121]

Beverley Hughes: Standards for machine readable travel documents have been established by International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO). This United Nations body publishes specifications in Document 9303 in three separate parts. Part 1 covers passports, Part 2 visas and Part 3 cards.

These standards have wide international acceptance. Part 1 of the document includes card forms of the passport within its scope but refers to Part 3 for the technical specifications that should apply. A United Kingdom passport card will comply with the specifications in Part 3.

European Union member states comply with Doc 9303 for the design of their travel documents. In addition, member states of the European Union have agreed on a joint resolution on minimum security standards for travel documents. The UK passport card will comply with this resolution.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a person may countersign a passport application if they themselves do not possess a passport. [72527]

Beverley Hughes: No. A requirement for countersignatories to be British or Irish passport holders was introduced at the same time as the definition of acceptable countersignatories was broadened. Applications may now be countersigned by any professional persons or persons of standing in the community, but they must hold a current United Kingdom or Irish passport. This gives applicants the widest choice of countersignatories at the same time as improving security by allowing a 100 per cent. check on the identity of countersignatories from the UK Passport Service records or by arrangement with the Irish authorities.

Volunteers

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether volunteers are entitled to receive criminal records checks free of charge; and what assessment has been made of the charges made by umbrella bodies to volunteers wishing to receive checks through the Criminal Records Bureau. [72476]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 23 July 2002]: It was announced in February last year that Standard and Enhanced Disclosures would be issued free by the Criminal Records Bureau in the case of volunteers.

Estimates by a number of organisations as to the level of costs charged by countersigning bodies—whether by an organisation—acting on its own behalf or an umbrella body countersigning applications at the request of others—have varied very considerably, depending upon a range of factors including the size of the organisation and the number of applications to be processed. In guidance for umbrella bodies, the Bureau has urged that any charges made for providing the service should be kept to a minimum. Organisations wishing to use an umbrella body are advised to enquire about, and to compare, any such charges.

We have been determined that all those wishing to access the Criminal Records Bureau's (CRB's) service should have ready means of access. Up to 16 July, a total of 917 umbrella bodies had been registered by the Criminal Records Bureau. Of those, 442 have agreed to act as "open" umbrella bodies to provide this service for bodies outside their own circle or sector), of which 65 are voluntary bodies. Voluntary organisations needing to find an umbrella body should access the CRB's website www.disclosure.gov.uk which has an umbrella body search facility, or contact the CRB direct on 0870 90 90 811. Organisations are continuing to apply for registration, and the number of umbrella bodies will increase. We are actively exploring means of developing the network further.

Charities

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance and advice his Department provides to charities having difficulty obtaining public liability insurance after 11 September 2001. [72015]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 24 July 2002]: I am aware of the problems being experienced by charities, especially those in the voluntary and community sector, as a result of the volatility in the insurance market since 11 September 2001. It is deeply worrying that small groups of volunteers who are making a real contribution to their communities are being faced with such difficulty.

The Active Community Unit in the Home Office is advising charities in the voluntary and community sector to contact, in the first instance, two organisations who have been successful in negotiating public liability insurance for their membership. Additionally, the Active Community Unit is holding discussions with interested parties from the voluntary and community sector, other interested government departments, the Charity Finance Directors' Group and the insurance industry, to see what more can be done. An exploratory meeting to focus on this issue took place on Wednesday 24 July.

Anti-Semitism

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to (a) monitor and (b) arrest and convict those involved in (i) distributing anti-semitic material and (ii) anti-semitic activity against people and property; and if he will make a statement. [73006]

Beverley Hughes: The police and Jewish bodies continue to work closely to safeguard Jewish people and property. The Government are in close touch with the Community Security Trust of the British Board of Deputies, which provides up-to-date details of anti-Semitic activity in the United Kingdom, such as assaults and criminal damage. Home Office officials have also met leading representatives of the Union of Jewish Students (UJS) in order to discuss the recent increase in anti-Semitic activity within University campuses.

The Government are fully committed to tackling anti-Semitism and racism generally wherever it occurs. Under Part III of the Public Order Act 1986 it is an offence to use threatening, abusive or insulting words or behaviour with intent or likelihood to stir up racial hatred. The offence covers inflammatory comments made in public or in the media as well as the distribution of printed material. The Anti-terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001 increased the maximum penalty for incitement to racial hatred from two to seven years' imprisonment. Additionally, the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 introduced nine new racially aggravated offences, including assault and criminal damage, for which the maximum penalties available to the courts are substantially increased if it can be shown that there was evidence of racial hostility to the offences.

The investigation of possible breaches of these laws is an operational matter for the police and the Crown Prosecution Service. We would therefore urge anyone who believes these laws to have been breached to report the matter to the police.

Charitable Status

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those organisations which have had charitable status withdrawn since June 2001, stating the reasons in each case. [72766]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 24 July 2002]: This is a matter for the Charity Commission, as the Government Department that registers charities in England and Wales. The Chief Charity Commissioner will write to the hon. Member concerning charities in England and Wales and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Police Numbers (London)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on recent levels of crime in areas where police have been taken away to deal with security in London. [28936]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 22 July 2002, Official Report, column 830W.

Civil Servants

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out for each Civil Service grade within his Department the (a) total number of staff employed and (b) the number aged (i) 16 to 25, (ii) 26 to 35, (iii) 36 to 45, (iv) 46 to 60 and (v) over the age of 60 years. [32888]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 6 February 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 18 April 2002, Official Report, column 1160W.

Secondments

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will list the names of staff who have been seconded to his department from the private sector since May 1997, indicating (a) the names of the organisation from which each has come, (b) their responsibilities and Civil Service grades within his Department, (c) the organisation responsible for paying their salary and (d) the start and dates of their secondment. (35835)

Hilary Benn [holding answer 12 February 2002]: Secondments are part of the Interchange initiative, which promotes the exchange of people and good practice between the Civil Service and other organisations. All sectors of the economy are involved: Voluntary, Education, Health, Public and Private. Interchange provides opportunities for civil servants to learn new skills, widen their experience and develop ideas. It also brings in skills and experiences from other sectors.

Available information from the periods in question is listed in the table. Information for 2001–02 is not yet available.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of staff were employed by his Department on secondment from non-govenmental organisations in (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2001. [45226]

Hilary Benn: Secondments are part of the Interchange initiative, which promotes the exchange of people and good practice between the Civil Service and other organisations. All sectors of the economy are involved: Voluntary, Education, Health, Public and Private. Interchange provides opportunities for civil servants to learn new skills, widen their experience and develop ideas. It also brings in skills and experiences from other sectors.

For the periods in question, the numbers of staff seconded from non-governmental organisations to the home department are set out in the table. Figures for 2001–02 are not yet available.

Number of staff	30	21

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of staff were employed by his Department on secondment from the private sector in (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2001. [45272]

Hilary Benn: Secondments are part of the Interchange initiative, which promotes the exchange of people and good practice between the Civil Service and other organisations. All sectors of the economy are involved: Voluntary, Education, Health, Public and Private. Interchange provides opportunities for civil servants to learn new skills, widen their experience and develop ideas. It also brings in skills and experiences from other sectors.

During 1999–2000, three private sector staff are recorded as having been seconded to the home department, with a further four in 2000–01. Figures for 2001–02 are not yet available.

Union Duties

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to answer the question of 13 February from the hon. Member for Buckingham regarding staff involvement in union duties. [41578]

Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 15 April 2002, Official Report, column 757W.

Regional Organisation

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the agencies and NDPBs sponsored by his Department have a regional organisation; and if he will list the counties and unitary authorities in each region in (a) 1997 and (b) 2002. [58937]

Beverley Hughes: The majority of Home Office sponsored Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPB's) do not have regional organisations. Some do have offices outside London, but these are not for regional organisational purposes.

The three Executive NDPB's with regional organisation are:

— The Commission for Racial Equality (CRE);

— The National Crime Squad (NCS); and

— The National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS).

Details of their regional organisations are set out in the table.

Both Home Offices Agencies have regional organisations.

Since April 2000, the Prison Service has operated an area manager structure that is based on the Government regions. Two regions are divided between two area managers: the South East (one for Thames Valley, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight and one for Kent, Surrey and Sussex) and East Midlands North (Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire, Derby and Nottingham) and South (Leicestershire and Northamptonshire, Leicester and Rutland). Previously area managers had been based in London.

The United Kingdom Passport Service (UKPS) had five regional catchment areas in 1997, and has six in 2002, not including London, which is now a drop in centre. Details of the organisational structure are in the table.

Regional Organisational Structures

A. Home Office Non Departmental Public Bodies

	Commission for Racial Equality (2002)
London and the South (London)	33 London Boroughs Bucks, Oxfordshire, Surrey, Sussex, Hampshire, Berks., Kent, Bedfordshire, Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, Somerset, Dorset, Devon, Cornwall, Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, Essex and Hertfordshire.

North East Regional Office (Wakefield)	South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire, Humberside, North Yorkshire, Durham, Cleveland, Tyne and Wear, Northumberland, (Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire)[1].
North West Regional Office (Manchester)	Cheshire, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, Lancashire, Cumbria, Isle of Man, Anglesey, Gwynedd and Clwyd.
Scotland Office (Paisley)	Has responsibility for the whole of Scotland.
Northern Ireland (Belfast)	Has responsibility for Northern Ireland.

[1] Since 1 April 2002, the Midlands Regional Office has extended its responsibilities to include Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire and Lincolnshire police forces as well as the regional National Crime Squad (NCS) and Her Majesty's Custom's and Excise (HMC&E) offices. These areas of responsibility were previously held by North East Regional Office.

Asylum Accommodation

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if asylum-seeking families with dependent children may have their support removed if they (a) refuse the offer of a place in an accommodation centre, (b) voluntarily cease to reside there and (c) breach conditions set on their residence. [59992]

Beverley Hughes: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Entertainment Costs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost was of the Department's 2001 staff Christmas Party; and how many people attended. [61668]

Beverley Hughes: Public funds are not normally used to pay for entertainment of civil servants in the Department. Staff Christmas parties in 2001 funded by staff themselves have not been included in this answer. We have identified a small number of events, held in December 2001, to recognise the contribution of staff and extend hospitality to non-civil servants who contributed to the delivery of the Department's objectives during the course of the year, which were part funded by the Department and its operational agencies. The total cost of these was £7,645 attended by 1163 people. We have not trawled the 136 prisons or all Immigration and Nationality Directorate units and to do so could only be done at a disproportionate cost.

Court Visits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many courts he has visited since 7 June 2001. [64228]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has not visited any courts during this period. However, my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley)—then Minister with responsibility for criminal justice policy—visited twelve criminal courts during the corresponding period, and I visited a Magistrates Court.

Recycling

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) paper and (b) other goods purchased by his Department was recycled paper in each year since 1997; what the annual total cost of these purchases was; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65772]

Beverley Hughes: (a) The proportion of recycled paper purchased by the Department from the framework paper contract for 2000–01 and 2001–02 is set out in the table. Figures for earlier years are not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Year	Number of reams of recycled paper	Cost of Recycled paper	Total number of reams purchased	Total cost of paper purchased	Percentage of recycled paper purchased
2001–02	27,230	£85,820	797,212	£1,451,900	3

The Home Office has recently made the use of recycled paper for photocopiers, printers and facsimile equipment compulsory. This mandate applies to the core Home Office and should result in around 40 per cent. of all paper purchased by the Department as a whole being recycled. This percentage may increase shortly: the Prison Service has issued guidance to their procurement staff encouraging them to use recycled paper and the United Kingdom Passport Agency and the Forensic Science Service are at present considering whether to make its use compulsory.

(b) Figures are not available for the proportion of other goods purchased by the Home Office that were derived from recycled paper.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of waste produced in his Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted and (c) re-used, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65701]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, records for the Department's Central London headquarters estate show that 20 per cent. of the office waste was recycled in 2000–01 and 25 per cent. was recycled in 2001–02.

Waste minimisation schemes are being introduced at all key sites on the Department's non-prison estate, while waste audits have been conducted at 72 sites on the prison estate and waste management units are operational at 14 prisons and developmental work is underway at a further 18 sites.

We are considering how to increase the range and amount of waste sent for recycling.

Oral Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many oral questions he has transferred to other departments in each of the last 18 months. [65510]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is shown in the table.

Date of oral PQ session	Number of PQs transferred
2 July 2001	4
19 November 2001	1
4 February 2002	1
11 March 2002	1
TOTAL	7

The reason that there were four transfers in July 2001 is that this closely followed the movement of policy areas between Departments after the General Election. Questions are only transferred out of the Department when it is more appropriate for another Department to respond and when that Department has agreed to accept the question.

Violent Crime

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the rate of violent crime was in each Government-office region at the latest date for which figures are available. [68899]

Mr. Denham: The table gives figures for rates of violent crime from the British Crime Survey (BCS), for the English regions and Wales based on BCS interviews in the financial year 2001–02. The BCS figures for violence per 10,000 adults relate to violence (wounding, common assault, robbery and snatch theft) experienced by the members of the public sampled in the survey.

The BCS violence estimate for the number of violent incidents increased by two per cent. compared to 2000, but this is not statistically significant. Comparison of results reported to the BCS in 2001–02 with those for earlier years show a 17 per cent. decline in BCS violence since 1999, a 22 per cent. decline since 1997 and a 33 per cent. decline since 1995, all of these decreases being statistically significant.

The following figures have been extracted from Table 6.06 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Crime in England and Wales 2001–02", which is available in the library. A fuller explanation of the differences between the collection of recorded crime and BCS figures is given in Chapter 2 of this publication.

The BCS and police recorded crime figures for violence are not directly comparable. Numbers of police recorded violent crimes per 10,000 population relate to all the recordable offences in the violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery offence groups. There is also a less than complete correlation between the recorded crime and BCS figures owing to the different methods of collection, methodology and coverage (for example, the BCS only relates to victims over the age of 16, and residents), with different rates of reporting of crimes to the police also being a factor.

Rape

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to lower the statutory age at which a person can be prosecuted for rape. [69756]

Hilary Benn: None. The statutory age at which a person can be prosecuted for rape is 10 (which is also the age of criminal responsibility). The age was lowered from 14 to 10 by the Sexual Offences Act 1993.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's methodology for recording crime statistics; and when this methodology was last changed. [71013]

Mr. Denham: Police practice on recorded crime statistics has for many years been governed by Home Office Counting Rules. These rules have covered the counting and classification of crimes for statistical purposes, although the policy on whether to record crimes that have been reported has in the past varied from force to force.

The Home Office Counting Rules for Recorded Crime were last revised with effect from 1 April 2002, principally to take account of the introduction of the National Crime Recording Standard which was produced by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) in consultation with the Home Office. The Standard aims to promote greater consistency between police forces in recording reports of crime and to take a more victim orientated approach to crime recording.

The latest change to the Rules is anticipated to impact mainly on the violence against the person, theft and handling and criminal damage offence groups, although all offence groups are potentially affected and the impact of the changes will vary between the different police forces.

The recorded crime statistics cover all indictable and triable-either-way offences, together with a few summary offences closely related to more serious ones.

A copy of the Home Office Counting Rules is available on the website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/counting/index.html.

CCTV

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanisms are used for monitoring the usefulness and effectiveness of CCTV programmes. [71651]

Mr. Denham: Under the Crime Reduction Programme Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) Initiative, a potential of £170 million will be spent funding 683 public area CCTV schemes.

As a condition of funding, each scheme is required to undertake an independent evaluation of its effectiveness as a tool to assist the police and reduce crime and the fear of crime. These evaluations will cover implementation, impact and cost effectiveness.

In addition, to help ensure maximum impact and sustainability of CCTV, a £1.5 million Home Office funded national evaluation programme is being carried out by the Scarman Centre, University of Leicester, on 17 approved CCTV Initiative schemes.

Attendance Centres

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the reform of attendance centres; [71486]

(2) what plans he has to change responsibility for (a) junior and (b) senior attendance centres with the youth justice system. [71485]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 22 July 2002]: The Youth Justice Board has had central responsibility for commissioning and funding junior attendance centres since April 2000. We are, in consultation with the Board, reviewing existing arrangements.

Overstayers

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 July 2002, Official Report, column 88W, on overstayers, what steps he plans to take to increase the rate of consideration and decision on applications under the Regularisation Scheme for Overstayers to meet his target date of April 2003. [71681]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 22 July 2002]: During the current financial year there has been a significant increase in the number of specialist caseworkers considering the applications under The Regularisation Scheme For Overstayers. The new staff are initially dealing with grants (which are easier to process) until they receive further training in September. It is expected that the output of the established staff will continue to increase with experience, and that the new staff will quickly come up to speed. Processes have been streamlined, best practice shared, and a pragmatic and sympathetic approach is being taken to any compassionate factors encountered. Processes and resources will be kept under constant review, and caseworkers are encouraged to make any suggestions for improvements in working practices that might further speed up decision making.

Parliamentary Answers

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for how long he retains documents referred to in Parliamentary Answers on his Department's website; [72268]

(2) whether it is his policy to ensure that documents referred to in parliamentary answers are available via his Department's website. [72272]

Beverley Hughes: The Home Office aims to be as helpful as possible in responding to hon. Members' Questions. Where it is helpful to refer hon. Members to other documents as part of the substantive reply, this may be done by making hard copies of documents available in the Libraries of the House, or by reference to material available on the Home Office website. The Home Office adheres to the requirements for the types of documents which should be published on our website as directed by the Office of the e-Envoy. A copy of these is available at http://www.e-envoy.gov.uk/webguidelines.htm.

The Home Office ensures that the content of the site as a whole is up to date and current.

There are no set time limits for documents to remain on the Home Office website. Where it is agreed with particular policy units that documents are no longer current but still of significant interest, the relevant material is archived and available to website users on www.homeoffice.gov.uk/archive.htm. Consultation documents are archived on the site after their closing date under www.homeoffice.gov.uk/atoz/cpsummaries.htm.

Sangatte Refugee Centre

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the arrangements made with the French Interior Minister for the closure of the Sangatte Red Cross refugee centre include, and if future arrangements made will include, (a) a right of appeal of immigration decisions taken in respect of the residents of the centre and (b) the provision of independent legal advice to the residents of the centre; and if he will make a statement. [72485]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 July 2002]: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's discussions with his French counterpart have concentrated on agreeing a closure timetable for the Sangatte Centre and the range of measures to tackle illegal immigration which will allow the centre to close.

Travel Documents

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures the UK Government are taking to encourage the recognition of (a) the Convention travel document issued to refugees and (b) certificates of identity issued by the UK as official travel documents by countries that do not recognise them as such; and if he will make a statement; [72483]

(2) which countries recognise (a) the Convention travel document issued to refugees and (b) certificates of identity issued by the UK as official travel documents, and if he will make a statement; [72482]

(3) what measures he is taking to facilitate the travel to countries who do not recognise the Convention travel document issued to refugees and certificates of identity issued by the UK as official travel documents by UK residents who hold such documents; and if he will make a statement; [72484]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 July 2002]: All countries which are signatories of the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees recognise the travel document issued to refugees under Article 28 of the Convention. We are not aware of any particular difficulties encountered by refugees resident in the United Kingdom when using this travel document.

The Certificate of Identity (CID) is a travel document issued to foreign nationals who are resident here but unable to obtain a passport from their national authorities. It is issued on a discretionary basis, not under an international convention. Non-recognition of the document by a number of European Union Member States who are members of the Schengen Group, notably France, Germany, Greece and Spain, means that CID holders who want to travel abroad for short visits, or other temporary purposes, are often unable to do so. It is a matter for individual countries whether the CID is recognised as a travel document.

The issue has been discussed regularly at meetings of consular representatives from the London Embassies of the Schengen Member States. At these meetings, and also in separate informal discussions, Home Office officials have given extensive assurances about matters relating to the CID, including particularly the re-admissibility to the UK of people who use the document to travel abroad.

Efforts to solve the problem and persuade objecting countries to recognise the CID are continuing.

Police (Ethnic Minority Gender Targets)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of introducing ethnic minority gender targets for the police. [9390]

Mr. Denham: There are no current plans to introduce such targets. The Government has published overall targets for the recruitment, retention and progression of minority ethnic police officers in "Dismantling Barriers". Forces have until 2009 to meet those targets. It remains a priority for the Government that the police service should represent the communities it serves.

Crime (Buckingham)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of crime prevention partnerships in reducing crime in the Buckingham constituency. [22628]

Mr. Denham: The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 requires the responsible authorities—police and local authorities—for each area jointly to conduct an audit of all crime and disorder and in the light of that and following local consultation, to formulate and implement a crime and disorder reduction strategy. In so doing, they must involve other local agencies, and the local community. The Act also requires the responsible authorities to keep the strategy under review to monitor its effectiveness.

The Buckingham constituency falls within the Aylesbury Vale Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRP). The Partnership has conducted an audit of crime and disorder in their area to inform their strategy for crime and disorder reduction for Aylesbury Vale for the period April 2002 to April 2005. This strategy was published in April 2002.

Latest recorded crime figures published in July 2002 for the 12-month period to March 2002 are set out in the table, along with comparisons for the previous two years. British Crime Survey (BCS) figures are not available at CDRP or Basic Command Unit (BCU) level, but figures for 2001–02 do show significant national reductions in the key categories of crime over the two years since the last BCS with a large enough sample size to demonstrate trends (1999): burglary fell by 23 per cent.; vehicle thefts fell by 14 per cent.; common assaults fell by 28 per cent.; vandalism fell by six per cent.; and overall crime fell by 14 per cent. The BCS also demonstrates that the chances of being a victim of crime remain stable at their lowest level for nearly twenty years. In the South East region, the BCS shows that burglary and vehicle crime levels are well below the national average, although the same cannot be said for violent crime.

Domestic Violence

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a process to ensure that (a) criminal justice agencies, (b) social services departments and (c) others can learn the lessons from those cases where a victim of domestic violence has subsequently been murdered by her abuser. [18646]

Mr. Denham: There are a number of processes already in place to ensure all relevant agencies learn from cases where domestic violence culminates in murder, and measures are currently underway to try and minimise the likelihood of such a tragic event.

In the event of a victim of domestic violence being murdered by her abuser, where the local police had prior contact or knowledge of the abuse, an internal police review should routinely be undertaken to consider the force's processes and identify failings. Such a review will report to the Chief Officer and will contain recommendations as to what processes are required to ensure that such a crime is not allowed to happen.

Tragically, children can also be the victims of murder following domestic violence. Chapter 8 of the Government's "Working Together to Safeguard Children" child protection guidance details the process by which Area Child Protection Committees can institute a serious case review into cases where a child dies and abuse or neglect are known or suspected to be a factor in the death. During such reviews, the agencies involved—the Police, Social Services, Education and Health Services—prepare reports of their involvement with the case. The final report then considers whether there are any lessons to be learned from the tragedy about the ways in which agencies work together to safeguard children, and the involvement between the family and relevant professionals.

The Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) are also currently piloting domestic violence murder reviews in cases that do not necessarily involve children, based on the same model as that just set out. Such reviews involve the key agencies and ensure an appropriate forum exists to take forward any recommendations that may prevent further homicides. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) is awaiting the results of the MPS pilots before requiring all forces to follow similar procedures.

Further, the Solicitor General has asked the Crown Prosecution Service to carry out multi-agency domestic violence murder reviews in a number of recent cases. These reviews, and those conducted by the MPS seek to predict the risk factors where domestic violence is occurring and improve risk management.

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which voluntary organisations he has consulted on his policy on domestic violence; and when he last met representatives from Refuge to discuss this issue. [71843]

Mr. Denham: The Home Office has consulted many voluntary sector organisations, and will continue to do so, on the policy of domestic violence. Officials from the Home Office and others from the Inter-Departmental Group on Domestic Violence also attend the Women's National Commission (WNC) Violence against Women Working Group which is made up of different voluntary sector organisations and projects working to combat domestic violence.

Organisations participating include Women's Aid Federation of England (WAFE), Refuge, Standing Together, Womankind Worldwide, Greater London Domestic Violence Project (GLDVP), Camden DV/Rape Crisis, IMKAAN, SERICC, Scottish Women's Aid, Welsh Women's Aid, Victim Support, Southall Black Sisters.

The Home Secretary has not held any meetings with Refuge to discuss domestic violence policy. My hon. Friend, Barbara Roche, Minister for Women, and also a member of the Home Office-led Ministerial Group on Domestic Violence with responsibility for education and awareness raising, has met their representatives very recently.

Police

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the minimum level of police cover allowed when overtime is managed down. [44025]

Mr. Denham: On 9 May 2002, the Police Negotiating Board (PNB) agreed a package of reforms to police pay and conditions of service. The PNB is the statutory negotiating body for police pay and conditions throughout the United Kingdom.

As part of a package of reforms, there will be a scheme to manage down overtime, with a service-wide target of a 15 per cent. reduction in the overtime bill over the three years from 2003–04. There will be local targets, taking account of force strength and effective management action already taken to manage down the overtime bill.

Achievement of the target will not be at the expense of police officer operational availability.

The scheme for managing down overtime will be complemented by the efficient and effective deployment of officers. The Inspectorate will monitor both the increased availability of officers for frontline duties and the managing down of overtime. Forces should be able to keep any savings achieved dependent on achieving improved visibility and availability, which will allow opportunities for increasing establishment or other initiatives designed to further improve visibility or availability.

The new pay and conditions package agreed on 9 May will provide a modernised pay structure rewarding those at the sharp end and reducing reliance on overtime. In so doing, it both underpins the rest of the police reform programme and demonstrates the Government's commitment to invest in the police service to achieve the reforms needed and to give it the support and flexibility it requires to deliver a first-class service to the public.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how much the amount of premium pay for overtime and roster rest day working will be reduced; and what this figure is in cash terms. [44024]

Mr. John Denham: On 9 May 2002, the Police Negotiating Board (PNB) agreed a package of reforms to police pay and conditions of service. The PNB is the statutory negotiating body for police pay and conditions throughout the United Kingdom.

Under the PNB Agreement, the rates of premium pay for overtime and rostered rest days are not being reduced.

Under the Agreement, there will be a scheme to manage down overtime, with a service-wide target of a 15 per cent. reduction in the overtime bill over the three years from 2003–04.

Achievement of the target will not be at the expense of the police officer operational availability. The scheme for managing down overtime will be complemented by the efficient and effective deployment of officers. The Inspectorate will monitor both the increased availability of officers for frontline duties and the managing down of overtime. Forces should be able to keep any savings achieved, dependent on achieving improved visibility and availability, which will allow opportunities for increasing establishment or other initiatives designed to further improve visibility or availability.

The new pay and conditions package agreed on 9 May will provide a modernised pay structure rewarding those at the sharp end and reducing reliance on overtime. In so doing, it both underpins the rest of the police reform programme and demonstrates the Government's commitment to invest in the police service to achieve the reforms needed and to give it the support and flexibility it requires to deliver a first-class service to the public.

Yarl's Wood Detention Centre

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people who were detained at Yarl's Wood Detention Centre at the time of the fire on 14 February have since been removed from the UK; [52959]

(2) when he expects the search of Yarl's Wood site to be completed; and if evidence has been discovered during the search of human remains. [52960]

Beverley Hughes: The immigration and asylum applications and appeals of those held at Yarl's Wood removal centre on 14 February have continued to be processed in the normal way. This will include the removal or deportation of individuals who reach the point where they no longer have any lawful basis to remain in this country. The number of persons removed or deported could be established only by an examination of individual case records at disproportionate cost.

I understand that Bedfordshire Police have completed their controlled clearance of the Yarl's Wood site and that the forensic examination of the material removed continues. No evidence of fatalities has been discovered to date.

Harmondsworth Retention Centre

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) suicides and (b) attempted suicides there have been at the Immigration Holding Centre at Harmondsworth in each of the last five years. [56130]

Beverley Hughes: Central records are not maintained specifically for suicide attempts by individuals held under Immigration Act powers. Information is, however, maintained on actual self-inflicted deaths. There has been one such incident. This occurred in January 2000 at Harmondsworth.

Anti-Semitic Attacks

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will collect statistics on the numbers of anti-semitic attacks. [57625]

Beverley Hughes: The Government has no plans to collect separate statistics on anti-Semitic attacks. These cases will be included in the total figures for racist incidents and in the statistics on racially or religiously aggravated crimes. The "Code of Practice on Reporting and Recording Racist Incidents—In response to recommendation 15 of the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry Report", lists the minimum data content for recording racist incidents by the police and other agencies. This data content includes the religion of the victim and the type of incident. The Government also receives statistics from other sources including reports of anti-Semitic incidents from the Jewish community itself.

Street Crime

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the reasons underlying the recent increase in street crime in England. [56238]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 21 May 2002]: Crime overall has fallen in recent years and the chances of becoming a victim of crime are at their lowest for 20 years. However, by contrast street crime—i.e. robberies, snatch thefts—has shown a sharp increase, particularly over the last year.

Tackling street crime is now a top priority for the government, which announced a programme of action on 17 March 2002.

The government recognises that street crime has social and economic causes that cannot be tackled by the police and criminal justice agencies alone. That is why this strategy brings together all agencies, all departments, and all systems that impact on young people at risk from crime, at risk of offending, and offenders themselves and to work together to more effectively tackle street crime.

The work aims to reverse the upward trend before looking to bring about sustainable reductions in the long-term.

This means tackling persistent offenders, speeding up the criminal justice system and giving a better service for victims and witnesses.

We need to tackle the roots of the problem by getting to children before they become involved in crime. This means tackling truancy, young people excluded from school should not be left to roam the streets. And from September we are providing for all permanently excluded pupils to have access to full-time education. We are also supporting the placement of up to 100 police officers in schools most affected by crime.

We are also providing constructive activities to keep children out of trouble during school holidays with an additional £12 million for Summer Splash schemes.

It is also part of our strategy on drugs to break the link between drugs and crime.

Finally, we are supporting the work of the mobile phone industry to put stolen phones—a key factor in the rise in street crime—out of use by legislating to ban the re-programming of mobile phones.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mobile telephone thefts there were, broken down by police force area, in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [72088]

Mr. Denham: Centrally the Home Office does not collect or collate statistics on mobile phone thefts.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the proportion of street robberies that involved mobile telephone theft in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [72089]

Mr. Denham: The Home Office does not centrally collect or collate statistics on the number of mobile phone thefts and individual police forces do not routinely collect such figures either, although some do for their own purposes. We cannot therefore estimate the proportion of street robberies that involved mobile phone theft in the last 12 months.

However, a Home Office Report on "Mobile Phone Theft" published in January 2002 estimated that in 2000–01 mobile phones were stolen in 28 per cent. of all robberies.

The Government has made significant progress in working with the mobile phone industry and the police to tackle mobile phone theft. From the end of September, network operators will be able to bar stolen handsets across all networks by reference to the unique International Mobile Equipment Identity (IMEI) number. To complement this measure, the Government has passed the Mobile Telephones (Re-programming) Bill which creates new criminal offences of unauthorised re-programming of the IMEI number and possessing, supplying or offering to supply equipment for that purpose. We are continuing to press the industry to put in place a long-term strategy to enhance the security of 3G devices.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the reasons for the change in crime levels in Avon and Somerset over the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [56537]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 21 May 2002]: The most recently published recorded crime figures show that in the 12 months to March 2002, overall crime levels in Avon and Somerset rose by 20 per cent. Although drug offences fell by 7 per cent. during this period, Avon and Somerset saw rises in the other major categories of crime. The most significant increase was a 77 per cent. rise in robbery. This is why the Government launched the Street Crime Initiative in April of this year, which covers the 10 Police Force areas with the worst robbery problem—including Avon and Somerset. The initiative builds new measures on top of plans which were already in progress to ensure co-ordinated action across all parts of Government to bring street robbers to swift and effective justice.

The National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS), which was introduced in Avon and Somerset and several other forces in April 2001, and in all forces in April 2002, has contributed to changing levels of recorded crime. Across England and Wales, the NCRS, along with other changes to police recording practices, has had the effect of increasing recorded crime statistics by at least five per cent. this year, which suggest that crime levels have only increased by two per cent. In Avon and Somerset it has caused an uplift of 10 per cent. It is expected to have an even more marked effect on next year's crime statistics (an estimated uplift of 15–20 per cent.).

The new standard aims to promote greater consistency between police forces in the recording of crime. Every police force must record all incidents, whether reported by victims, witnesses or third parties, and whether crime-related or not. This will result in the registration of an incident report by the police. Following the initial registration, an incident will be recorded as a crime (notifiable offence) if the circumstances as reported amount to a crime defined by law, and if there is no credible evidence to the contrary. As a result, incidents which previously may not have been recorded, are being included in subsequent crime statistics. The effect has been most marked nationally in relation to violence against the person where a five per cent. fall has been turned into an eight per cent. rise by the effects of greater levels of recording by the police.

Departmental Police (Bristol, East)

Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Bristol, East constituency, the effects on Bristol of his Department's policies and actions (a) from 5 May 1994 to 2 May 1997, (b) from 2 May 1997 to 7 May 1998, and (c) since 7 May 1998. [35602]

Mr. Denham: We are not able to provide statistical information for the effects of our policies prior to 2 May 1997 as this would amount to disproportionate cost.

Brislington schools have been given approximately £89,000 for a schools' initiative. This will tackle issues through running "Coping with Teenagers" training for parents, a peer mentoring programme, 10 week Consequences of Crime course for those "at risk", a Lessons Withdrawal programme for those who would have been excluded and installing a new non-attendance computer system.

Further funding has been granted for various Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) initiatives. The Kingsdown Estate has received over £257,000 for a partnership between the council, police and local residents to target an urban residential area with three tower blocks by providing additional 26 cameras to an existing system. The objectives of this scheme are to reduce fear of crime, improve personal and building security, reduce graffiti, vandalism, criminal damage and vehicle crime and improve communication and response of police patrols in the area. Further CCTV schemes have been set up in Symes, St. Paul's and St. Jude's. These form part of an integrated package to reduce drug-trading, fear of crime and prostitution.

Several schemes have been set up under the Reducing Burglary Initiative in Knowle Estate, Hartcliffe (North and South), St. Agnes, Cromwell and Upper Easton. These involve providing additional window locks, "Dawn to Dusk" lighting, improved fencing and promotion of Neighbourhood Watch schemes. A significant amount of resources will placed into target hardening and measures are to be adopted to reduce repeat victimisation, improve offender detection, raise public awareness of crime prevention issues and provide research, rehabilitation and diversion of offenders. There will be interagency working including the police, Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships and Age Concern. Follow up schemes are planned to gather feedback from local agencies and offenders. Offenders will also be referred to drug rehabilitation.

The City of Bristol will receive a minimum of £1.6 million over the next two years for a Communities Against Drugs programme. The funding is delivered through a plan agreed between the Drug Action Team, the Crime and Disorder Partnership and Local Authority. The intentions of this scheme are to disrupt drugs markets; tackle drug related crime and strengthen communities to resist drugs.

Bristol is now operating an Intensive Surveillance and Supervision Programme (ISSP). ISSP is the most rigorous, non-custodial intervention available for young offenders to tackle their offending behaviour. There are 41 schemes operating nationally targeting 2,500 of the most prolific young offenders a year at an annual cost of £15 million. When fully operational it will have the capacity to deal with 25 young offenders at any one time—50 in a year. Currently there are three people on the scheme. The programmes are managed and funded by the Youth Justice Board and the Bristol scheme has been awarded a grant of over £895,000.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website (www.homeoffice.gov.uk). The Annual Report for 2001–02 has now been published and can also be found under the same website.

Committee Mandates

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the mandate of the Committee for the implementation of the programme of exchange, training and co-operation between law enforcement authorities (OISIN) is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement; [58450]

(2) what the mandate of the Committee for the implementation of the incentive, exchange, training and co-operation programme for the prevention of crime (Hippocrates) is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement; [58449]

(3) what the mandate of the Committee for the implementation of the programme of incentives and exchanges for legal practitioners (Grotius general and criminal) is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement; [58446]

(4) what the mandate of the Committee for the implementation of the incentive, exchange, training and co-operation programme for combating trade in human beings and the sexual exploitation of children (STOP) is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement; [58447]

(5) what the mandate of the Committee for the implementation of the Joint Action establishing a programme of exchanges, training and co-operation for persons responsible for action to combat organised crime (Falcone) is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [58448]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The Falcone, Hippocrates, Grotius criminal, Oisin II and STOP II Committees assist the European Commission in the management and implementation of programmes which co-fund projects to promote knowledge of and skills in combating organised crime (Falcone) and the prevention of crime (Hippocrates); to promote knowledge of Member States' legal and judicial systems and facilitate co-operation in criminal matters (Grotius criminal); to develop and enhance co-operation between police, customs and other national law enforcement authorities through exchanges, training courses and seminars (Oisin II); and to encourage practical co-operation between the persons responsible for action against the trade in human beings and the sexual exploitation of children in the Member States (STOP II).

Each Committee normally meets twice a year, initially to agree the annual work programme and criteria for evaluating and selecting bids for funding, and subsequently to discuss the bids which have been received and agree the allocation of funds to successful projects.

The UK is represented on each Committee by a Home Office official and an official from the UK Permanent Representation in Brussels. A representative from Her Majesty's Customs and Exercise also occasionally attends the Oisin II Committee when appropriate.

The programmes are funded by the European Community budget and travel costs to attend Committee meetings are met by the European Commission. However, the Home Office (and HM Customs as appropriate) pays a subsistence allowance to cover attendance at a Committee meeting.

The committees met on 22 and 23 July to agree the successful bids for funding for 2002.

The Commission is required to prepare annual reports on the implementation of the programmes which are submitted to the Council and European Parliament. The reports are also published on the EUROPA Internet website. I do not see a need for further measures to increase the Committees' accountability and transparency.

The Council is currently negotiating a new funding programme which will replace Falcone, Hippocrates, Grotius criminal, Oisin II and STOP II when they expire at the end of 2002. The creation of one programme should streamline the current administration process and therefore reduce costs. It will also allow the European Commission and Member States to have a broad overview of all the projects which are submitted for funding in the field of criminal law and crime prevention and consequently take a more strategic approach in selecting which projects to assist.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will answer the question from the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South of 17 April, reference number 51632, on guidelines on sex abuse cases; and if he will make a statement. [65749]

Mr. Denham: With apologies for the delay in responding I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 24 July 2002, Official Report, column 1489W.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will answer the question from the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South of 22 May, ref. 58561, on police officers in Portsmouth; and if he will make a statement. [65745]

Mr. Denham: With apologies for the delay in responding I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 18 July 2002, Official Report, column 561W.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will answer the written question from the hon. Member for Chichester, tabled on 22 May, on the official travel of departmental and non-departmental special advisors. [72684]

Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary replied to the hon. Member on 24 July 2002, Official Report, column 1494W.

Entitlement Identity Card

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will define the rigorous procedures to check (a) access to information and (b) protection from unauthorised access referred to in paragraph 1.3 of his consultation document on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud; [72105]

(2) what non-Governmental partners he plans will use the proposed entitlement identity card; and whether they will contribute revenue to the running costs of the card; [72114]

(3) what his estimate is of the cost of (a) a full cost-benefit analysis of an entitlement identity card scheme and (b) a proper risk assessment of the challenges posed by the procurement and roll-out, as referred to in Cmnd 5557; [72109]

(4) what checks he plans the issuing authority for a proposed entitlement identity card to make with the banking sector; and what exchanges of information are proposed; [72120]

(5) if he will list the organisations (a) to which he has sent a copy of the consultation paper on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud (Cmnd 5557) and (b) from which he has specifically requested views; [72103]

(6) what assessment he has made of the disadvantages of a non-compulsory, non-universal entitlement identity card; [72106]

(7) whether he plans that the proposed entitlement identity card would allow the (a) police and (b) paramedics and hospital staff access to medical records maintained on the smartcard; [72118]

(8) whether he plans that fingerprint records used in a proposed entitlement identity card would be available to the police; [72117]

(9) what estimate he has made of the number of (a) universal and (b) voluntary entitlement identity cards which will be (i) lost and (ii) stolen per annum; [72158]

(10) if he will define the term core personal information used in paragraph 1.3 of his consultation document on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud; and if he will list the particulars. [72104]

Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary, made a statement to the House on 3 July, announcing the publication of a consultation paper on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud. The consultation period will last until 10 January 2002. The Government has made it clear that the introduction of an entitlement card would be a major step and that it would not proceed without consulting widely and considering all the views expressed very carefully.

One of the purposes of the consultation exercise is to identify potential partners. Views are welcomed in the consultation paper from organisations providing services in the public and private sectors on whether they would like to link services to a card scheme and what features they would want to see in a scheme that would most benefit their services. The consultation paper also discusses sharing revenue generated by potential partners' use of a card scheme to cover some of the costs of setting up and administrating a card scheme. If such an arrangement could be agreed, this would reduce the fees charged for entitlement cards.

There are no plans to hold medical records on entitlement cards. The consultation paper discusses holding, at the cardholder's consent, a limited amount of medical information that could be used in an emergency, for example, current medical information on allergies.

There are no plans for the issuing authority for any entitlement card to make checks with the banking sector.

The set up and issuing costs for a universal scheme outlined in the consultation paper are based on the costs of building on the driving licence and passport systems extrapolated to cover all of the resident population. There is no separate estimate for a voluntary scheme.

It is not possible to estimate how many people would apply for an entitlement card as opposed to an entitlement card issued in the form of a photocard driving licence or a passport card. On the assumption that those who do not hold driving licences and passports at present all opt for an entitlement card and that these cards would be lost or stolen at the same rate as driving licences were in 2000–01 (which is the latest date for which complete figures are available), it is estimated that 424,000 cards would be reported as lost or stolen each year once a scheme was fully implemented.

A list of those organisations to which copies of the consultation paper have been or are in the process of being sent has been placed in the Library.

The Government has invited views from all of these organisations. We intend to contact other appropriate organisations as they are suggested to us.

The consultation paper requests views on what information should be held in any central register which might be used to administer a card scheme and what information should be displayed or stored on the card itself.

The proposed central register and entitlement card/driving licence would hold core personal information necessary to administer an effective scheme. The information to be held on the card and in the register would include the holder's name; date and place of birth; residential address; validity dates of card(s) and issuing authority; digitised image of signature; photograph; National Insurance number; driver number; a unique personal number; nationality; sex; employment status; and possibly biometric information.

The central register would also include cross references to other personal identifiers used in schemes linked to the entitlement card such as passport number and driver number. It might also include any secret password, pass phrase or PIN used to help authenticate transactions if it was decided to incorporate such a facility in a card scheme.

The consultation paper invites views on what specific measures should be included in any entitlement card scheme to ensure compatibility with the principles of the Data Protection Act 1998.

The consultation paper goes into detail about how a scheme would comply with all eight principles. Paragraphs 6.15 and 6.16 of the consultation paper discuss compliance with the Sixth and Seventh Principles of the Data Protection Act. The Sixth Principle stipulates that personal data shall be processed in accordance with the rights of data subjects under the Act. The Seventh Principle stipulates that appropriate technical and organisational measures shall be taken against unauthorised or unlawful processing of personal data and against accidental loss or destruction of, or damage to, personal data.

The procedures adopted for any entitlement card scheme would build on the experience and expertise of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and the UK Passport Service, both of which have a great deal of experience in administering large databases of personal information, including where they are administered by a third party under contract. Both are well placed to develop detailed procedures to comply with the requirements of the Seventh Principle should the Government decide to implement a scheme in this way.

Paragraph 2.9 of the consultation paper assesses the disadvantages of a non-compulsory, non-universal entitlement card scheme. Such a voluntary scheme could not guarantee complete coverage of the population, service providers would need to support different ways of checking the entitlement of the people they served. Benefits for a scheme would therefore be lower than for a scheme where everyone was required to have a card. Those people most likely to benefit from a simple, straightforward means of asserting their rights and entitlements may well be amongst the least likely to apply for a voluntary one. Unless all of society were to hold one, the protections a card scheme could afford to the broader community would be reduced or eliminated.

The costs of a full cost- benefit analysis of an entitlement card scheme, and of a proper risk assessment of the challenges of the procurement and roll-out cannot be determined until a decision is taken on what type of scheme, if any, the Government intend to proceed with. This will not be decided until the views received during the consultation exercise have been carefully analysed.

There are no firm plans to use fingerprints in an entitlement card scheme. The consultation paper discusses the inclusion of biometric information as part of a scheme and fingerprinting is one of the options. In its discussion of the possible use of fingerprints, the paper explains that it would not be necessary to record fingerprints to the same standard used by the police. For example, there would not be a need to identify people using partial fingerprint records such as those retrieved from crime scenes.

Paragraph 3.29 of the consultation document discusses whether the police should have access to any biometric information, such as fingerprints, held on the entitlement card database. Most offenders are already known to the police, who have their own biometric databases of fingerprints and DNA which are more sophisticated than anything envisaged for an entitlement card scheme. It may also cause public unease and a lack of confidence in an entitlement card scheme if the police were to have routine access. However, there may be cases in very closely prescribed circumstances, such as in matters of national security, or the prevention or detection of very serious crimes, where the police might have access to the information. Specific views on this issue are sought in the consultation paper, point 15 (iii).

Drugs Possession

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) arrested and (b) charged with possession of Class (i) A, (ii) B and (iii) C drugs in the West Somerset Division of Avon and Somerset Police in each year since 1997. [73263]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Arrest data are only available centrally for all drug offences as a whole, not for individual types of offences, so it is not possible to provide the level of detail requested. The figures given in the table relate to persons referred to courts in the West Somerset Division by the police for unlawful possession of drugs, and also to those found guilty of such offences.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve the service for people who attempt to use the Immigration and Nationality Directorate hotline. [72403]

Beverley Hughes: In the last six months, calls answered by the Immigration and Nationality Enquiry Bureau have increased by a third resulting in an average in excess of 21,000 calls a week. This has been attributed to the introduction of new staff (brought in via a regular recruitment programme) and to the new computerised telephone system, which is helping to manage the queues more effectively by giving the answers to commonly asked questions whilst callers are queuing.

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many registered letters have been lost when sent out from the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in Croydon in the last 12 months. [72402]

Beverley Hughes: Over the period June 2001 to June 2002, 119 claims for compensation were made against the Royal Mail for Recorded Delivery items sent out by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in Croydon, but not delivered.

Terrorism

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the ethical guidelines that will be followed in respect of co-operation with EU National Anti-Terrorist Evaluation Teams. [72159]

Mr. Blunkett: Article 6 of the draft EU Council Decision for establishing a mechanism for evaluating the legal systems and their implementation at national level in the fight against terrorism (8811/2/02) states that the visits of the evaluation teams established under the Decision would be arranged by the Member State. Any visits arranged to the United Kingdom would be entirely in accordance with longstanding policy and codes of behaviour in relation to matters of national security and our national law, including the Official Secrets Act 1989. Article 9 of the draft Decision requires the evaluation teams to respect the confidentiality of any information they receive in connection with their task.

Child Pornography

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts regarding tackling the distribution of child pornography on a European-wide scale; and what proposals were examined. [72526]

Mr. Hilary Benn: Member States of the European Union have been negotiating since January 2000 on a draft Framework Decision concerning the harmonisation of national laws in respect of the sexual exploitation of children and child pornography. The Instrument will require Member States to adopt common definitions and minimum penalties in relation to the possession, acquisition, production and distributing of child pornography. It has been on the agenda for discussion at JHA Councils on 27–28 September and 6–7 December 2001; and 25–26 April and 13–14 June 2002.

On-line child pornography was also discussed at the meeting of G8 Justice and Interior Ministers in May. Ministers commissioned the relevant experts to: explore the creation of an international database to help locate victims and identified and apprehend perpetrators; and to implement a G8 strategy involving improved international co-operation; prevention; strengthened co-operation among law enforcement, industry, and civil society groups; public awareness; and outreach to other countries.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been convicted of producing and possessing child pornography in the last year for which figures are available. [72523]

Hilary Benn: Convictions for producing child pornography are not directly identifiable on the Home Office Court Proceedings database.

The available information relates to possessing, taking or making indecent photographs, or pseudo-photographs, of children under the Protection of Children Act 1978 and the Criminal Justice Act 1988 or for possessing obscene material for gain under the Obscene Publications Act 1959.

This is contained in the table and relates to England and Wales in 2000.

Statistics for 2001 will be available in the autumn.

[1] These data are on the principal offence basis.

[2] Staffordshire Police Force were only able to supply a sample of data for magistrates' courts proceedings covering one full week in each quarter of 2000. Although sufficient to estimate higher orders of data, these data are not robust at a detailed level and so are excluded from this analysis.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken since 1997 to prevent the distribution of child pornography. [72522]

Hilary Benn: The Government is determined to tackle child pornography whether on or off line and the criminal law applies equally to both.

In January 2001 we raised the maximum penalties for taking, making, distributing or showing indecent photographs or pseudo-photographs of children to 10 years imprisonment (from three years), and the maximum penalty for simple possession of such material to five years (from six months). Also in 2001 we made the importation of indecent or obscene material a serious arrestable offence to allow Customs and Excise officers and the police greater powers in investigating child pornography offences.

In response to concerns about the availability of child pornography on the Internet, a hotline for reporting this and other potentially illegal material was established by the Internet Watch Foundation (IWF) an industry funded organisation, in December 1996. Since its inception over 40,000 items of child pornography have been removed by Internet Service Providers (ISPs) in response to the notice and take down procedure. The IWF also sends details to the police, or, since the majority of child pornography originates outside the United Kingdom, to the enforcement agency of the country concerned, via the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS). In February 2002, the IWF extended its policy, recommending to ISPs that they do not carry newsgroups which have been identified as regularly hosting child pornography or those with names that appear to advertise child pornography.

In November 2000, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, announced a £25 million investment in the police over three years specifically to fight hi-tech crime and to enhance the capability of the police at a national and local level to investigate computer related offences, including the possession and distribution of illegal pornography. This included the setting up last year of a National High Tech Crime Unit within the National Crime Squad as a centre of excellence, which has already mounted a number of investigations in this area, as well as providing support to investigations let by other forces.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers work in the UK special paedophile unit; what their annual budget is; and what plans he has to increase staff and resources. [72525]

Mr. Denham: Each United Kingdom police force is individually responsible for the investigation of such crimes within its own area and most have their own specialist units. In addition the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) provides support through the provision of intelligence by its Serious Sex Offenders Unit, which has eight staff and a budget of £370,000 per annum and the National Crime Squad and National High Tech Crime Unit carry out operations and provide assistance to other forces.

Allocation of resources now and in the future for the investigation of paedophile crime is a matter for individual Chief Officers of Police.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the EU Committee for implementation of the action programme to tackle discrimination is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [67746]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The next meeting of the committee is scheduled for 27 November 2002.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Public Disorder

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of whether the PSA target to reduce the level of disorder will be met by March. [47400]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 10 April 2002]: There is no Public Service Agreement target for disorder. However, the Government is committed to the reduction of disorder and anti-social behaviour in our neighbourhoods. Among the important steps we have taken are the measures in the Police Reform Act 2002 to: improve the effectiveness of Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs); create community support officers and to stop nuisance use of motor vehicles. The majority of Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships now have anti-social behaviour co-ordinators in place to ensure effective local delivery of reduction in anti-social behaviour.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the ethnic groups enjoying separate monitoring; and if he will estimate the size of each such group. [63612]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 21 June 2002]: There is no central record of monitoring of ethnic or religious groups taking place in Great Britain. The key source of population data for monitoring ethnicity is the Census. Census 1991 data is the latest available and Census 2001 data should become available from the Office for National Statistics for the United Kingdom in 2003.

The ethnicity question in the 2001 Census is based on a "self-classification" coding system. Individuals can identify themselves against the existing 16 ethnic Census categories, and if none of these capture the individual's ethnicity, additional space is provided where they can identify their ethnicity. As such, the Census captures the full breadth of ethnic groups.

For each ethnic group, the Census can provide information on demographic profile, household structure and type of accommodation, health, educational achievement and employment.

In relation to the new Race Relations (Amendment) 2000 Act, the Specific Duty requires, among other things, that public bodies carry out ethnic monitoring.

Narcotics and Psychotropics

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the EU Committee for the application of the rules on the manufacture and placing on the market of certain substances used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [70913]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The procedures and guidance for meetings of the Drug Precursor Committee are contained in Articles 10 of both European Union Council Regulation 3677/90 and European Union Council Directive 92/109.

The Committee usually meets every quarter and the next meeting is scheduled to take place in Brussels on 19 September 2002.

The United Kingdom Government is a member of the Committee, represented at all meetings by the Home Office, the lead United Kingdom Government Department for this Committee. When necessary other Government Departments also attend and it is open to the Scottish Executive to do so.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in, discussions with the Home Office at official and Ministerial level on the formulation of European Union policies that touch on matters falling within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Faith Communities

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list projects involving faith communities which are supported by his Department. [71844]

Beverley Hughes: The Home Office supports projects involving the following faith-based groups:

Ecstasy

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether seized ecstasy tablets are tested to see whether they are cut with other illegal drugs. [71854]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Ecstasy can, and does kill unpredictably. There is no such thing as a safe dose and Ecstasy does not need to be contaminated with any other drug to kill.

Seized ecstasy tablets (MDMA) are tested for the presence of other illegal drugs by the Forensic Science Service (FSS). The analytical methods employed by the FSS to test ecstasy tablets identify a range of other controlled substances, such as other ecstasy type drugs; opiates such as heroin and codeine; cocaine; amphetamines and methylamphetamine; diazepam; cannabis and methadone. The test will identify material down to a concentration of one per cent. or less.

In the case of a suspected ecstasy related fatality, the FSS would screen for, and if present, quantify the ecstasy in the deceased's blood. The FSS would also screen for other common controlled substances, such as the types listed above.

Criminal Justice and Police Act

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 with regard to the powers of the police to confiscate alcohol in sealed containers. [72099]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 provides the police with new powers to confiscate alcohol from persons who are drinking in areas that have been designated by the relevant local authority under section 13 of the Act. The Act also amended existing powers to confiscate alcohol from under-age drinkers in public places. In both instances it is now clear that the police can confiscate alcohol in containers that have been opened, but not alcohol in sealed containers.

We have discussed the current position with the Association of Chief Police Officers and we have asked them for advice on whether a further change in the law would be helpful, to clarify or strengthen police powers to confiscate alcohol, including alcohol in sealed containers, from under-age drinkers or from persons who are drinking and causing nuisance in designated areas. We shall seek to introduce any change in the law as soon as Parliamentary time allows.

Drug-related Crime

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of (a) the number of (i) crimes and (ii) violent crimes committed per annum in the UK to finance the purchase of illegal drugs and (b) the total value of the goods and money stolen per annum in the UK to finance the purchase of illegal drugs. [72655]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Recorded crime figures include statistics on drugs offences and on acquisitive crimes, such as burglary, but do not record whether the latter are related to an offender's drug habits. Levels of drug-related crime cannot be measured directly as no routine statistical data are collected on whether an offence may have been committed as a result of drug taking. However, the NEW-ADAM (New English and Welsh Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring) research published between 1998 and 2001 sheds some light on the links between drugs and acquisitive crime. The research is insufficiently advanced, however, to reveal the precise links between drugs and violent crime. Neither are we able to supply an estimate of the total value of the goods and money stolen per annum in the United Kingdom to finance the purchase of illegal drugs.

NEW-ADAM research by Bennett reported in Home Office Research Study 205, "Drugs and Crime: The Results of the Second Developmental Stage of the NEW-ADAM Programme" and in Research Findings 148 and 183 has shown that the mean number of property crimes committed by those using heroin and cocaine/crack was around 200 in the last 12 months compared to 52 for those using neither heroin nor crack/cocaine. Over forty per cent. of arrestees thought that their drug use and crime were connected, and when asked about this connection, more than two-thirds said that this was due to the need for money to buy drugs. Those who tested positive for three or more drugs reported on average three times the number of offences and eight times the illegal income, as those who did not test positive. They also reported twice as many arrests in the last twelve months.

Findings reported in "Arrest Referral: Emerging Findings from the National Monitoring and Evaluation Programme" (Home Office: Sondhi, O'Shea, Williams, 2002) were used to estimate that the total spend on illegal drugs by those seen by Arrest Referral workers as around £550 million (or around £11,000 for an individual), although not all of this figure will be directly attributable to crime. The NEW-ADAM research has also found that in the year 1999–2000, on average arrestees reported generating just over £5,000 in illegal income, the most common source of which was property crime.

Speeding

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drivers were fined and how much was paid in fines for speeding in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland in (i) 2000 and (ii) 2001; and how many police man hours were used to catch drivers who were guilty of speeding in (A) England, (B) Wales and (C) Northern Ireland in each year. [72172]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The table shows the total number and amount (£) of fines ordered to be paid following conviction for speeding offences within England and Wales separately for 2000. As the majority of such offences are dealt with by the issue of a fixed penalty, the table also shows the total amount of fixed penalties ordered to be paid. Not all fines and fixed penalties will have been paid. Information for 2001 will be available in the Autumn.

The total police time in England spent on traffic is eight per cent. We cannot break this figure down into time spent on speeding offences without a specific data gathering exercise which would be both time consuming and could only be collected at disproportionate cost.

Information relating to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Operation Landmark

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Operation Landmark and what resources are being put into it. [72524]

Mr. Denham: Operation Landmark was an international police operation led by the National Crime Squad to combat paedophile activity on the Internet, focusing on open source data in newsgroups hosted by a British-based Internet Service Provider in November 2001.

By prioritising the email accounts of the most active individuals in the newsgroups, 130 targets were identified around the world. The National Crime Squad produced evidential packs on the targets and briefed officers from the relevant national and domestic police forces. Detailed investigations were then launched against each target; in the United Kingdom each of the ten targets were arrested and subsequently charged and their computer equipment seized. Eleven child victims have been identified as a result of the operation so far. The operation involved the National Crime Squad, Interpol, nine United Kingdom police forces and 12 other international police forces.

Other recent operations against paedophile use of the Internet have had good results at home and internationally. These have involved United Kingdom police forces, the National Criminal Intelligence Service and the National Crime Squad and the new National High Tech Crime Unit within it.

Police Stations (Telephone Response)

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average answering time is for someone ringing a police station directly in (a) Surrey, (b) England and (c) Wales. [72404]

Mr. Denham: Information on the average answering time for someone telephoning a police station is not collected centrally.

Asylum Seekers (Afghanistan)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many failed asylum seekers from Afghanistan have been repatriated in each of the last 12 months. [73220]

Beverley Hughes: The latest available information on the number of Afghan principal asylum applicants removed from the United Kingdom relates to 2001 and is given in the table. These figures exclude persons departing voluntarily without informing the Home Office.

[P] Provisional data, subject to change.
[E] Data have been estimated due to data quality issues.
[1] Includes persons departing "voluntarily" after enforcement action had been initiated against them.
[2] Nationality breakdown of dependants removed is not available.

I regret that information on the destination of asylum seekers removed or departing voluntarily from the United Kingdom is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only by examining individual case files at disproportionate cost. Therefore it is not possible to determine how many of these persons were returned or departed voluntarily to Afghanistan. However, it has until recently been our policy to not normally enforce returns to Afghanistan, so the majority of those recorded above will have been returned to another (third) country rather than to Afghanistan.

Information on the nationality of asylum seekers removed in the calendar year 2001 was published on 31 July in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 2001", copies of which are available in the Library and via the Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate (RDS) website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html. Nationality data for the first quarter (January to March) of 2002 will be published on 30 August on the RDS website.

Probation Service

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money is owed within the probation service; and (a) by and (b) to whom it is owed. [73225]

Hilary Benn: The Home Office only has records relating to the outstanding debts on capital raised for Probation Service investment, dating from the period before 1990. The Home Office pays local authorities a grant in respect of the principal and interest on this capital financing debt. A table of the local authority debts, as at 1 April 2001, is provided in the table. Between 1990 and 2001, capital debt was financed by the local authority capital financing standard spending assessment (SSA). Since April 2001 however, local authorities are no longer responsible for Probation Service capital investment.

With the advent of the National Probation Service from 1 April 2001, the National Probation Directorate is now collecting and collating the information relating to the 2001–02 accounts for the 42 local probation boards, including any creditors. When this exercise has been completed and audited, the consolidated accounts will be laid before Parliament.

Throckmorton Accumulation Centre

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the health and environmental implications of locating (a) pregnant and (b) other asylum seekers at Throckmorton, with particular reference to (i) the Hill of Moor landfill site and (ii) the foot and mouth disease burial site; and if he will make a statement. [72920]

Beverley Hughes: These issues will be assessed as part of the planning process.

Child-related Work

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what strategy he has to ensure that all people who work with children have the necessary skills and experience to do the job. [72909]

Mr. Denham: The Government's objective is that all those who work with children and young people should be supported and trained appropriately. There is already substantial investment in training for professionals in the public sector who work with children and young people but we are always looking at how we can do more. For example, we are currently developing proposals aimed at bringing consistency to the training and development of all school support staff, which will be the subject of consultation during the Autumn term; we are also introducing a 3-year degree level qualification in social work in England from September 2003 to replace the current 2-year Diploma courses.

The Cross-cutting Review of Children at Risk, within the Government's Spending Review 2002, recommended that there should be a common core of competence and knowledge shared by all who work with children and young people. CYPU is responsible for taking this recommendation forward, in close conjunction with lead Government Departments and with the Sector Skills Councils who will be responsible for Occupational Standards across the children's sector.

Financial Services Sector

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Minister for Women how many fair pay champions have been nominated to spread best practice in the financial services sector. [70616]

Ms Hewitt: Fair pay champions have been appointed to assist the Government's drive towards achieving equal pay for women through the promotion and sharing of good practice in their sectors. We are currently working with the Equal Opportunities Commission to understand how the pay gap varies from sector to sector, including the financial services sector, and to support sectors in closing the gender pay gap.

No Fair Pay champion has yet been appointed in the Financial Services Sector but we do have a Fair Pay Champion in the Retail Finance sector, a sector currently undergoing major organisational change and one with the highest pay gap at 42 per cent.

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Minister for Women how many financial sector employers in the (a) public and (b) private sector have carried out pay reviews with a view to ensuring equal pay since 2000. [70615]

Ms Hewitt: In relation to the public sector, the Government has committed all Civil Service departments and agencies to undertake an equal pay review and have in place action plans to close any equal pay gaps, by April 2003. Departments and agencies are at various stages of reviewing their pay systems. In relation to the private sector, we do not have this information and it would involve disproportionate cost to provide it. However the Kingsmill Report included examples of financial sector organisations which have carried out employment and pay reviews or are committed to doing so. The Equal Opportunities Commission is also supporting organisations in conducting Equal Pay reviews and is planning to monitor progress by employers.

Revolution

Angus Robertson: To ask the Minister for Women when the EU Committee for the action programme to promote gender equality is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [67745]

Ms Hewitt: The EU Equality Advisory Committee will meet on 9 October. An official will attend this meeting from the Department's Women and Equality Unit.

Each Member State delegation is considered to be one committee member. Each member can not be represented by more than one person. However, with the Chairperson's permission, the delegations may be accompanied by experts, at the expense of the Member State concerned.

The Equal Opportunities Commission is separately represented at the Equality Advisory Committee.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touched on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General (1) what weaknesses have been identified in the CPS complaints handling procedure; what has been done to address the weaknesses; and what performance evaluations have taken place in each CPS region to ensure that corrective action has been effective; [60219]

(2) what good practice has been identified in the CPS complaints handling procedure; where examples of good practice arose; and what action has been taken to share good complaints handling practice throughout the CPS regions. [60220]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 10 June 2002]: Her Majesty's Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate (HM CPSI), which undertakes regular inspections of all CPS Areas and a study by the Joint Standing Committee on Good Practice, (which incorporates membership from both HM CPSI and the CPS) along with the complaints statistics that are compiled on a quarterly basis and are included in the CPS Annual Report reveal the following weaknesses in the CPS complaint's procedure:

(i) There is a wide variation in the quality of complaints processing. Although all CPS Areas maintain a register of complaints received from the public, some Areas record them alphabetically whilst others record them chronologically. There are occasions when it is difficult to identify what has happened to a complaint and whether follow up action has been taken.

(ii) The annual target for 2001–02, was to increase to 93 per cent. the proportion of replies to complaints which are made within 10 days. This target was not met. Timely replies were made in 81.9 per cent. of cases compared with 95.3 per cent. in 2000–01.

The main recommendations suggested include the use of a standard framework for logging complaints and that there should be periodic reviews of complaints by senior management to assess the timeliness and quality of responses to complaints and to analyse any developing trends with a view to identifying aspects of performance and processes which may need improvement or revision.

Performance evaluation is an ongoing process which is assessed by HM CPSI when they revisit a specific CPS Area. HM CPSI reports on CPS Areas can be obtained on request to the relevant CPS Area.

The following good practises within the CPS complaints procedure were identified nationally:

(i) A consistent approach in defining what is a complaint.

(ii) The use of a Register to log all complaints.

(iii) A consistent approach to time limits (a full response to be sent to the complainant within 3 working days of receipt into the Department, or failing that an acknowledgement to be sent within this time and the full response to be sent within 10 working days).

A Good Practice guide, approved by the CPS Board in June, will shortly be circulated to staff via the CPS intranet.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General if she records correspondence and complaints primarily by the name of the sender; how complaints from the public have influenced the processes employed by the CPS, the Solicitor-General and the Attorney General; and if complaints have been reviewed by (a) the HMCPSI and (b) law officers in an internal review. [59338]

The Solicitor-General: All correspondence (including complaints) received in the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers is recorded in a mail index by name. It is then assigned to a file according to the subject matter and source. The Law Officers consider what action is required on case-by-case basis depending on the nature of the complaint.

All CPS Areas maintain a register of complaints received from the public. They have a discretion to record them alphabetically or chronologically according to when the complaint was received. Area inspections by HM Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate routinely include scrutiny of the complaints register, as well as the timeliness and quality of responses to complaints. This aspect of the scrutiny by HMCPSI is undertaken with the assistance of lay inspectors.

Although not mandatory, the Crown Prosecution Service encourages managers to periodically review and analyse complaints received with a view to identifying aspects of performance and processes which may need improvement or revision. The Joint Standing Committee on Good Practice (which incorporates membership from both HMCPSI and the CPS) has recently concluded a study of the processes within the CPS for handling complaints. Its proposed guidance was approved by the CPS Board in June. Considerable emphasis is placed on the scope for continuous improvement which is achievable through proper analyses of, and response to complaints.

In view of the scrutiny of complaints handling effected by HMCPSI, the Law Officers have not found it necessary to instigate an internal review of the CPS complaints procedure.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what inquiries are being held by the CPS concerning the measures needed to enable vulnerable or intimidated witnesses to give their best evidence. [60228]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 10 June 2002]: The Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 provides for special measures to be made available to vulnerable or intimidated witnesses to enable them to give their best evidence. The Government has announced that these measures are to be introduced on a phased basis from 24 July 2002.

The CPS is not holding any inquiries on these measures, but Areas are having discussions with their partner agencies in the Criminal Justice System to ensure both the effective implementation of the special measures and that appropriate action is taken where a witness is vulnerable or intimidated.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General which CPS areas have not reduced the time taken from arrest to sentence of persistent young offenders from 142 to 71 days; and what action has been taken by each failing region to comply with Government targets. [60224]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 10 June 2002]: The time taken from arrest to sentence of persistent young offenders exceeds 71 days in 13 of the 42 CPS Areas: Avon and Somerset, Cambridgeshire, Derbyshire, Gloucestershire, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, London, Northamptonshire, Surrey, Sussex, Thames Valley and Warwickshire.

The Crown Prosecution Service has implemented measures for contributing to the reduction of delay which draw upon the recommendations of good practice made by HMCPS Inspectorate in its report published in May 2002, including the use of Youth Specialists to identify and review cases involving persistent young offenders and to expedite those cases at court and participation in inter agency steering groups at strategic and practitioner levels to monitor the progress of cases involving persistent young offenders and to promote joint strategies to overcome barriers to progress.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what training CPS staff have received in achieving Best Evidence guidance on preparing for and conducting interviews with vulnerable and intimidated witnesses; and which and how many staff have been trained on each CPS area. [60227]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 10 June 2002]: The CPS will not be involved in interviewing vulnerable or intimidated witnesses, however, the guidance for achieving "Best Evidence" will be used by lawyers when reviewing video recorded evidence.

The training consists of an e-learning package, followed by a three day practical course. To date 269 members of staff have received this training. These staff members are comprised of both caseworkers and lawyers from across all the Areas.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General how each area has responded to the CPS action plan on diversity; and how this response addressed the issues raised in the report by Sylvia Denman and the Commission for Racial Equality. [60225]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 10 June 2002]: All CPS Areas have produced their own Race Equality Action Plans. Areas have set employment targets for 2002 and 2005 for minority ethnic staff.

The CPS Race Equality Scheme (RES) was launched on 14 May 2002. The RES is a national three-year strategy on race. All the recommendations of the Commission for Racial Equality and Sylvia Denman have been accepted by the CPS and those which have not already been implemented are included in the RES. All Areas must ensure that they comply with the national RES.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what assessment she has made of the impact of training programmes on the (a) efficiency and (b) effectiveness of each CPS region. [59350]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: CPS training is provided and assessed both nationally and locally. Assessment of the impact of training programmes is undertaken at a number of levels in the CPS. National training programmes are monitored and evaluated centrally to assess their effectiveness overall in meeting their aims and supporting the achievement of business plan objectives.

In addition to the national training plan, Areas identify their own local training needs and solutions, which they believe will help improve their effectiveness and efficiency. This is set out in Area Training Plan or programme. Area management teams assess the overall impact of local training events and programmes as part of the Business planning and review process.

Staff and line managers have joint responsibility for assessing the impact of training on individual performance. These reviews take place as part of the appraisal process and training is discussed at the annual and interim performance reviews.

41 Areas and HQ are accredited as Investors in People, and as such meet the baseline standard for evaluation of training and the assessment of its impact on performance.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General if she will make a statement on the work of each CPS region in relation to the conduct of prosecutions and on the related assessments made. [59464]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: The role of the CPS is to prosecute cases firmly, fairly and effectively, when there is sufficient evidence to provide a realistic prospect of conviction and when it is in the public interest to do so. The Code for Crown Prosecutors, which is issued under section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, is of fundamental importance to each CPS Prosecutor. It provides guidance on the general principles to be applied in every case irrespective of geography.

Her Majesty's CPS Inspectorate assesses the application of the Code in each Area inspection. Areas are inspected biennially. In his annual report for the year ending September 2001, HM Chief Inspector of the CPS reported that for cases sampled during Area inspections during the year, his inspectors were satisfied in 98.9 per cent. of cases sampled that the initial review decision was in accordance with the evidential test in the Code for Crown Prosecutors, and that the public interest test was satisfied in 99.9 per cent. of cases sampled.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what nature of training is provided for Crown prosecutors with respect to the code for Crown prosecutors; and what assessment has been carried out on the effectiveness of this training programme. [59337]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: An Induction Course for Lawyers is delivered to all new prosecutors within the Crown Prosecutors within 2 months of recruitment, which includes a session specifically on the Role of the Crown Prosecutor of which the Code for Crown Prosecutors is the core element.

Evaluation of the effectiveness of these training programmes is assessed in three ways:

Meetings between the Prosecutor and their line manager ultimately leading to the Crown Prosecutor's probationary review.

Each Unit Head analyses the overall performance of their Crown Prosecutors against the performance indicators for each Area.

All tutors involved in the delivery of these programmes are invited to feedback and contribute to updating the training briefs.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what assessment she has made of how the most qualified lawyers in the CPS have spent their time since the production of Sir Iain Glidewell's report in June 1998. [59463]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: The Crown Prosecution Service does not record in detail the individual tasks on which individual lawyers are deployed. Following the recommendations in Sir Iain Glidewell's Report the Crown Prosecution Service has been putting in place operational structures that enable its lawyers to spend more time advising the police and preparing the more serious prosecutions, by establishing co-located Criminal Justice Units and Trial Units for Crown Court work. In addition, the government proposes to implement the recommendation of Sir Robin Auld that the CPS should take over responsibility from the police for determining the charge from the outset of the case, which the CPS and police are currently piloting. These structural changes are enabling more early legal advice before charge, and more focus on casework preparation in more serious cases to ensure that prosecutions are built on secure ground.

By the end of March 2002, lawyers in 31 CPS Areas had been assigned to Crown Court work in 54 discrete Trial Units; and 42 co-located Criminal Justice Units had been established in 20 Areas. As at the end of June 2002 some 394 lawyers had qualified as Higher Courts Advocates, with the right to conduct cases in the Crown Court.

To help facilitate this shift in gravity, by the end of June 2002 some 178 members of the CPS who are not lawyers had been approved to work as Designated Caseworkers, trained to review and present a defined range of the most straightforward cases in the Magistrates' Courts, freeing up lawyer time for more serious cases. In addition, also reflecting Sir Iain Glidewell's Report, the CPS now employs an Area Business Manager in each Area, and a growing number of Unit Business Managers in Areas with Trial Units, enabling lawyer managers, including Chief Crown Prosecutors, to delegate some of their administrative responsibilities and devote more of their time to casework. There remains a cadre of Special Casework lawyers, and the lawyers in the Casework Directorate continue to advise on and conduct cases ranging from terrorism to extradition, to serious fraud.

More Crown Prosecutors are benefiting from greater exposure to Crown Court proceedings and their skills, experience and expertise in dealing with the more serious cases are being developed.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what assessment she has carried out of (a) the quality and (b) the timeliness of production of the case files received from the police within each CPS region for (i) 2000–01 and (ii) 2001–02. [59462]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: The statistics on timeliness and quality of police files submitted to the CPS are published by HM Inspectorate of Constabulary each quarter. The data is broken down by the 43 police forces; a table of the data is attached to this answer.

In 2000–01 the percentage of files received within the time guidelines ranged from 50–99 per cent.; and number which contained sufficient evidence to proceed or were fully satisfactory ranged from 74–98 per cent.

In 2001–02 those same figures ranged from 47–100 per cent. and 33–98 per cent. respectively.

These wide disparities are a matter of concern. The Joint Performance Monitoring process is currently under review to ensure the measuring systems are fair and accurate.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Solicitor-General what her estimate is of the proportion of CPS cases resulting in a non-jury acquittal in the Crown Court which are attributable to failures in the review process in each year since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [69215]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 11 July 2002]: In 1999 the Crown Prosecution Service introduced an adverse outcomes analysis system. This provides CPS Areas with a consistent framework within which responsibility may be allocated for the failure of cases through a process of self-assessment, including an indication of the number of non-jury acquittals attributable to failings in the CPS review. The following table shows these outcomes as a proportion of all cases completed in the Crown Court during the three years for which figures are available:

These figures suggest that failings in the CPS review account for a small and diminishing proportion of non-jury acquittals.

However, the findings in the HMCPSI Annual Report for 2001–02 suggest that the level of foreseeable adverse outcomes is higher. Figures published in the Report show that 33.57 per cent. of adverse outcomes were foreseeable, and that 19.02 per cent. should have been the subject of some remedial action or dropping the case sooner. These figures relate to a different reporting period, smaller sample and with reference to a different test than those gathered by the CPS. The disparity is greatly exaggerated in presentation by the fact that CPS use a percentage of their total caseload, while the HMCPSI look at only a sample and calculate as a proportion of the adverse cases. Nonetheless, this disparity is a cause for concern.

The Service is conscious that its self-assessment procedures require the support of more sensitive information. The CPS and the police have begun to develop a joint case outcomes analysis which will build on existing procedures and will focus on avoidable case failures. Under this system it is intended that the reasons for non-jury acquittals will be jointly analysed to identify trends and individual and more general training needs, as part of a wider strategy for the identification of good practice. The process will be supported by more sophisticated management information generated through the forthcoming Compass Case Management system, which is scheduled to be rolled out across all CPS Areas between April and December 2003.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Solicitor-General what estimate she has made of the proportion of Crown Prosecution Service cases dismissed on a submission of no case to answer which are attributable to failures in the review process in each year since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [69208]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The analysis of adverse outcomes, described in my response to the hon. Member's related question on non-jury acquittals (UIN 69215), includes an assessment of the number of dismissals no case to answer attributable to failings in the CPS review. The following table shows these outcomes as a proportion of all cases completed in the magistrates' courts during the three years for which figures are available:

Year ending March:
2000	0.010 per cent.
2001	0.008 per cent.
2002	0.011 per cent.

As the above figures show, dismissals for no case to answer attributable to failings in the review process form only a very small part of the overall caseload of the Service. However, there was a small increase in the level of these outcomes during 2001–2002, from 0.008 per cent. of the overall caseload, or 8 per 100,000, to 0.011 per cent., or 11 per 100,000. While this trend is not considered significant, it does show that there is no room for complacency. The arrangements for improved information on case outcomes described in my response to the Hon Member's related question will provide CPS managers, at a local and national level, with a better analysis of the reasons for case failures, and will strengthen their ability to identify and resolve any areas of concern.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Solicitor-General what recent assessment has been made of the adequacy of the resources available to the Crown Prosecution Service; and what steps are being taken to increase Crown Prosecution Service efficiency and its ability to proceed with cases for trial. [72129]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 24 July 2002]: An assessment of the adequacy of the resources available to the Crown Prosecution Service was made for the purposes of the 2002 Spending Review, the outcome of which was announced on 15 July.

The White Paper, Justice For All, set out a far-reaching program of change for the criminal justice system and for the Crown Prosecution Service. This programme will improve CPS efficiency and ability to proceed with cases for trial including:

closer working with the police and increasing the number of Criminal Justice Units collocated with the police and the number of Trial Units as envisaged in the Glidewell report on the CPS;

providing earlier and better advice to the police on charging and giving the CPS the responsibility to determine the charge in all but the most routine cases. Early indications from 6 pilot Areas show that giving the CPS the responsibility to determine the charge will lead to significant improvements in performance; changes to trial procedures to improve efficiency and effectiveness; and the development of the CPS's IT system, Compass, which is an essential part of a more joined up approach to information technology across the criminal justice system.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General as a percentage of staff employed within each CPS area and region, how many are crown prosecutors; and how many crown prosecutors within each region secured accreditation as higher court advocates in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, and (c) 2001–02. [59344]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: Copies of Tables 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 have been placed in the Library. The percentage of Crown Prosecutors employed in each Area and Region is set out in Tables 1, 2, 3 and 4.

The number of lawyers who have gained accreditation from 1 April 1999 until 31 March 2002 is set out in Table 5.

The number of higher court advocates in each area is set out in Table 6.

Director of Public Prosecutions

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Solicitor-General when she last met the DPP; and if she will make a statement. [60575]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 10 June 2002]: I regularly meet the Director of Public Prosecutions in the course of my official duties both formally and informally. Departmental meetings with the DPP take place approximately once every three weeks, and further meetings occur to discuss particular issues as they arise.

My last meeting with the Director was on 19th July.

Public Engagements

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Solicitor-General how many public engagements she has undertaken since 7 June. [60574]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 10 June 2002]: Since 7 June 2001 my public engagements have consisted of:

(1) 9 sessions of oral parliamentary questions

(2) 9 visits to regional CPS offices

(3) 6 visits to the legal departments of other government departments in connection with the Law Officers role as superintenders of the Government Legal Service

(4) 13 visits to courts, police stations, prisons and CPS offices, in connection with my role as the chair of the committee on the Criminal Justice System in London.

(5) 10 official launches or openings

(6) 28 speeches

(7) hosting 6 receptions

(8) 10 formal dinners

(9) 3 Auld report consultation events

(10) 2 visits in connection with my role as street crime sponsor minister.

Departmental Waste

Sue Doughty: To ask the Solicitor-General what proportion of waste produced in her Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted and (c) re-used, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if she will make a statement. [65697]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The detailed information requested is not available. However, all of the Departments for which the Attorney General is responsible make efforts to ensure that waste products are disposed of appropriately. In particular, paper and toner cartridges (which together represent a majority of the waste produced) are re-cycled by the Treasury Solicitor's Department, Crown Prosecution Service and the Attorney General's own Department, the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers. The Treasury Solicitor's Department and Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers also re-cycle all used fluorescent tubes.

As part of the Law Officers' Departments' contribution to Sustainable Development, we are continually reviewing the extent to which waste may be recycled.

Youth Justice

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Solicitor-General when she next expects to meet the CPS to discuss youth justice. [64439]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 4 July 2002]: My right hon. and learned Friend, the Attorney General, and I discuss youth justice at our regular meetings with the DPP and with local CPS staff on our visits to the CPS Areas. I discussed the issues with HM Chief Inspector, CPS Inspectorate on the eve of publication of the joint inspectorate report on the progress made in the reduction of delay in the youth justice system on 23 May 2002.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Laws: To ask the Solicitor-General what her estimate is of the average length of time between transfer/committal and verdict for the Serious Fraud Office in each year since 1997–98; and if she will make a statement. [69209]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The average time taken between committal or transfer and verdict each year since 1997–1998 is given below:

1997–98	12.8 months
1998–99	19.2 months
1999–2000	20.2 months
2000–01	15.5 months
2001–02	20.0 months

The Serious Fraud Office works hard to reduce unduly long trials by securing, where possible, defence admissions of non-contentious evidence and by contributing towards the provision of real-time transcription services. In addition, the SFO regularly presents complex evidence in a graphical or electronic form, which improves clarity and saves time for the jury and court.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Solicitor-General how many cases were handled by the Serious Fraud Office in each year since 1998–99; and if she will make a statement. [69108]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The Serious Fraud Office worked on the investigation and prosecution of the following number of cases each year:

1997–98	102 cases
1998–99	94 cases
1999–2000	95 cases
2000–01	103 cases
2001–02	92 cases

These figures exclude appeals pending and cases with outstanding confiscation matters.

The Serious Fraud Office investigates and prosecutes some of the largest and most difficult cases in the UK often involving substantial sums of money exceeding £1 million. I refer my honourable friend to my answer to Dave Watts of 10 January 2002.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Solicitor-General what the average time was from accepting a case to completing investigations for the Serious Fraud Office in each year since 1997–98. [69109]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The average time taken between acceptance and committal or transfer to the Crown Court for a Serious Fraud Office case since 1997–98 is set out below:

1998–99	34 months
1999–2000	29 months
2000–01	30 months
2001–02	33 months

Manslaughter (Doctors)

Mr. Hague: To ask the Solicitor-General how many prosecutions for manslaughter have been brought against doctors since 1974; and how many of them have been acquitted by the jury, and at what cost to public funds. [72997]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 24 July 2002]: It is extremely difficult to give precise figures. Before 1993, prosecutions were recorded by the name of the defendant and not by the defendant's occupation.

In 1993 a new case-tracking system was introduced by the CPS which allowed prosecutions for manslaughter arising from gross medical negligence to be recorded. But these figures do not distinguish between doctors and other medical staff.

Bearing in mind these caveats, the CPS has estimated that since 1994 twelve doctors have been prosecuted for "medical" manslaughter. Of those, eight were acquitted of all charges and four were convicted of at least one count on the indictment.

There are no central records of the cost of prosecuting particular categories of case.

The principles applied by Crown prosecutors when deciding whether the prosecution of a doctor, or of any other person, is justified are set out in the Code for Crown Prosecutors. The prosecutor must be satisfied that the evidence is sufficient to provide a realistic prospect of a conviction. If there is sufficient evidence the prosecutor goes on to consider whether a prosecution is needed in the public interest. Because manslaughter is such a serious offence, if the evidence is sufficient to justify proceedings a prosecution would normally follow. Cases involving allegations of "medical" manslaughter are considered by the Casework Directorate at CPS headquarters rather than by the CPS Area in which the death occurred.

Trial Outcomes

Mr. Chope: To ask the Solicitor-General how many trials there were in which an offender was brought to justice in each of the last five years. [71612]

The Solicitor-General: I have been asked to reply to this question using information recorded by the Crown Prosecution Service.

The attached table shows the number and the proportion of defendants convicted in magistrates' courts and in the Crown Court in the year ending March 2002, and in each of the four preceding years.

Convictions 1997–2002

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Magistrates' courts
Total convictions as per cent. of hearings	953,753 (98.1)	972,650 (98.3)	986,136 (98.3)	929,806 (98.3)	933,305 (98.3)
Crown Court
Total convictions as per cent. of hearings	87,273 (90.6)	70,935 (89.1)	66,960 (88.6)	62,419 (87.9)	62,824 (88.8)

Court Evidence

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Solicitor-General what rules of (a) procedure and (b) evidence may prevent a prosecution witness giving evidence of (i) the appearances of a defendant whom that witness has seen at the scene of an alleged crime, (ii) the fact of a defendant being of no fixed abode and (iii) the whereabouts of objects at the scene of an alleged theft which are not the subject of a charge of theft. [55455]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 14 May 2002]: There are no specific rules of procedure or evidence affecting these categories.

Whether a witness is permitted to give evidence on a particular issue depends on the relevance of their testimony to the charge before the court, and whether that evidence is admissible. There are many factors which might affect the admissibility of evidence, and each case would depend upon its precise facts.

If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind I would be glad to attempt to provide a fuller answer.

Casework Review

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General when the thematic review of all aspects of casework having a minority ethnic dimension was published; and if this thematic review included the London area. [60226]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 10 June 2002]: HM Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate published the Report of its thematic review of CPS Casework Having a Minority Ethnic Dimension on 10 April 2002.

Inspectors examined performance in sixteen CPS Areas, of which London was one.

Law Enforcement Agencies

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Solicitor-General what statutory law enforcement agencies and prosecuting authorities there are within the responsibility of her Department; and what complaints procedure is available for each. [57128]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 16 May 2002]: The Law Officers Department is responsible for three prosecuting authorities: The Crown Prosecution Service, the Serious Fraud Office and the Prosecuting Arm of HM Customs and Excise.

All complaints received by the CPS are dealt with in accordance with designated procedure set out in a complaints leaflet. This is also available on the Internet on the CPS website www.cps.gov.uk. There are three stages to the CPS complaints handling procedure. Complaints are initially directed to the Branch or Unit that dealt with the case in question. The Branch Crown Prosecutor or Unit Head will arrange for a response to be sent.

If the complainant is dissatisfied with this response, or alleges impropriety by the CPS, the matter will be referred to the Chief Crown Prosecutor.

Complaints which cannot be resolved by the Chief Crown Prosecutor are referred through the Customer Service Unit to the Director of Public Prosecutions or Chief Executive who will consider how the complaint should be handled and arrange for a response to be sent. Where possible, a full response should be sent to the complainant within three working days of receipt. If a full response is not possible, an acknowledgement should be sent within three days and a full response within 10 working days.

The Serious Fraud Office complaints procedure is that minor complaints about members of staff are dealt with by Line Managers or their Assistant Directors.

Formal written complaints addressed to the Director are dealt with either by her or passed or an Assistant Director for full investigation.

Complaints about the professional conduct of legally qualified SFO staff may be made to the appropriate professional standards body such as the Bar Council or the Law Society.

Customs and Excise complaints procedure is contained within their Code of Practice which is available on their website www.hmce.gov.uk.

Where complaints cannot be resolved with the Customs Officer concerned, complainants are directed to the Regional Complaints Unit. That Unit will ask the appropriate local manager to investigate the complaint and the Unit will then respond normally within 10 working days.

If the complainant is dissatisfied with that response, the complaint can be reconsidered by the Regional or Business Head.

Where a complainant is not satisfied with the response by the Customs and Excise, the matter may be raised with the Adjudicator. The Adjudicator will give an independent view of the case and make a recommendation.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Solicitor-General how much was spent on press and advertising campaigns in 2001–02; and what the planned expenditure is for 2002–03. [60898]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 17 June 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 12 March 2002, Official Report, column 885W. There are no specific plans for expenditure in 2002–03.

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Solicitor-General what percentage of the staff of her Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66905]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 8 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, on 5 July 2002, Official Report, column 622W.

Recyling

Sue Doughty: To ask the Solicitor-General what proportion of (a) paper and (b) other goods purchased by her Department was recycled paper in each year since 1997; what the annual total cost of these purchases was; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if she will make a statement. [65768]

The Solicitor-General: In relation to the Departments for which the Attorney General is responsible, the information available is as follows:

The Crown Prosecution Service has a policy of purchasing recycled paper wherever possible. The paper provided under the Department's central contract for office use is 100 per cent. recycled—approximate cost £500,000. Of the products supplied under the central contract for supply of other paper-based products, in 2001–02 82 per cent. by volume (approximate cost £80,000) contained an element of recycled content (ranging from 35 per cent. to 100 per cent. pre- and post-consumer waste).

The Department does not hold information on recycled paper usage back to 1997.

The Treasury Solicitor's Department is able to reply only in general terms, as records have not been, and are not, kept in such a way as to provide this information.

Since 2000, 100 per cent. of white paper purchased has been from recycled stock. The Agency budgeted £100,000 for paper in each of the last two financial years and although the spend on white paper cannot be separately identified, it does make up the bulk of the figure.

Other recycled products bought are not on record, though contracts specify that suppliers should have regard to environmental factors when providing goods to the agency. There are at present no specific plans to increase the proportion of recycled goods procured but the Agency is always ready to consider means of "greening" its operations when it can do so in an efficient and cost-effective way.

The Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers, is small and paper usage is comparatively low. Although recycled paper has been used in the past, purchases must be made on a best value for money basis. Until recently, the cost and quality of recycled paper did not provide this compared to virgin paper from sustainable resources. However, recycled paper appears to have improved in both quality and price and the Department has recently recommenced the purchase of recycled paper.

The Serious Fraud Office does not currently purchase recycled paper but will consider the matter again in the light of improvements in price and quality.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

GCSEs

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of pupils achieving five or more A*–C grades at GCSE in the last year for which figures are available included an intermediate GNVQ equivalent to four A*–C grade GCSEs in their qualifications. [60876]

Stephen Twigg: The proportion of pupils in all schools in England who achieved 5 or more A*–C grades at GCSE/GNVQ, whose results included an intermediate GNVQ was 0.5 per cent. in 2000–01. This represents 1,457 pupils in 85 schools.

Key Stage 2

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the percentage point gap is between the 2001 Key Stage 2 results separately and the statutory EDP targets for (a) English and (b) maths in 2004 in each local education authority. [62661]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The information requested is shown below.

Castle Award

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if her Department has applied for a Castle award for equal pay. [65225]

Stephen Twigg: The Department has not applied for a Castle Award for equal pay but is currently reviewing its pay system as part the Governments' commitment following the Equal Pay Task Force Report.

Further Education

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment she has made of the extent to which the extra money that she provided for new pay arrangements in the further education sector has narrowed the pay gap between school teachers and further education lecturers. [65077]

Margaret Hodge: As independent organisations it is for further education (FE) colleges to agree the pay and the terms and conditions of their staff within the context of the overall resources available to them. We are aware of the differences between salaries in general further education colleges and schools and this issue is being considered as part of the current Spending Review.

We are investing more than £311 million in the Teaching Pay Initiative (TPI) over the period 2001–04. TPI is separate to any general pay increase a lecturer may receive. It is designed to help modernise further education (FE) pay arrangements and to recruit, reward and retain lecturers as part of the drive to improve teaching and learning. Research on the first year of TPI implementation indicates that there is a significant move to teachers being better prepared for the task of teaching students; extra pay has been found to support the recruitment of teachers in skill shortage areas and to address casualisation; and there has been a direct positive impact on teacher morale.

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of the staff of her Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66903]

Stephen Twigg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for State at the Cabinet Office on 5 July, Official Report, column 623W.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much each local education authority spent last year on children with special educational needs; and how much of this was spent on special schools. [69333]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many Key Stage 1 classes in the maintained sector have more than 30 pupils as a result of a statement of special educational needs specifying that a child should attend a particular school. [71496]

Stephen Twigg [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The 2001 September Class Size Count Survey shows that there were 11 infant classes with 31 or more pupils as a result of a statement of special educational needs specifying that a child should attend a particular school.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children of school age are attending specialist schools in the London Borough of Wandsworth. [65050]

Mr. Miliband: As at January 2002, there were 6,469 pupils in specialist schools in the London Borough of Wandsworth, of which 5,304 were aged 11–15.

Absenteeism

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average absentee rate was for schools in (a) 2000 and (b) 2001. [70012]

Stephen Twigg: The average absentee rate for schools in England was 6.8 per cent. in 2000 and 7.2 per cent. in 2001. These figures represent the percentage of half days missed due to both authorised and unauthorised absences in schools. These figures relate to absences in schools between September and May in each of the relevant years.

Departmental Report

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the cost was of publishing her Department's annual report for each of the past five years. [70476]

Stephen Twigg: While the Department pays for some production costs of its annual report, these only cover the design and typesetting. The costs of printing are met directly by the publisher, The Stationery Office (TSO) and do not fall to the Department. The Department also buys in copies from the TSO to distribute internally and to our partners.

The cost for the last two years are:

The Department for Education and Employment 2001 Report

Typesetting and design	£33,813
Buying in copies from TSO	£18,600
Total	£52,413

The Department for Education and Skills 2002 Report

Typesetting and design	£42,346
Total	£59,119

Costs are not available for earlier years.

School Meals

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent monitoring she has undertaken of the nutritional content of school meals. [71123]

Stephen Twigg: Local Education Authorities, or governing bodies with schools meals budgets delegated to them, must ensure that school lunches meet minimum nutritional standards.

No recent monitoring has been undertaken, but my officials are taking advice from the Food Standards Agency about the best way evaluate the effectiveness of, and compliance with, our nutritional standards regulations.

Healthy Eating

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what encouragement she provides to head teachers to ensure healthy eating patterns are developed in school canteens. [71124]

Stephen Twigg: In April 2001 the Government introduced regulations which set minimum nutritional standards for school lunches. They were accompanied by guidance entitled "Healthy School Lunches" which was available for school caterers, heads and others implementing the standards.

The National Healthy School Standard, which was introduced in October 1999, is the mainstay of the Healthy Schools Programme and promotes healthy eating patterns. Guidance provided to local Healthy Schools Partnerships on criteria that can be used for assessing school achievements includes:

the school should present consistent messages about healthy eating: food on offer in vending machines, tuck shops and school meals, for example should complement the information about healthy eating covered in the taught curriculum;

the school should provide, promote and monitor healthier food at lunch and break times and in any breakfast clubs where they are provided;

the school should include education on healthier eating and basic food safety practices in the taught curriculum.

Education Funding

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what extra funding, in addition to the education standard spending assessment, has been provided (a) directly to schools and (b) to local authorities in England since 1999 in each local authority. [71307]

Mr. Miliband: The tables below show the Department's total recurrent and capital funding, in addition to the education Standard Spending Assessment, for the financial years 1999–2000 to 2001–02 for each local education authority, broken down between funding that goes directly to maintained schools via LEAs, and funding for LEAs' central expenditure.

Funding direct to schools via LEAs are comprised of the following grants:

Standards Fund (devolved to schools)

School Standards Grant

School Budget Support Grant

Education Budget Support Grant

Capital Grants (Devolved Formula Capital)

Grant Maintained Transitional Grant: Insurance

Funding for LEAs are comprised of the following grants (for the benefit of schools)

Standards Fund (LEA central expenditure)

Nursery Education Grant

Childcare Grant

Education Maintenance Allowances

Capital Grants (including formulaic funding to VA Schools allocated at LEA level)

Grant Maintained Transitional Grant

Funding for Education Action Zones (EAZs) is not included. This funding does not go directly to schools or to LEAs; it is paid to EAZs for use to run programmes to achieve pre-agreed targets and objectives in zone schools. EAZs are independent bodies which are exempt charities, set up in accordance with the Schools Standards and Framework Act 1998. In addition the Department provides special grant funding to fully meet the extra costs associated with teachers crossing the threshold (moving to the upper pay scale). Additional funding has provided a contribution to the costs of awarding performance points to those on the leadership scale and Advanced Skills Teachers. The Department is unable to provide a breakdown by LEA of this funding without incurring disproportionate cost and time. The national amount since 1999–2000 is £756 million.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, pursuant to her oral statement of 16 July 2002, if successful grammar schools will be eligible to take over failing schools under the proposed arrangements. [71555]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 19 July 2002]: In the document Education and Skills: Investment for Reform, which we published on the day of my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 16 July, we made clear that we would be looking at a range of ways of encouraging federations and partnerships between weaker and more successful schools, including a successful school taking over a failing school. We shall provide more details on these proposals later in the year. There is no reason why successful grammar schools should not be involved in forms of federation and partnership consistent with their grammar school status, where that is appropriate to local needs and circumstances. But in doing this we will remain true to our principle of no extension of selection by ability.

Demountable Classrooms

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much additional funding is to be allocated to Essex County Council to replace demountable classrooms in the Colchester constituency with permanent accommodation. [71480]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 19 July 2002]: We do not hold information in the form requested. Most capital support is allocated to Local Education Authorities and schools by needs related formulae. It is for Essex Local Education Authority (LEA) and its schools to decide how their capital allocations are invested, as part of the development of their local Asset Management Plan. To date, Essex LEA, and its schools, have already been allocated support for £107 million of capital works in total over 2002–03 and 2003–04.

Citizenship Curriculum

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if the Citizenship Curriculum will include (a) knowledge of the flags and patron saints of the countries of the United Kingdom and (b) teaching the words of the national anthem. [71481]

Stephen Twigg [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The flags, patron saints and the national anthem of the United Kingdom are not a separate element of the Citizenship National Curriculum. However, understanding the origins and implications of the diverse national, regional, religious and ethnic identities in the United Kingdom is an important part of Citizenship which becomes part of the statutory National Curriculum for 11–16 year olds in September 2002. In this context pupils will have the opportunity to explore the unique qualities that are part of the shared identities of the countries of the United Kingdom. They may also consider the political, religious, social and constitutional systems that affect their lives and communities.

Departmental Staff

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many registered (a) town planners, (b) landscape designers, (c) chartered surveyors and (d) architects work in her Department. [71856]

Stephen Twigg: Within the Department for Education and Skills there are 5 registered chartered surveyors and 10 registered architects. Currently there are no town planners or landscape designers working in the Department.

Music Lessons

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what assessment has been made of access to free music lessons by school pupils from low-income families in North-West Leicestershire; [71924]

(2) what methods and procedures are in place to judge the success of the Music Standards Fund in increasing access to free music lessons for musicians in (a) North-West Leicestershire and (b) English schools; [71923]

(3) what assessment has been made of the take up of free music lessons by school pupils from low-income families in England. [71925]

Stephen Twigg: The Government's White Paper Schools: achieving success contained the pledge that over time, all primary school pupils who wanted to should have the opportunity to learn a musical instrument. The Music Standards Fund was introduced in 1999 to protect and expand LEA Music Services. Between 1999–2000 and 2003–04 total funding of £270 million has been made available to Music Services across England via the Music Standards Fund. LEAs may spend Music Standards Fund in any way which enhances the opportunities for pupils to access musical education of high quality. It is not intended to provide music lessons for musicians.

There is no requirement for LEAs to inform the Department whether Music Standards Fund has been used to increase access to and take up of music lessons for pupils from low-income families. It is for LEAs and individual schools to decide whether to operate a charging policy for instrumental music lessons provided outside of the National Curriculum, and we do not currently hold data on this.

Public Consultations

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what public consultations have been commenced by her Department since 1 April; and what the (a) closing date and (b) website address of each were. [72074]

Stephen Twigg: The information you have requested appears in the following table. The website address for my Department's consultations is www.dfes.gov.uk/consultations.

Title of Consultation	Start Date	End Date
Proposals to introduce a mandatory requirement for first-time headteachers to hold the National Professional Qualification for Headship (NPQH)	22/04/2002	28/06/2002

School Sports

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether she plans to make sport in schools part of the everyday curriculum. [71932]

Stephen Twigg: Physical Education (PE) remains a compulsory subject within the National Curriculum at all Key Stages. Our Public Service Agreement target, announced on 15 July, is that by 2006 we will have enhanced the take-up of PE and sporting opportunities by 5 to 16 year olds by increasing the percentage of pupils in schools who spend a minimum of two hours each week on high quality PE and school sport within and beyond the curriculum to 75 per cent.

It is for individual schools and their governing bodies to decide how they utilise their timetable to cover the National Curriculum and there is no reason why schools cannot choose to provide PE and sport every day, if this best meets the learning needs of the pupils.

Capital Investment (Schools)

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the level of capital investment is for 2003–04 to 2005–06 following the comprehensive spending review for (a) new or substantially refurbished primary schools, (b) new or substantially refurbished secondary schools, (c) further education and (d) higher education. [71859]

Mr. Miliband: Capital investment in education and skills will rise from £1 billion a year in 1997–98 to £7 billion a year by 2005–06, of which £1.2 billion will be through the private finance initiative. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce her decisions about how that capital is to be used later in the year when she has considered priorities in the round.

SEN Children

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans her Department has to introduce a star rating system to award (a) local education authorities, (b) schools and (c) colleges who are putting into practice good systems to support inclusion of SEN children; what plans her Department has to name (i) local education authorities, (ii) schools and (iii) colleges who are failing or rejecting SEN children and adults; and if she will make a statement. [72028]

Stephen Twigg: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. However, her Department does take a close interest in local education authority, school and college systems to support inclusion, particularly through OFSTED inspection and post-inspection action planning. The Department is also considering how effective practice on inclusion might best be reflected in performance indicators used in the Comprehensive Performance Assessment of local authorities.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the (a) dates, (b) location and (c) sources were of attributable (i) articles, interviews or contributions for the media, books or other journals and (ii) speeches or presentations made in the public domain, by departmental special advisers since March 2001; who in her Department authorised the activity; and on what date this activity was recorded with the departmental Head of Information. [72254]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 24 July.

St. Thomas's Hospital

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she has been consulted about the proposal by King's College London to sell the land known as Block 9 at St. Thomas's Hospital. [72383]

Margaret Hodge: Like all universities, King's College London is an independent, autonomous institution. There is no requirement on them to consult with the Secretary of State for Education and Skills before disposing of an asset, and they have not done so.

Education (St. Helens)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) fixed-term exclusions and (b) permanent exclusions there were from (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) special schools in (i) St. Helens Metropolitan Borough Council area, (ii) Merseyside, (iii) the North West and (iv) England in (A) 1996, (B) 1997, (C) 1998, (D) 1999, (E) 2000 and (F) 2001. [70862]

Stephen Twigg [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The information requested on permanent exclusions is shown in the tables below. Subnational figures for 2001 are not yet available.

Whilst information on fixed term exclusions has been collected for the first time this year on a trial basis, the data is not sufficiently complete for publication. A more regular collection is being considered.

University Top-up Fees

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent representations she has received about university top-up fees. [72639]

Margaret Hodge: My right hon. Friend receives representations from a wide variety of sources on a range of issues including top up fees. Most recently this has included the Education and Skills Select Committee's sixth report of the 2001–02 session which recommends the Government should seriously consider differentiated fees for university students.

Physical Education

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the research used to provide the figures for the new joint Public Service Agreement with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport and her Department to raise the percentage of schoolchildren who spent a minimum of two hours each week on high quality physical education and school sports to 75 per cent. [72465]

Stephen Twigg [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Evidence from the Youth Sport Trust, Sport England and the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority suggests that most pupils in schools operating as part of a School Sport Co-ordinator Partnership enjoy two hours of high quality PE and school sport a week within and outside the curriculum.

Students (Taunton)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of full-time students stayed in education in the Taunton constituency after the age of (a) 16 and (b) 18 years in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2001; and if she will make a statement. [73264]

Stephen Twigg: Data on the percentage of students staying on in full-time education is not calculated for areas smaller than LEAs as reliable estimates cannot be made. Participation rates at sub-national level are only available for 16 and 17 year olds.

The percentage of 16 and 17 year olds in full-time education in Somerset LEA, which includes the constituency of Taunton, in 1997–1998 and 1999–2000, the latest year for which figures are available, is set out below:

16 and 17 year olds in full-time education: Somerset LEA

Age	1997–1998	1999–2000

Participation rates by LEA are published in an annual statistical bulletin, "Participation in Education and Training by Young People Aged 16 and 17 in Each Local Area and Region, England".

Exam Preparation

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the recommended amount of preparation time is for year 5 pupils taking SATs exams. [72827]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 24 July 2002]: There are no statutory National Curriculum tests for pupils in Year 5. Neither is there any recommended preparation time for any National Curriculum test. It is for Headteachers to decide how to prepare their pupils for the tests. The QCA advises schools to prepare children for the tests by providing them with the opportunity to familiarise themselves with the layout and design of test papers, encouraging them to work independently and be aware that there may be questions in the tests that they will not be able to answer.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many hours (a) AS level, (b) A level and (c) GCSE students spend on average in (i) exams and (ii) mock exams. [72826]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Students taking typical 4 AS subject programmes spend about 12 hours in examinations, not counting resits. The equivalent figure for students completing the second half of the new A levels in 3 subjects is 9 hours. GCSE students spent an average of 17 hours in examinations. These figures mask large variations in individual student programmes.

No statistics are available for the number of hours spent in mock examinations for any of these qualifications.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the recommended amount of preparation time is for Key Stage (a) 1, (b) 2 and (c) 3 SATs exams. [72828]

Mr. Miliband [holding reply 24 July 2002]: There is no recommended preparation time for any National Curriculum test. It is for Headteachers to decide how to prepare their pupils for the tests. The QCA advises schools to prepare children for the tests by providing them with the opportunity to familiarise themselves with the layout and design of test papers, encouraging them to work independently and be aware that there may be questions in the tests that they will not be able to answer.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much time (a) Key Stage 1 SATs exams, (b) Key Stage 2 SATs exams and (c) Key Stage 3 SATs exams take on average (i) per pupil and (ii) per school. [72825]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 24 July 2002]:

Key Stage 2

The National Curriculum tests at Key Stage 2 in English, mathematics and science are timetabled to take 5 hours and 15 minutes spread over a week.

Key Stage 3

The National Curriculum tests at Key Stage 3 in English, mathematics and science are timetabled to take 7 hours and 20 minutes spread over a week.

All children in the school will usually take the tests at the same time.

Key Stage 1

The Key Stage 1 tasks and tests are not timed. It is the responsibility of teachers to decide both the timing of the assessments and whether to administer the tests and tasks to whole classes, smaller groups of pupils or on an individual basis.

Science And Discovery Centres

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans she has to assist the funding of science and discovery centres; and if she will make a statement. [72321]

Stephen Twigg [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The Government has currently no plans to assist the funding of science and discovery centres. On Monday, The Millennium Commission, together with the Wellcome Trust and the Wolfson Foundation, launched a £33 million fund for science centres and museums to allow them to renew or replace high quality science, education and technology exhibitions.

Free School Meals

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of children were in receipt of free school meals in each year from 1996–1997 to 2001–02 in (a) foundation, (b) voluntary-aided-community, (c) specialist, (d) city technology college, (e) grammar and (f) voluntary-controlled schools. [65395]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils were not allocated the secondary school of their first, second and third preference in the last three years; and if she will make a statement. [70665]

Mr. Miliband: Information is not routinely collected on parental preference and their outcomes in the admissions process. A research project commissioned by the DfES entitled, "Parents' experiences of the process of choosing a secondary school" published in June 2001 revealed that (from a sample of 2,170 parents):

85 per cent. of parents were offered a place in their favourite school (1)

92 per cent. received an offer of a place in a first preference school (2)

96 per cent. of parents were offered a place in a school for which they expressed a preference.

91 per cent. of parents said they were satisfied with the outcome of the application processCopies of the report and research brief are available on the Departments website at: http://www.dfes.gov.uk/research/

(1) Favourite school refers to the school identified by surveyed parents as the school that they most wanted their child to attend out of all the names of schools to which the parents applied to for a place.

(2) First preference school refers to: (i) schools ranked first in the applications to Local Education Authority controlled schools in the parents' own Local Education Authority; (ii) schools which an application was made and which are their own admissions authorities, and (iii) applications to Local Education Authority controlled schools which an application is made, which are in a Local Education Authority other than the one in which the parent is resident.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils who wanted co-educational secondary education were put in single sex schools in the last three years; and if she will make a statement. [70664]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is not available centrally.

Special Measures

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average time spent in special measures by English (a) secondary and (b) primary schools has been in the last five years. [73040]

Mr. Miliband: The average time spent by schools in special measures for the last 5 years has been 21 months for primary schools and 29 months for secondary schools.

The Government is committed to ensuring that the number of schools placed in special measures continues to decline and that all schools in special measures should be turned around in two years or closed. Further options to ensure more rapid turnaround of schools were proposed in the White Paper Schools: Achieving Success in 2001 and new measures are included in the Education Act 2002 to enhance and widen the intervention powers of LEAs and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average change in annual revenue budget was for an English (a) secondary and (b) primary school placed in special measures over the last five years. [73039]

Mr. Miliband: Funding support for schools placed in special measures is provided through a targeted element of the Standards Fund school improvement grant. LEAs receive direct funding support of £70,000 for each secondary school placed in special measures and £25,000 for each primary school to support schools with the implementation of their post-OFSTED action plan and to secure necessary improvements. The amount of additional support devolved to each school in special measures is a decision for the LEA.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many English (a) secondary and (b) primary schools have been put into special measures in each of the last five years. [73041]

Mr. Miliband: The number of schools placed in special measures for the each of the last five years is:

	Secondary	Primary
1998–99	30	141
1999–2000	38	168
2000–01	23	100
2001–02*	19	94

* Figures for this year may change, pending final corroborations.

Over this period, a total of 912 schools have recovered from special measures. The number of schools in special measures rose from 326 at the beginning of 1997–98 to a peak of 515 at the end of that academic year. The total has now reduced to 273.

Ethnic Ratios (Schools)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the ethnic ratio is for schools in the Taunton constituency; and if she will make a statement. [73257]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the table below.

Percentage of Pupils by Ethnic Group (1) in Maintained Primary and Maintained Secondary Schools As at January 2001

	Percentage of Pupils
	Primary	Secondary
White	97.77	94.84

Departmental Activities

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list the activities pursued by her Department that have had a particular impact on Somerset since 7 June 2001. [73256]

David Miliband: Details of activities pursued by the Department since 7 June 2001 that have had an impact on Somerset have been placed in the Library.

Class Sizes

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent evidence she has evaluated on the improvements in educational results to be realised through (a) marginal reductions in average class sizes and (b) alternative, more flexible uses of the same scale of resources within the educational system; and if she will make a statement. [72988]

Mr. Miliband: It is too early to evaluate fully the impact of smaller class sizes policy on educational achievement. However, there is evidence, some of which pre-dates the smaller class size policy, that smaller class sizes have a beneficial effect on pupil progress, particularly in maths and literacy, in Reception children. I am exploring how schools might make better use of all their resources—teachers, support staff and ICT through the Transforming School Workforce pathfinder project. The Department has commissioned a pilot survey to examine the feasibility of collecting the detailed school resourcing information needed to evaluate the impact of resource mix on performance.

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average class size is, ranked according to local education authority, at the latest date for which figures are available. [72398]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is shown in the table, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, how many children were excluded from school in each of the London borough education authorities as of 1 June. (65048)

Stephen Twigg: The available information on permanent exclusions for the latest year for which data are available is shown in the following table. Information on Fixed Term Exclusions is not available centrally.

Faith Communities

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list projects involving faith communities which are supported by her Department. [71848]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is not collected centrally by my Department.

Autistic Children

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans she has to reduce the number of exclusions from school of autistic children; how she plans to support autistic children in Autism Awareness Year; and if she will make a statement. [72027]

Stephen Twigg: Figures on the number of children excluded from school by type of special educational need are not collected centrally. Guidance from the Department makes clear that, other than in the most exceptional circumstances, schools should avoid permanently excluding pupils with statements of special educational needs. The guidance also requires head teachers to say, when reporting exclusions to Discipline Committees and local education authorities, whether the pupil has special educational needs, either with or without a statement. The most recent figures show that the rate of permanent exclusions for children with statements of special educational needs as compared with other pupils is declining—three times as high in 2000–01 as compared with six times as high the previous year.

On 22 July the Department published guidance from its Autism Working Group on autistic spectrum disorders. This provides guidance to schools, local education authorities and others on the nature of the disorders and pointers to good practice. It will raise awareness of autistic spectrum disorders further and help teachers and local education authorities to fulfil their statutory duties to meet children's special educational needs, whether the children are in mainstream or special schools.

Mental Health

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps she is taking to (a) help schools promote mental health and (b) support teachers and pupils in dealing with mental health problems. [72686]

Mr. Miliband: In June last year, the Department published guidance "Promoting Children's Mental Health within Early Years and School Settings". The guidance is designed to help teachers and others, working alongside mental health professionals, to promote children's mental health and to intervene effectively with those experiencing problems. A four page summary is also available.

The National Healthy School Standard (NHSS), which was launched in October 1999, has as one of its specific themes "Emotional Health and Well being", which includes awareness of mental health issues. The development of emotional health and well being is covered in the National Curriculum as part of the Personal, Social and Health Education (PSHE) framework. PSHE enables pupils to develop their self-esteem, confidence and well being. It also helps pupils to appreciate the effect of their actions on their own lives and the lives of others, and to understand the limits and codes of personal and social behaviour.

In addition the Department has been working with its partners to develop a long-term strategy on behaviour improvement. A key measure being piloted is the establishment of Behaviour and Education Support Teams. Their role is to provide an effective early intervention model of supportive services to children and young people who are experiencing emotional, behavioural and mental health problems, and their families. These multi-agency Teams will link with Social Services and Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS).

The Department are working closely with the Department of Health on the National Service Framework (NSF) for children. One of the modules will be setting standards for Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS). Officials in my Department are represented on the CAMHS module.

Scottish Executive

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many formal and official inter-ministerial meetings her Department has held with the Scottish Executive since May 1999, broken down by (a) Scottish Executive department, (b) subject and (c) date. [72712]

Stephen Twigg [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Information is not available in the form requested. Ministers from my Department have frequent meetings with Ministers from the Scottish Executive, both formal and informal, covering a broad range of topics.

Secondary Schools, Taunton

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many vacancies, unfilled with permanent staff, in secondary schools there are in the Taunton constituency; and how many there were in 1997. [73265]

Mr. Miliband: In January 2002, there were 12 vacancies for full-time teachers in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools in Somerset Local Education Authority, compared with no recorded vacancies in January 1997.

In the same period, the number of full-time equivalent regular teachers working in the maintained sector in Somerset Local Education Authority rose by 290. This is the most recent information available.

Better Public Buildings Initiative

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will name the projects the departmental Design Champion has sponsored as part of the Better Public Buildings initiative; and if she will make a statement on the extent of her personal input in respect of each. [73643]

Mr. Miliband: My noble Friend, the Baroness Ashton is the Department's Design Champion and she will announce which projects she is to sponsor in the autumn.

Asylum Seekers (Nottingham)

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children from families of asylum seekers are in Nottingham schools; what additional funding has gone to schools in Nottingham to address the needs of the children of asylum seekers; how much specialist language teaching the Government have funded for each child from an asylum-seeking family in Nottingham; and what funding packages the Government have made available in Nottingham to meet the education and training needs of asylum seekers. [73691]

Stephen Twigg: There were over 400 children from families of asylum seekers in Nottingham schools in May 2002 but numbers fluctuate greatly throughout the school year.

Nottingham schools receive funding for these children in the same way that they do for all other children on school rolls, through the Education Standard Spending Assessment. Both LEAs are eligible for funding through the Ethnic Minority Achievement Grant (EMAG). The total allocations for EMAG for 2002–03 are £1,974,000 for Nottingham City and £278,000 for Nottinghamshire. In addition, Nottingham has received a total of £148,500 from this Department's grant to support the children of asylum seekers in schools in the Home Office dispersal areas.

In Nottingham, the EMAG supports 100 specialist teachers who provide English language support to children, including those from asylum seeking families.

The provision of funding to meet the education and training needs of asylum seekers is a matter for the Learning and Skills Council. I have therefore asked John Harwood, the Council's Chief Executive to write to the Honourable Gentleman with the information requested and to place a copy of his reply in the Library.

Pupil Funding

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will commission independent research to establish the gap in the level of funding per pupil between school sixth forms and colleges of further education. [73645]

Margaret Hodge: Given the different ways in which schools and colleges are funded and the very much broader remit of colleges, comparisons on the funding of school sixth forms and colleges of further education are far from straight forward. My Department is currently considering the best basis for making sound comparisons and we do not believe that external research is necessary. The Government remains firmly committed to bring up the level of funding of colleges towards that of school sixth forms. However, as we have repeatedly made clear, this will take time and must be done as resources allow.

Child Care

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action is being taken to ensure that the national child care strategy is able to offer affordable places to all children whose parents wish it in neighbourhood renewal areas; and if she will make a statement. [73543]

Mr. Miliband: Childcare plays a critical role in sustaining and strengthening communities and in helping parents out of poverty through work.

Affordability of childcare can be a major barrier for many parents, particularly women and lone parents wishing to take up employment, education and training. The Childcare Tax Credit helps parents to take up the provision made available through the National Childcare Strategy by giving financial assistance to low and middle income working parents to pay for childcare. Some 158,000 families have already benefited from this help.

The Neighbourhood Nurseries Initiative, part of the National Childcare Strategy, was launched in 2001. Over £203 million has been made available to create 45,000 high quality childcare places in the most disadvantaged areas in England. All Neighbourhood Renewal areas are in the target areas for Neighbourhood Nurseries.

Following the conclusions of the Inter Departmental Review of Childcare, the Chancellor announced on 15 July a £1.5 billion combined budget for childcare, early years education and Sure Start by 2005–06. The extra funding will support the expansion of childcare places across England, with particular emphasis on disadvantaged areas through the setting up of children's centres integrating good quality childcare with early years education, family support and health services. Our longer term aim is to establish a children's centre in every one of the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged areas.

Learn Direct Plus

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, how many people have enrolled on learndirect plus in Portsmouth South constituency since it began; how many courses are provided in Portsmouth South; how much funding has been provided for these courses; and if she will make a statement. [64728]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: [pursuant to the reply 27 June 2002, 19W]: an incorrect figure was quoted. There have been 1839 learners to date in the Portsmouth South constituency since learndirect was rolled out in October 2000.

Job Location

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many jobs under the remit of her Department in (a) the core department, (b) non-departmental public bodies, (c) executive agencies and (d) independent statutory bodies, organisations and bodies financially sponsored by her Department and other such organisations, are located in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, excluding Greater London, (iii) Greater London, (iv) Wales, (v) Northern Ireland and (vi) overseas, broken down by (A) whole time equivalent jobs and (B) the percentage per individual department, body or organisation. [72740]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The information requested is set out in the table below:

	Scotland		England ex. Greater London		Greater London
	No. WTE	per cent.	No. WTE	per cent.	No. WTE	per cent.

The percentages are of the total numbers in the core Department and in its NDPB's.

Area-Based Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list for each area-based initiative for which her Department is responsible the amount originally budgeted for in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02, stating in each year what funds budgeted for were not spent and if they were carried forward. [71457]

Estelle Morris: The table below sets out the original budgets for area based initiatives and shows the carry forward amounts for each initiative.

Learning And Skills Council

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list in respect of each programme transferred to the Learning and Skills Council (a) the agency, or agencies, previously responsible, (b) the total resources allocated in 2000–01, (c) the total resources allocated for 2001–02 and (d) the estimated costs of administering the programme in 2000–01. [71175]

Margaret Hodge: The information requested at (a), (b) and (c) is shown in the following table. The best estimate of the cost of administering the programme in 2000–01 is between £270 million and £280 million.

Child Abuse

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the work of the Children and Young People's Unit; and what work it has done since November 2001 relating to combating child abuse. [72912]

Mr. Denham: The Children and Young People's Unit works to ensure the coherence of Government policies that affect all children and young people who are under 19, and particularly those who are most vulnerable. In November 2001, it launched a consultation exercise to develop an over-arching strategy for all policies and services for children and young people in England. The framework for the strategy includes looking to secure the objective that children should live in a safe and secure community, where they are protected from abuse. The Unit is now considering the responses to the consultation in preparing a final strategy for publication later this year.

In its work within Government, the Unit works closely with the Department of Health and other Departments on matters relating to child abuse.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will take measures to oblige school governing bodies to give children who are the victims of alleged grossly inappropriately sexual behaviour and indecent assault and their parents the opportunity to give their account of such incidents. [73492]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Schools must have formal procedures for dealing with any complaints about the curriculum and special educational needs, and we recommend as a matter of good practice that governing bodies should also have procedures to ensure that other complaints are dealt with properly.

In dealing with complaints and in making provision for complaints procedures, the governing body should ensure that the person complaining is given fair treatment and in particular, a chance to state their case. Decisions and reasons for them should be given in writing and the person complaining should be informed at the same time of any rights of appeal they have if they wish to take the matter further. We already give guidance to governing bodies and schools about their role in helping to protect children from abuse, and about dealing with allegations of abuse against members of staff. This is contained in Circular 10/95 "Protecting Children from Abuse: The Role of the Education Service"

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will issue guidelines to school governing bodies and local education authorities clarifying at what point grossly inappropriately sexual behaviour becomes indecent assault. [73493]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: A decision as to at what point grossly inappropriately sexual behaviour becomes indecent assault is a matter for the police and the Crown Prosecution Service and not for the education service. Those agencies must decide whether, in any particular case, alleged behaviour is within the scope of the offences as defined in the Sexual Offences Act 1956.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will instruct school governing bodies to which allegations of grossly inappropriately sexual behaviour or indecent assault have been reported to give due consideration to any ongoing police or Child Protection Unit investigations. [73494]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department's Circular 10/95 "Protecting Children from Abuse: The Role of the Education Service" already advises that schools should refer any allegations of abuse to the police or child protection agencies. Schools should liaise with those agencies in accordance with the procedures laid down by their local Area Child Protection Committee (ACPC).

In the case of allegations of abuse against a member of staff, the Circular also advises that a police or social services investigation will take priority over an internal investigation by the school. An internal investigation running alongside a police or child protection agency enquiry is not likely to be good practice and should be held in abeyance pending the outcome of the external investigation. Due consideration can then be given to any allegations and to any disciplinary action by the school or governing body.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will take measures to ensure that school governors receive instruction on the handling of allegations of grossly inappropriately sexual behaviour and indecent assault. [73495]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department has already issued advice to Local Education Authorities and schools about dealing with allegations of abuse in Circular 10/95. "Protecting Children from Abuse: The Role of the Education Service". The Circular advises that schools and colleges should have procedures that are in accordance with the child protection procedures established by the Area Child Protection Committee and, where appropriate, by the local education authority, including procedures to be followed if a member of staff is accused of abuse.

This guidance is under review following the introduction of a new statutory duty regarding child protection in the Education Act 2002. The new duty will require governing bodies of schools or Further Education institutions and LEAs to have arrangements for ensuring that their functions are carried out with a view to safeguarding and promoting the welfare of children and to have regard guidance by the Secretary of State (or the National Assembly for Wales) in making such arrangements. We are planning to consult on this guidance in the autumn, and we hope that all those with an interest, including teachers, governors and LEAs, will contribute to that consultation.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will amend Circular 10/99 to provide greater protection for child-victims. [73496]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department's guidance about child protection is contained in Circular 10/95 "Protecting Children from Abuse: The Role of the Education Service". This is under review and we will be consulting about new guidance in the autumn. We will take full account of any representations we receive about this issue.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Accessible Communications Services

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps she is taking to ensure that OFCOM takes into account the rights and needs of disabled consumers and reflects best practice on access standards. [67782]

Dr. Howells: In carrying out its functions OFCOM must have regard to the needs of people with disabilities—this is stipulated in Clause 3(2) of the draft Communications Bill.

BBC (Fair Trading)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who takes responsibility for the enforcement of the BBCs fair trading commitment. [70380]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 17 July 2002]: The BBC's overall fair trading commitment is approved and enforced by the Board of Governors, but many of its detailed elements directly reflect the requirements of UK and EC Competition law and to that extent are enforceable by the competition authorities.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations she has received concerning the future enforcement by Ofcom of the BBC fair trading commitment, [70381]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 17 July 2002]: ITN has made representations that the future enforcement of the BBC's fair trading commitment should lie with OFCOM rather than the BBC Governors.

Princess of Wales (Memorial)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) when she will make a decision on the memorial fountain to Diana Princess of Wales; when work on the memorial fountain will commence; and when it is expected that the memorial fountain will be on view to the public; [71243]

(2) what her latest estimate is of the cost of the memorial fountain to Diana, Princess of Wales; and if she will make a statement. [71244]

Tessa Jowell [holding answer 18 July 2002]: I announced on 31 July that I had selected Gustafson Porter to design the fountain to commemorate the life of Diana, Princess of Wales. Work to design and construct the fountain will begin immediately. £3 million has been allocated to the project. I expect the main part of the memorial to be in place by the sixth anniversary of her death; the establishment of the surrounding landscaping will take longer.

Area-Based Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list for each area-based initiative for which her Department is responsible the amount originally budgeted for in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02, stating in each year what funds budgeted for were not spent and if they were carried forward. [71458]

Mr. Caborn: My Department's main Area-Based Initiative is Space for Sport and Arts. Space for Sport and Arts was launched in October 2000. Bids were invited from Local Education Authorities for funding for capital projects aimed to improve primary school arts and sports facilities for dual school and community use. All the funding for successful projects had been committed by March 2002.

Space for Sport and Arts is a collaboration between DCMS, DfES and three National Lottery Distributors—Sport England, the New Opportunities Fund and the Arts Council of England. Funding for Space for Sport and Arts is £130 million—£75 million from the Government's Capital Modernisation Fund and £55 million from the National Lottery.

The amounts budgeted by My Department for Space for Sport and Arts and the total expenditure in 2000–01 and 2001–02 is as follows:

£ million

Year	Budget	Spend
2000–01	15.0	0.013

The amount originally budgeted for Space for Sport and Arts that was not spent by the end of 2001–02 is £74.408 million. All of these funds are committed and, under end-year flexibility arrangements, will be available in this and later years to pay for the projects being assisted.

My Department provides grant-in-aid to a number of Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs); some of these NDPBs run their own Area-Based Initiatives which appear on the Regional Coordination Unit website.

Additionally the Department is involved in several area-based initiatives funded through the Lottery.

Press Office

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many (a) full time equivalents were employed by her press office and (b) secondees were placed in her press office in the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [70550]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 22 July 2002]: In July 1997, there were nine press officers in my department, including two working part time. In July 2002, there were seven press officers, all full time. A small number of informal, short term secondments to the press office took place during that time.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the (a) dates, (b) location and (c) sources were of attributable (i) articles, interviews or contributions for the media, books or other journals and (ii) speeches or presentations made in the public domain, by departmental special advisers since March 2001; who in her Department authorised the activity; and on what date this activity was recorded with the departmental Head of Information. [72253]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 24 July 2002, Official Report, column 1373.

BBC Digital Services

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the BBC's expenditure on digital services. [72450]

Dr. Howells: This is a matter for the BBC Governors. However, the licence fee settlement, in February 2000, recognised the BBC's role in driving digital take-up and in acting as a "benchmark of quality" during the development of digital services. It included a commitment by DCMS to a rolling programme of reviews of all the new digital services, the first such review being of BBC News 24.

Sport England

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the projected amount of World Class Performance funding to be distributed by (a) UK Sport and (b) Sport England in (i) 2002–03, (ii) 2003–04, (iii) 2004–05 and (iv) 2005–06. [72469]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The projected amount of funding to be distributed by UK Sport on their World Class Performance Programme, together with the projected investment by Sport England in their World Class Programmes is show in the following table.

Sport England	£5.1m	£42m	£42m	£42m

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport the amount of World Class Performance funding to be distributed by (a) UK Sport and (b) Sport England in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02. [72470]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The amount of World Class Performance funding awarded by Sport England and the actual expenditure incurred by UK Sport for the years requested is as follows.

UK Sport	£16.5m	£20.1m	£22.5m
Sport England	£16m	£8.8m	£6.7m

Temporary Staff

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many employees under contract from temping agencies worked in her Department; and how much was spent on temporary staff (a) as a total and (b) as a percentage of the total staffing budget in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [72647]

Dr. Howells: The information requested on the Department is in the following table:

No. of temporary staff	90	97	108	N/a	N/a
Temporary staff costs	£409,742	£387,296	£456,230	£491,203	N/a
as a percentage of total staff costs	2.79	2.82	3.47	4.16	N/a

The relevant information for 1997–98 is not held electronically in the format requested and can only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Similarly, information on number of temporary staff for 1998–99 is not readily available and can only be obtained at disproportionate cost

Better Public Buildings Initiative

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will name the projects the departmental Design Champion has sponsored as part of the better public buildings initiative; and if she will make a statement on the extent of her personal input in respect of each. [73642]

Dr. Howells: The DCMS design champion, my right hon. and Noble Friend the Minister for the Arts (Baroness Blackstone) has personally sponsored three projects; a DCMS conference, "Taking the Lead: Good Design in Public Buildings" at which she delivered a keynote address; Stonehenge, one of the UK World Heritage sites where DCMS led by my right hon. and Noble Friend is driving work forward to protect the site and improve the visitor experience; and the BBC project to redevelop Broadcasting House and the surrounding area. My right hon. and noble Friend met Richard MacCormac, the architect for the project on Monday 29 July 2002.

Public Buildings Action Plans

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which Departments have produced better public buildings action plans. [73532]

Dr. Howells: The following departments have produced action plans:

Department for Culture, Media and Sport

Department for Work and Pensions

Foreign and Commonwealth Office

Department for Trade and Industry

Lord Chancellor's Department

Home Office

Ministry of Defence

Department of Health

Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs

The former Department for Transport and Local Regions was preparing an action plan for publication on 5 July. Due to the recent departmental changes, new action plans will now need to be prepared for the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department for Transport. The Department for Education and Skills plan to publish an Action Plan later this autumn.

Portable Antiquities Scheme

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action she intends to take to ensure that the Portable Antiquities Scheme is continued and that her Department will provide long term financial support for the scheme. [73146]

Dr. Howells: In March this year, my right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister of State for the Arts, announced at the Standing Conference on Portable Antiquities that DCMS would be funding the Scheme's pilot posts for the following financial year, and promised that the longer term funding of the Scheme would be considered in the light of the outcome of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Spending Review.

My right hon. Friend's Review has delivered additional resources for DCMS, over the three year period of the review, which will provide real-term growth at an average of 3.5 per cent. a year. Decisions on the allocation of these additional resources will be taken over the coming months

BBC

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when her Department expects to receive the Office of Fair Trading's report on the BBC's UK programme quotas; and if she will make a statement. [72338]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 24 July 2002]: I understand that the Office of Fair Trading is preparing its report and that it will be available shortly.

Tourists

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tourists visited (a) Somerset and (b) Taunton Deane in (i) 2001 and (ii) 2000. [73273]

Dr. Howells: South West Tourism reports that in 2000 Somerset received a total of 12.09 million visits, including day visits, of which 2.18 million were made to Taunton Deane.

Detailed visit data are not yet available for 2001. However, United Kingdom Tourism Survey data show that 3.32 million visits involving stays of one or more nights were made to Somerset in 2001.

Job Locations

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many jobs under the remit of her Department in (a) the core department, (b) non-departmental public bodies, (c) executive agencies and (d) independent statutory bodies, organisations and bodies financially sponsored by her Department, the BBC and other such organisations, are located in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, excluding Greater London, (iii) Greater London, (iv) Wales, (v) Northern Ireland and (vi) overseas, broken down by (A) whole time equivalent jobs and (B) the percentage per individual department, body or organisation. [72739]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Sports and Recreation

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what plans she has to assess the national provision of sports and recreation facilities; and if she will make a statement; [73301]

(2) what plans she has to assess the national provision of open space available for informal sport and recreation; and if she will make a statement. [73302]

Mr. Caborn: My Department has announced our intention to establish an England-wide database of sports facilities. Information on sports facilities in England is currently held by a variety of organisations and a single database will enable more strategic Government investment in those areas and facilities which are most important. My Department is currently assessing the scope, content and cost of the proposed database and how the project will be taken forward.

Sport Action Zones

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she will announce the next round of sport action zones; and if she will make a statement. [73013]

Mr. Caborn: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 21 May 2002, Official Report, column 252W. The position has not changed since then.

Sport Expenditure

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the expected increase in expenditure on sport as a result of the Spending Review is; and if she will make a statement. [73303]

Mr. Caborn: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 24 July by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr Thomas), Official Report, columns 1164–1165W.

Ministerial Design Champions

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the projects the Ministerial design champions for each Government Department are sponsoring. [73413]

Dr. Howells: Department for Culture, Media and Sport:

Taking the Lead: Good Design in Public Buildings conference at the Imperial War Museum held in October 2001

Stonehenge visitor reception building

BBC Broadcasting House, Portland Place

Home Office: HQ Building Marsham Street

Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs: Old Rectory Farm, Surrey

Drayton Farm, Warwickshire

Treasury: Arrangements for sponsorship of the ongoing GOGGS project by a Treasury Minister will be finalised in the autumn

Ministry of Defence: MOD Main Building PFI

Tidworth Primary Health Care Centre Functional Prime Contract

Department for Work and Pensions: Hartshead Square, Sheffield

DWP will also announce another project this autumn

Lord Chancellor's Department: Exeter Combined Courts

Manchester Civil Justice Centre

East Anglia PPP

Department of Health: University Hospitals Birmingham NHS Trust

Leicester City West Primary Care Trust

Manchester Children's University Hospital NHS Trust

Walsall Hospitals NHS Trust

Foreign and Commonwealth Office: New British embassy and ambassador's residence Warsaw

The Department for Trade and Industry and the Department for Education and Skills will announce projects in the autumn.

The new design champions for the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department for Transport have not yet confirmed which projects they will be sponsoring.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fireworks

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions her Department has had with fireworks retailers regarding the period in which fireworks can be sold. [65642]

Mr. Wilson: Discussions are to take place shortly with fireworks retailers regarding the voluntary period of sale.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions her Department has had with fireworks manufacturers regarding the banning of aerial bangers. [65522]

Mr. Wilson: The Department has had discussions with representatives of fireworks manufacturers who have put in place a voluntary ban on the supply of air bombs to the consumer.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations her Department has had from animal welfare organisations regarding the sale and use of fireworks. [65523]

Mr. Wilson: The Department has received representations from animal welfare organisations regarding the sale and use of fireworks, but this is essentially a matter for the Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) under the Protection of Animals Act 1919.

Arms Trade

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) United Kingdom, (b) EU, (c) international and (d) other regulations apply to the trading of arms. [72389]

Nigel Griffiths: The export of arms from the UK is controlled under the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939. EU arms embargoes are controlled by means of regulations made under the Treaty establishing the European Communities and are directly applicable to all Member States. Licensing, enforcement and penalties for breach of the regulations are provided for in national legislation made under the European Communities Act 1972. United Nations (UN) arms embargoes are implemented in the UK under the UN Act 1946 and the Import, Export and Customs Power (Defence) Act 1939.

In addition, the Export Control Bill contains new powers allowing controls to be imposed on trading of arms between overseas countries.

F-16 Fighters

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what written assurances have been given in the course of issuing an export licence regarding the use in third countries of UK navigation and targeting equipment supplied to the US makers of F-16 fighters. [68936]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 11 July 2002]: Apart from the normal end user documentation, written assurances are normally only sought in relation to the use of equipment exported from the UK in connection with weapons of mass destruction.

Export Licences

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many revocations of arms export licences to Israel there were in each month since January 2000; in what categories they were; and if she will make a statement. [71386]

Nigel Griffiths: The number of Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) where licences were revoked or whose coverage was amended by the exclusion of Israel, for items on the Military List, in each month between January 2000 and June 2002, is set out in the table below.

Individual licences might cover a range of items with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the tables in the total of all of the relevant ratings.

During the same period no Standard Individual Export Licences, for items on the Military List, were revoked where the end user was in Israel. In addition, Israel has been removed from the coverage of one Open General Export Licence, for items on the Military List, details of which are available from the Libraries of the House.

Since the publication of the 2001 Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls it has come to light that two OIELs for items on the Military List, which were revoked or whose coverage was amended by the exclusion of Israel, were inadvertently omitted from the Report.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the value is of licences granted for equipment on the military and dual-use lists to (a) Georgia, (b) Uzbekistan, (c) Kyrgyzstan, (d) Tajikistan, (e) Turkey, (f) the Philippines, (g) Kenya, (h) Ethiopia, (i) Djibouti, (j) Bahrain, (k) Oman, (l) Jordan, (m) Yemen, (n) India, (o) Pakistan and (p) Israel in each month from January 2001 to June 2002; and if she will make a statement. [65098]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The total value of SIEL applications for which a licence was issued, is published by destination in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls, copies of which are placed in the Libraries of the House. The 2001 Annual Report will be published soon.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many individual export licence applications have been outstanding for more than (a) three months; (b) six months and (c) one year. [66504]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Department of Trade and Industry's Export Control Organisation (ECO) was processing 1,584 applications for individual export licences as of 1 July 2002, of which 312 Standard Individual Export Licence (SIEL) applications and 84 Open Individual Export Licence (OIEL) applications had been outstanding for more than three months; of those, 51 SIEL and 42 OIEL applications had been outstanding for more than 6 months; and, of those, 19 SIEL and 13 OIEL applications had been outstanding for more than one year.

As a result of its programme of continuous improvement the ECO has, in partnership with other Government Departments, substantially reduced the time taken to process all applications, and in particular the most complicated and sensitive cases. The number of SIEL applications taking more than 6 months to finalise is less than a third of the figure at the same time last year.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many arms export licences were (a) requested and (b) granted for exports to Belarus (i) from 1997 to August 2001 and (ii) since August 2001; and if she will make a statement. [73163]

Mr. Wilson: Between 2 May 1997 and 31 August 2001 no Standard Individual Export Licence (SIEL) applications and 4 Open Individual Export Licence (OIEL) applications were received, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in Belarus. Between 1 September 2001 and 15 July 2002 no SIEL applications and 2 OIEL applications were received, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in Belarus.

The number of SIELs and OIELs issued, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in Belarus, between 2 May 1997 and 31 December 2001 are published in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls. Copies of the 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2001 Annual Reports are available from the Libraries of the House.

Between 1 January 2001 and 31 August 2001, no SIELs or OIELs were issued, for items on the Military List, where the end user was in Belarus. Between 1 September 2001 and 15 July 2002, no SIELs and 1 OIEL was issued, for items on the Military List, where the end user was in Belarus.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many arms export licences were (a) requested and (b) granted for exports to the Ukraine (i) from 1997 to August 2000 and (ii) since August 2000; and if she will make a statement. [73162]

Mr. Wilson: Between 2 May 1997 and 31 August 2000, 14 Standard Individual Export Licence (SIEL) applications and 8 Open Individual Export Licence (OIEL) applications were received for items on the Military List, where the end users were in the Ukraine. Between 1 September 2000 and 15 July 2002, 4 SIEL applications and 5 OIEL applications were received for items on the Military List, where the end users were in the Ukraine.

The number of SIELs and OIELs issued, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in the Ukraine, between 2 May 1997 and 31 December 2001 are published in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls. Copies of the 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2001 Annual Reports are available from the Libraries of the House.

Between 1 January 2000 and 31 August 2000, 2 SIELs and no OIELs were issued, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in the Ukraine. Between 1 September 2000 and 31 December 2000, 1 SIEL and 1 OIEL were issued, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in the Ukraine. Between 1 January 2002 and 15 July 2002, no SIELs and 2 OIELs were issued, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in the Ukraine.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many arms export licences were (a) requested and (b) granted for exports to (i) Georgia and (ii) Russia in each year since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [73164]

Mr. Wilson: The number of Standard Individual Export Licence (SIEL) applications and Open Individual Export Licence (OIEL) applications received, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in Georgia and Russia, in each year since May 1997 is as follows:

	Georgia		Russia
	Siel	Oiel	Siel	Oiel
2 May 1997 to 2031 December 1997	1	1	12	3
1998	4	0	20	2
1999	2	0	10	2
2000	2	1	18	3
1 January 2002 to 15 July 2002	0	0	8	1

The number of SIELs and OIELs issued, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in Georgia and Russia, in each year since May 1997 are published by destination in the Government's Annual Reports in Strategic Export Controls. Copies of the 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2001 Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls are available from the Libraries of the House.

Between 1 January 2002 and 15 July 2002, no SIELs and 2 OIELs were issued, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in Georgia. During that same period 5 SIELs and 4 OIELs were issued, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in Russia.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the types of equipment for which export licences were granted on 8 July in respect of exports to the USA of defence-related equipment; and if she will state the countries to which this equipment will be exported from the USA once incorporated into other defence equipment. [69112]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The types of equipment for which Standard Individual Export Licences and Open Individual Export Licences were issued on Monday 8 July 2002, where the end user or consignee was in the United States of America, for items on the Military List, was as follows:

ML1
ML2
ML6
ML7
ML9
ML10
ML15

In addition, USA is a permitted destination on certain Open General Export Licences covering the export of items on the Military List; copies of all Open General Export Licences are placed in the Libraries of the House.

In taking decisions to issue these licences, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, acting through the Export Control Organisation, took into account the information available to her on the stated final destination of defence-related goods into which the goods licensed for export from the UK were to be incorporated, where relevant. These potential final destinations were Israel,

Japan and the United Arab Emirates. It should however be noted that final decisions on exports of defence equipment from the United States of America are for the US exporter and Government.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping) on 8 July 2002 Official Report, columns 650–52W.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many open individual export licences are valid for the export of arms to India. [66502]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 July 2002]: 81.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many individual export licence applications for the sale of armaments to India have been received by her Department since 1 May; and how many have been approved. [66503]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 July 2002]: 118 Standard Individual Export Licence (SIEL) applications and no Open Individual Export Licence (OIEL) applications for items on the military list.

38 SIELs and 1 OIEL for items on the military list were issued.

Export Credit Guarantees Department

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to her answer of 15 May 2002, Official Report, column 659W, on the Export Credit Guarantees Department, if she will break down the money paid under the Export Credit Guarantees Department (a) in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1997–98 to the USSR (Civil Misc), (b) in 2000–01 to Jordan, (c) in 1999–2000 to the Philippines (Civil Aerospace), (d) in 1999–2000 to Indonesia (Civil, Misc), (e) in 1999–2000 to Indonesia, (Civil Aerospace) and (f) in 1999–2000 to Indonesia (Defence) by (A) the company and (B) the project involved; and if she will make a statement. [70553]

Ms Hewitt: The table below lists the companies that ECGD has paid claims to and the types of project involved for the requested markets, years and sectors. ECGD seeks to recover claims payments on all cases whether through rescheduling agreements in the Paris Club or negotiations with individual buyers.

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investigations are being carried out by the ECGD following the judgment of Judge Cullinan in Lesotho, on British companies that received ECGD support; and whether they have referred this case to the relevant external investigatory body. [72919]

Ms Hewitt: We are aware that there has been a guilty verdict delivered against Masupha Sole, the former Chief Executive of the Lesotho Highlands Development Authority. However, the consortia involved in the Lesotho Highlands Water Project have not been convicted of corruption.

ECGD is currently seeking information from the companies who were supported by ECGD and who were members of the consortia concerned, and continues to closely monitor developments in relation to Court action in Lesotho.

ECGD is fully committed to eliminating bribery and corruption. On 28 September 2000, ECGD strengthened its own anti corruption measures—pre-empting the OECD Export Credit Group's Action Statement on Bribery and Officially Supported Export Credits and reflecting the OECD Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total was of (a) premiums and (b) claims paid by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in the financial year 2001–02. [72606]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The following table details premiums earned and claims paid for 2001–02.

I have also included the total of recoveries and interest received by EGCD in the same period.

	£ million
Premium Earned	76.9
Recoveries and Interest	503.5

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total of (a) premiums earned, (b) recoveries received, (c) claims paid and (d) interest support was in Export Credits Guarantee Department operations in relation to their defence business in (i) 2000–01 and (ii) 2001–02. [72504]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The following table details Claims Paid, Premium Earned and Claims Recovered in respect of ECGD's support for defence related business in 2000–01 and 2001–02. The cost of interest rate support has been estimated on the proportion of ECGD credit business constituted by defence related business.

Information on amounts received through Paris Club rescheduling has not been included as it is not held on sectoral basis and this cannot be readily determined. It is likely that taking account of these amounts would improve the position in respect of defence business cashflow.

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what ECGD support has been granted for (a) fossil fuel, (b) renewable energy and (c) nuclear power projects, broken down by country, in each year from 1997 to 2002. [72864]

Ms Hewitt: The following table details amounts of ECGD business issued for power projects within the fossil fuel, nuclear and renewable energy sectors, between 1997 and 2002 to date.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to her answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 588W, on ECGD, if she will break down the figures for the financial years (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01 by country. [72926]

Ms Hewitt: The following table details premium earned and claims paid by ECGD in respect of defence business by country for financial years 1999–2000 and 2000–01.

Figures for claims indicate the year of payment rather than the year of underwriting. The majority of these claims have been subject to internationally brokered rescheduling agreements and it is expected that these claims will be recovered in full over time.

The calculation of the premium amount for defence business in 1999–2000 has fallen slightly (from £27 million to £25.4 million) since ECGD was first asked to provide this figure. This is due to a combination of improved systems for reporting on business by industrial sector and movements in sterling–US dollar exchange rates.

Investment Grants

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are used to ensure that her Department is able to recover any grants awarded to overseas companies in connection with investment projects in the UK, that subsequently became repayable. [73650]

Alan Johnson: It is normal to seek a legally binding guarantee of repayment from the parent company. Other conditions may be sought depending on the circumstances of the specific case.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of the grant money paid to Viasystems Inc group in respect of its North Tyneside plant has been recovered. [73651]

Alan Johnson: We have recovered £3 million to date, in two tranches. The Department is in continuing discussions over the remaining sum.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will ask the Comptroller and Auditor General to review the safeguards in place to ensure that grant moneys paid to overseas companies can be recovered if they subsequently become repayable, with special reference to the case of Viasystems Inc. [73652]

Alan Johnson: The Comptroller and Auditor General is an independent officer of the House. If the hon. Member wishes such a review to be carried out, I suggest he raises the matter with him.

General Agreement on Trade and Services

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the impact of GATS on trade and industry. [66868]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The purpose of the GATS is to promote economic growth through the expansion of trade in services. Quantifying the benefits of services liberalisation is difficult, but the available estimates suggest positive benefits for both developed and developing countries in particular.

For the United Kingdom, liberalisation of services markets should be of particular benefit. The UK is the second largest exporter of services in the world and fourth largest importer. In 2001 exports of services amounted to £77 billion and imports were worth £65 billion. Services account for nearly 70 per cent. of our GDP.

We believe that liberalisation of services underpinned by effective domestic regulatory frameworks can bring benefits to developing countries. Recent studies point to the economic efficiency and welfare gains that liberalisation can bring. The World Bank estimate that services liberalisation could boost the income of developing countries by nearly $900 billion. This is nearly five times the gain the bank estimate that they would obtain from liberalisation in goods. Liberalisation of infrastructure services such as financial, telecommunications and transport services can help developing countries by fostering the efficiency and growth of other sectors of their economies.

Under the GATS countries can decide in which sectors and to what extent they wish to liberalise or privatise and when they think it would be beneficial for them to do so. The EC has made clear in its liberalisation requests that it is not seeking the dismantling of public services nor the privatisation of state owned companies.

Business Investment (Somerset)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action the Government have ta[illegible] attract business to (a) Somerset and (b) Taunton since 1997. [73259]

Alan Johnson: In 1998 the Government launched the Regional Development Agencies and in 1999 the South West Regional Development Agency (SW RDA) was established. Prior to that the West of England Development Agency had responsibility for attracting inward investment to Somerset and Taunton.

Since the inception of the RDA the Agency's Inward Investment team, working closely with the Somerset Local Strategic Partnership, has secured a number of successes bringing inward investors into Somerset.

Somerset has also benefited from investment under the Single Regeneration Budget (£1.2m) and the Market and Coastal Towns Initiative (£50K).

Investment (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance has been given to manufacturing companies in Coventry since 1997. [66158]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 4 July 2002]: It is not feasible to cite details of individual grants that have been awarded to Coventry based manufacturing companies. However, the following grants and assistance have been available for all or part of the period in question:

Regional Selective Assistance; Enterprise Grants; New SMART; SMART; SPUR; Regional Enterprise Grants—including Regional Innovation Grants and Regional Investment Grants; and the European funded "Accelerate" scheme. Additionally, modernisation and diversification support has been offered to businesses as a result of the recommendations of the Rover Task Force.

Farm Bill

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations the EU is making to the US on the likely effects of the proposed Farm Bill; and if she will make a statement. [67597]

Ms Hewitt: Both HMG and the Commission are in frequent dialogue with the US Government at all levels about the US Farm Bill (the "Farm Security and Rural Investment Act 2002"). We have made clear to the US Government our considerable disappointment with the Farm Bill, especially in the context of the Doha Development Agenda, which committed all WTO members to substantial reductions in trade-distorting support.

The US believe the Farm Bill is compatible with their World Trade Organisation Commitments and have stressed their intention to remain fully engaged in the Doha negotiations. We will continue to strongly encourage them to do so.

Local Loop Unbundling Initiative

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of the number of local loops that will have been unbundled by July; and what estimate she originally made when the local loop unbundling initiative was announced. [68043]

Stephen Timms: At the end of June 2002, over 600 lines had been unbundled. It is difficult to forecast how many unbundled local loops there will be by a given date as this is dependent on operators' own commercial rollout plans. Past attempts to forecast volumes of unbundled loops have proved unreliable for a number of reasons, not least the prevailing market conditions and the decision by operators to target the business rather than residential market.

Fraud

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received with regard to (a) introducing regulation in an attempt to prevent fraud by corporate executives, and (b) introducing penalties to further discourage fraud by corporate executives; and if she will make a statement. [69080]

Mr. Wilson: The Government's White Paper, published on 16 July, in response to the Company Law Review includes a proposal for codification of directors' general duties, with civil remedies for breach of director's duties if a workable scheme can be devised. The White Paper also proposes extending the existing offence for misleading the auditors of a company and proposes a new duty on directors to volunteer information to auditors where such information is necessary for the performance of auditors' duties.

In addition the Enterprise Bill provides for the introduction of criminal sanctions for individuals who enter into cartel agreements.

Foresight Projects

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the crime prevention panel of the Foresight projects. [69814]

Ms Hewitt: The Foresight Crime Prevention Panel was set up in April 1999 to run for three years. The Panel considered the likely developments in science, technology and society up to 20 years ahead and how these might impact on crime. The aim was to try and help UK Government, law enforcement, business, science and society prepare for the future.

In December 2000 the Panel published a report "Turning the Corner" which included five key recommendations for change. The Panel spent until March 2002 taking forward these recommendations, the three key outputs were:

a framework for a national e-crime strategy for the Home Office.

a wide range of research projects. Many of these will assist the Home Office in its future strategy on business crime: the impact of crime on business; the scope for a crime-proofing code of practice for manufacturers; the incentives needed for the adoption of such a code; and the new crime threats from e-tailing.

a benchmarking research project which reviewed scientific research on crime prevention in the UK and identified capability gaps. This has paved the way for proposals for a dedicated programme of scientific research, led by the Home Office, to support crime prevention.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has for future funding of the Business Information Crime System operating under the Foresight initiative. [69815]

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has for future funding of the Business Information Crime System operating under the Foresight Initiative. [71216]

Ms Hewitt: DTI has no current plans for further funding of the Business Information Crime System (BICS), beyond the life of the current BICS research project. The project is expected to complete by June 2003.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the crime prevention panel of the Foresight projects. [71225]

Animal Testing (Cosmetics)

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the position Her Majesty's Government will take on the EU Cosmetics Directive at second reading and conciliation in the European Parliament. [69719]

Mr. Wilson: At the Internal Market Consumers and Tourism Council on 26 November 2001 the UK voted in favour of the Common Position text. The Common Position text includes a marketing ban linked to Organisation for Economic Development and Cooperation (OECD) accepted and published alternatives to animal tests. The text also contains a full test ban for finished cosmetic products and a testing ban on ingredients once internationally validated alternatives to animal testing are available. The UK will enter conciliation discussions from this position. The Government's objective is to encourage the adoption of a text which takes account of the European Parliament's concerns in relation to animal welfare, and which is both consistent with our WTO obligations and designed to withstand challenges within the WTO.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons Her Majesty's Government voted against (a) a complete marketing ban on new animal-tested cosmetics and (b) a full ban on animal testing for cosmetics in the EU at the Council of Ministers; and if she will make a statement. [69720]

Mr. Wilson: The reasons why the Government voted against (a) a complete marketing ban on new animal-tested cosmetics and (b) a full ban on animal testing for cosmetics in the EU in favour of the Council Common position text were set out by my hon. Friend the Minister for Competition, Consumers and Markets during the course of the debate in European Standing Committee C held on 13 March and published in the Parliamentary Debates Official Report of the same date. The Government's objective is to encourage the adoption of a text which takes account of the European Parliament's concerns in relation to animal welfare, and which is both consistent with our WTO obligations and designed to withstand challenges within the WTO.

Business Link Inquiry Service

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the operating costs have been of the Business Link Inquiry Service. [70197]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Under the Small Business Service Gateway programme, small businesses are able to access business support services and advice via a number of channels—by calling the Business Link National Enquiry Line on 0845 600 9 006; by logging on to the www.businesslink.org website; or by directly contacting their local Business Link. These channels and the supporting IT systems and infrastructure became operational from April 2001 and are delivered collectively under a single managed service contract.

The operating costs for the Business Link National Enquiry Line are part of the overall costs of the SBS Gateway programme. In the first year these consisted of a service charge of £3.75 million together with variable costs of approximately £770,000. Business Link Enquiry Service costs cannot be disaggregated from these figures.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many inquiries per month the Business Link Inquiry Service has handled since its launch. [70196]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 22 July 2002]: From April 2001 the number of telephone enquiries has run at an average of 4,860 per month. From April 2002 with the introduction of the automated call routing technology monthly volumes are now averaging 4,980. The website www.businesslink.org receives 100,000–150,000 visits each month from more than 30,000 individuals. An average of 356 email enquiries per month are also received.

Additionally, in the last year almost 43,000 clients per month were assisted by their local Business Link.

Strategic Training for Apparel and Textiles Programme

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to secure the continuation of the Strategic Training for Apparel and Textiles programme after June 2002. [72205]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The Strategic Training for Apparel and Textiles (STAT) programme offers financial support to companies in the textiles and clothing sectors towards the costs of training in support of strategic business change and is currently being funded by the Department for Work and Pensions.

I am aware of a number of expressions of support from the industry for the programme to continue and the Department is currently in discussion with the Department for Education and Skills, which now has lead responsibility for training of the employed, to consider the case for a follow on programme.

Textile and Clothing Industry

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance has been given to the textile and clothing industry since 1997; what measures are in place to help the textile and clothing industry develop faster and more environmentally-friendly techniques; and what proposals her Department has to support the exports of the textiles and clothing industry's products. [70128]

Stephen Timms: The Government has provided almost £83 million of financial assistance to the UK textiles and clothing industry since May 1997, devoted to capital investment, innovation, exports, design and marketing, e-commerce, supply chain management, technical textiles and training and development. A key element of this assistance has been support for a Textiles and Clothing Industry Forum Adaptation programme, designed to improve the speed, efficiency and quality of the UK textile and clothing supply chain.

The UK textiles and clothing industry has already capitalised on the DTI's BIO-WISE programme which encourages companies to exploit the environmental benefits of biotechnology and also the Envirowise programme which provides practical environmental advice to businesses, focusing on resource efficiency and clean technology measures. In collaboration with CBWT, (the Confederation of British Wool Textiles), DTI is supporting a project to predict the effect of textile chemicals on the aquatic environment aimed at reducing effluent emissions at source.

Textile and clothing companies are eligible for the full range of export advice and assistance from Trade Partners UK, including assistance under the Support for Exhibitions and Seminars Abroad (SESA) scheme. This scheme helps them attend and exhibit at key overseas trade fairs and exhibitions. The value of support for clothing and textiles events under the SESA scheme in 2001–02 was £3,740,732.

End-Of-Life Vehicles

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who will be responsible for the end-of-life vehicles from 2007 for cars that have (a) been stolen in foreign countries and imported into the UK where they are sold through the second hand market and (b) brought into the UK as grey imports; and if she will make a statement. [70717]

Mr. Wilson: Final decisions have not yet been taken on the precise nature of the arrangements which will be introduced to implement the End-of-Life Vehicles Directive in the period from 2007. Those arrangements will need to deal properly with the totality of the vehicle waste stream in accordance with the terms of the Directive.

End-of-Life Vehicle Directive

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to increase the (a) number and (b) capacity of centres that can be registered as approved to treat vehicles according to the End-of-Life Vehicle Directive; and if she will make a statement. [73137]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment intends to publish for consultation later in the year draft regulations relating to Article 6 of the Directive. These will set out a regime for operators to acquire the necessary permits to carry out treatment of end-of-life vehicles, and will transpose the requirements of Annex I of the Directive into national law.

In time, only facilities permitted under this regime will be able to treat end-of-life vehicles and issue the "Certificates of Destruction" required by the Directive. As this network of facilities develops, we shall monitor closely its ability to deal properly with all end-of-life vehicles arising in the UK.

Motor Vehicle Distribution

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the location ban clause in the European Commission's proposal for motor vehicle block exemption for motor vehicle distribution. [71363]

Mr. Wilson: The European Commission adopted a new cars block exemption regulation on 17 July. The regulation will come into force on 1 October this year, but with a transitional period of one year for all provisions except that on the location clause ban. The introduction of this provision has been delayed until 1 October 2005.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on progress with the European Commission's proposals for a new motor vehicle block exemption for motor vehicle distribution. [71362]

Mr. Wilson: The European Commission agreed a new block exemption for the sale of new cars and car servicing on Wednesday, 17 July. The new block exemption will replace the existing one, which is due to expire on 30 September this year, but will be subject to transitional arrangements.

The Government has welcomed this improvement on the current regime. The reform should mean more choice and fairer prices for consumers, and greater competition and innovation in both the retail and after-sales sectors. The new block exemption is also good for business, with dealers being freer to determine how they run their businesses.

While we very much welcome the changes on new car sales and on car servicing and repair, the delay in the introduction of the freedom for dealers to open in new locations, which will not come into effect until 2005, is disappointing. We would have liked this to happen sooner, as we made clear to the Commission. Nevertheless, we welcome the fact that it will happen automatically in 2005, without a further review.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reason an explanatory memorandum on the new block exemption in relation to motor vehicle distribution was not produced before it was adopted by the Commission. [71655]

Mr. Wilson: The motor vehicle block exemption is a European Commission regulation, not a Council of Ministers regulation. The Scrutiny Committees do not routinely scrutinise Commission measures, so documents relating to proposals for Commission legislation are not automatically deposited, and Departments are not expected to produce explanatory memoranda in every case. In this particular case, the Chairman of the House of Commons European Scrutiny Select Committee requested an explanatory memorandum on 3 July, and this was submitted to the Committee on 10 July.

Accountancy and Audit Regulator

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who the members of the co-ordinating Group on Audit and Accounting issues are; which organisations they represent; what their accountancy qualifications are; what accountancy bodies they belong to; what the dates of meetings are; what the accountancy connections are of individuals and parties they have invited to comment; and whether the minutes will be published. [70713]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Details of the members of the Co-ordinating Group on Audit and Accounting issues and of the parties they invited to comment on their work are given in its Interim Report, which was published on 24 July 2002.

These individuals were invited to be members of the Group by virtue of their roles in their organisations. No information is held about their qualifications or details of membership of particular bodies.

The Group has met three times to date: on 11 April, 11 June and 17 July 2002. The minutes of its meetings will not be published. However, the Group's Interim Report has been published, and its Final Report will also be published in due course.

Mail Logistics Ltd.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received on the activities of Mail Logistics Ltd. [70831]

Stephen Timms: The Department has received no such representations.

Galileo

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates have been made by her Department on the extent to which the Galileo satellite navigation system will duplicate services available under the Global Positioning System. [70709]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Transport on 24 July, Official Report, column 1270W.

Universal Bank

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the numbers of customers for the Universal Bank in (a) 2003, (b) 2004, (c) 2005, (d) 2006 and (e) 2007. [70846]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 18 July 2002]: The Government has an operating assumption of 3 million card accounts at the Post Office but there will be no cap and no eligibility criteria. Numbers could therefore vary according to customer demand and the systems are being designed to cope with a range of customer numbers.

Regional Aid

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when a decision will be taken on the future of the enterprise grant tier 3 programme of regional aid. [71300]

Alan Johnson: The enterprise grant scheme is being considered as part of the wider review of DTI business support. Any further changes to the geographical coverage of the scheme will not be decided until after the end of the wider review.

Enterprises Initiatives

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the percentage take up has been of each of her enterprise initiatives in the past three years. [71668]

Nigel Griffiths: DTI promotes enterprise and assists enterprises in many ways. These are set out in "The Government's Expenditure Plans report for 2002–03 to 2003–04" (Cmnd 5416).

Business Link Operators (BLOs) assisted almost 245,000 separate businesses during 2001–02 this represents a penetration rate of almost 14 per cent. In addition, BLOs helped on average almost 21,000 pre-starts.

Since October 1999, around 8,500 pre and early start businesses have received support from BLOs to assist them to reach their high growth potential.

The Small Business Service supporting 96 Phoenix Development Fund projects in disadvantaged areas and amongst under-represented groups with a budget of £30 million. So far over 8,700 people have been assisted, enabling the start-up of over 400 new enterprises and creating or safeguarding more than 1,600 jobs.

SBS has supported over 800 (a record number) new Smart projects this year, worth over £34 million. The Scheme provides grants to help research and develop technologically innovative products and processes or buy external consultancy to improve their use and exploitation of technology. Smart now contributes half a billion pounds to the economy annually (source: Smart Evaluation published October 2001); and

Finally, The Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme, which offers guarantees on loans to small firms with viable business proposals that are unable to obtain conventional finance because they lack security to offer against a loan, passed the £3 billion lending mark earlier this year. Since the start of the Scheme in June 1981 over 81,000 loans have been guaranteed.

A quarterly Management Information Report is routinely copied to the Libraries of the House. This report includes the remit and usage of all SBS enterprise initiatives.

Business Start-Ups

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the annual cost of initiatives to encourage new businesses in rural areas in each year since 1997. [71661]

Nigel Griffiths: The Small Business Service (SBS) is providing special help for start-ups and micro-businesses through the network of Business Link Operators. This includes businesses in rural areas.

SBS is, spending £3 million over 2 years through the Development Fund For Rural Renewal, to help rural business communities that are hard hit by the outbreak of Foot and Mouth Disease.

Business Link Operators have provided access to a range of advice and support services on average to 100,00 different start-ups and established businesses per quarter in the last 3 years.

Since October 1999, some 8,000 pre and early start businesses have received support from Business Link Operators to assist them in reaching their high growth potential.

In 1998–99 SBS spent £103 million, in 1999–2000 £118 million, in 2000–01 £172 million and in 2001–02 £154 million, on Business Link programme expenditure in all areas. SBS will be spending over £164 million in 2002–03.

We do not hold figures for 1997–98. These figures are from the Expenditure Plans Reports.

Graduate Businesses

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many programmes her Department has initiated since 1997 aimed at encouraging graduates to establish their own businesses. [71670]

Nigel Griffiths: Since 1997, the DTI has initiated a comprehensive programme of support for knowledge transfer from the science base that includes amongst its objectives promotion of entrepreneurship and business awareness within universities, including encouraging graduates to establish their own businesses. The knowledge transfer programme includes:

Science Enterprise Challenge—encouraging the teaching of entrepreneurship (established 1999)

University Challenge—providing seed funding for commercialisation of research (established 1999)

The Higher Education Innovation Fund—fostering links between universities and business (established 2001).

These schemes are complemented by Research Council support and DTI programmes of longer standing, which strengthen links between universities and business and may lead indirectly to the establishment of new businesses.

Welsh Manufacturing

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions she has had with her colleagues in the Welsh Assembly Government concerning Welsh manufacturing. [71766]

Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has had discussions with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales covering a wide range of issues, including manufacturing in Wales. He, in turn, has regular meetings with the First Minister of the Welsh Assembly Government. Officials from my Department and the Welsh Assembly Government have also had many discussions on matters of mutual interest, including manufacturing in Wales.

European Telecommunications Standards

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports the Radio Agency has assessed about the role of members of the European Telecommunications Standards Institute's working group on Digital Information Standards activities which added value to Motorola Europe's patent applications in this field; and what implications this will have for the cost of future licence fees payable to Motorola. [68063]

Stephen Timms: The Radiocommunications Agency is a UK member of the European Telecommunications Standards Institute and in common with other members of ETSI, its responsibilities would not extend to carrying out an assessment of the role of other members of the group.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the implications for the UK digital communications industry of applications made by Motorola Europe supported by Motorola USA for patents on technologies offered to and adopted by the European Telecommunications Standards Institute's Digital Information Interchange Systems Standards group. [68066]

Stephen Timms: The Department of Trade and Industry supports the European Telecommunications Institute's policy on Intellectual Property Rights but is not in a position to comment upon the impact of patent rights belonging to individual companies. However, the Radiocommunications Agency is aware of discussions currently taking place within ETSI on the value of essential IPR in a standard and the value of contributions given by members in the development of those standards. The Digital Information Interchange Systems project is seen as a means to promote spectrum efficiency within the Private Business Radio Industry and the Agency would wish to see it develop for the benefit of industry, manufacturers and the users of business radio.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports the Radio Agency has assessed on Motorola Europe's licence fee policy for the use of the common technologies employed in pursuit of DIIS standards. [68064]

Stephen Timms: It is not the role of the Radiocommunications Agency to assess the commercial practice of companies or organisations in their operation of fees policy relating to Intellectual Property Rights held by those organisations.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the implications of recent Motorola Europe patent activity for the prospects for the participation of small-scale UK-owned telecommunications companies involved in the creation of the European Telecommunications Standards. [68062]

Stephen Timms: The Department of Trade and Industry supports the European Telecommunications Institute's policy on Intellectual Property Rights that has been established for some time but is not in a position to comment upon the impact of patent rights belonging to individual companies. However, the DTI supports moves towards digital technology and would encourage all companies, not least small companies, to take advantage of opportunities arising from the introduction of this technology.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports the Radio Agency has assessed about the Chairman of the European Telecommunications Standards Institute's work in establishing Motorola Europe's role in the authorship and application for patents for the technologies applicable to companies in the Digital Information Interchange Standards group. [68065]

Stephen Timms: The Radiocommunications Agency is a UK member of the European Telecommunications Standards Institute and in common with other members of ETSI, its responsibilities would not extend to carrying out an assessment of reports relating to the work of a Chairman of an ETSI group in this respect.

Broadband

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives her Department has to extend the availability of broadband internet provision to rural Somerset; and if she will make a statement. [73260]

Stephen Timms: We are working with the Broadband Stakeholder Group to help industry increase availability and take-up of broadband throughout the country.

As part of this strategy, we have provided £30 million to the RDAs and DAs to help develop innovative solutions for extending networks into areas considered commercially unattractive. The South West RDA received £3.78 million for such projects, details of which can be found on the DTI web site.

On top of this we are acting to improve the business case for service providers in rural areas by examining how the public sector can most effectively procure its own broadband. On June 26, I announced my intention to establish a new Regional Broadband Unit. Its purpose will be to stimulate economic development and enhance the delivery of public services through extending broadband services at the regional and local level.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of households in the Portsmouth, South constituency have access to broadband lines; and if she will make a statement. [72673]

Ms Hewitt: Broadband services by one or more of ADSL, cable and wireless are available to around 66 per cent. of the population. Satellite broadband is available throughout the country.

A map showing geographical availability of broadband services can be found in the UK Online Annual Report [http://www.e-envoy.gov.uk/ukonline/champions/anrep_menu.htm].

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of homes can access ADSL broadband services; and what plans she has to ensure an increase in ADSL broadband services. [72394]

Ms Hewitt: At the end of May 2002, ADSL was available to 66 per cent. of households. We are working with the Broadband Stakeholder Group to help industry increase availability and take-up of broadband in general.

As part of this strategy, we have provided £30 million to the RDAs and DAs to help develop innovative solutions for extending networks into areas considered commercially unattractive. On top of this we are acting to improve the business case for service providers in rural areas by examining how the public sector can most effectively procure its own broadband.

As a result of the Government's policy of promoting greater competition in broadband services, prices for broadband in the UK are now as cheap as in France, Germany and the US, following recent wholesale price cuts. Taking DSL alone, prices fell by 39 per cent. between January and June, meaning that UK prices are cheaper for DSL than in France and Germany.

More recently, I announced my intention to establish a new Regional Broadband Unit. Its purpose will be to stimulate economic development and enhance the delivery of public services through extending broadband services at the regional and local level.

OFCOM

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the consultancy work being carried out by Towers-Perrin into the structure of OFCOM for her Department was put out to competitive tender; and if she will make a statement. [72225]

Stephen Timms: A consortium of consultants, led by Towers Perrin and assisted by Ernst and Young and Differentis, is currently working on a wide range of organisational issues, including OFCOM's structure, as part of the preparations for the new regulator. This work was subject to full competitive tender in line with Government and EC requirements, following publication of a Notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities. The outcome of the tendering process was also published in the Official Journal.

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultation is taking place with the radio industry about the future structure of OFCOM. [72226]

Stephen Timms: The radio industry is engaged in regular meetings with the Communications Bill Team and the existing communications regulators and has had informal discussion with the OFCOM Transition Team. Formal consultation on OFCOM structure and other organisational arrangements will be a matter for the OFCOM Chairman and Board, once they are in post.

Newspaper Circulation

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to her answer of 18 July, ref. 70135, what information she has on the percentage of circulation that the five leading newspaper groups hold in (a) regional evening papers, (b) regional morning papers, (c) local weeklies and (d) local weekly freesheets. [72307]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The available information is as follows:

Company	Total sales or distribution per week (per cent.)	Daily or Sunday titles sales or distribution per week (per cent.)	Weekly titles sales or distribution per week (per cent.)
Trinity Mirror	24.0	24.3	23.6
DMGT	21.3	31.2	9.0
Gannett	14.1	8.7	20.7
Johnston Press	7.7	4.7	11.4
RIM	4.6	5.3	3.7
Total	71.7	74.2	68.4

Periodicals

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received from the Periodical Publishers' Association on proposed changes in the charging system for postage of periodicals. [72084]

Stephen Timms: The Periodical Publisher's Association wrote to me on 19 July. Changes to the charging system for postage are a commercial matter for Consignia within the regulatory framework laid down in the Postal Services Act 2001. I understand that the Association is in discussion with the company on this issue.

Consignia undertook the consultation with customers and trade associations about the introduction of a new pricing system which takes into account the size of an item and I understand that the company is now assessing the responses to the consultation. If the company does wish to proceed, it will make a submission to the Postal Services Commission and the postal consumer body, Postwatch. The Commission will have to approve any proposals and will follow their own consultation process before agreeing to any major changes in the way mail is priced.

National Transmission System

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has made to Ofgem with regards to the proposed changes to the auction system for capacity to the National Transmission System at St Fergus. [72558]

Mr. Wilson: The arrangements for allocating entry capacity into the National Transmission System are specified in Transco's Network Code. The Network Code is the property of Transco and the shippers for which Transco conveys gas; it is regulated by Ofgem, which adjudicates on proposed amendments to the Code. My Department has regular contacts with Transco, shippers and Ofgem, to discuss Network Code matters of common interest. The details of such discussions are commercially confidential.

Digital Services

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) conditions and (b) restrictions will be placed on the BBC and Crown Castle in their promotion of digital television via marketing strategies. [69075]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for the ITC and the BBC's Board of Governors and is subject also to the provisions of UK and EU competition policy.

Benefit Payments

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research has been compiled on the cost savings relating to the changeover of benefit payments from payment book to ACT; with what results; and if she will make a statement. [70192]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 22 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 23 July 2002, Official Report, column 806W by the Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions.

Corruption

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date the ECGD obtained the judgment by Judge Cullinan in Lesotho in the bribery case against Masupha Sole; and how they obtained it. [72580]

Ms Hewitt: ECGD received a copy of the Judgement on 3 July 2002. This was obtained by the British High Commission in Maseru from the Secretary to Justice Cullinan

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many allegations of corruption the ECGD has received, and how many of these allegations it has referred to, the (a) Serious Fraud Office, (b) National Criminal Intelligence Service and (c) Scotland Yard in the last three years. [72587]

Ms Hewitt: In the last three years ECGD has received three allegations of corruption, and one has been referred to the SFO. None has been referred to NCIS or Scotland Yard.

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the ECGD has investigated bribery allegations in the deal it between BAe Systems and the Government of Qatar; and whether it has referred this case to the relevant external investigatory body. [72586]

Ms Hewitt: No allegations have been received by ECGD, although the Department is aware of allegations in the press. Matters connected with these assertions were investigated by the Jersey authorities and ECGD responded to enquiries made of it by the Jersey authorities.

Bujagali Dam (Uganda)

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the ECGD received an application from the company, NOR-ICIL in relation to the Bujagali Dam in Uganda; and if she will make a statement. [72581]

Ms Hewitt: ECGD has no record of any application for cover in respect of the Bujagali Dam and has issued no guarantees in respect of the project.

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what grounds the application to the ECGD for support for the Bujagali Dam in Uganda was refused. [72584]

Ms Hewitt: ECGD has no record of any application for cover in respect of the Bujagali Dam and has issued no guarantees in respect of the project.

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what corruption allegations the ECGD were informed of at the time of the application for support for the Bujagali Dam in Uganda; and whether such allegations involved British companies. [72585]

Ms Hewitt: ECGD has no record of any applications for cover in respect of the Bujagali Dam and has issued no guarantees in respect of the project.

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which company was the lead contractor on the application made to the ECGD for the Bujagali Dam in Uganda. [72583]

Ms Hewitt: ECGD has no record of any application for cover in respect of the Bujagali Dam and has issued no guarantees in respect of the project.

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether NOR-ICIL was named as a contractor on an application she received with regard to the Bujagali Dam in Uganda. [72582]

Ms Hewitt: ECGD has no record of any application for cover in respect of the Bujagali Dam and has issued no guarantees in respect of the project.

Anglo-Irish Ministerial Meetings

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when and where Ministers in her Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 June 2000; which Ministers were involved in each meeting; which Irish Government Departments were involved in each meeting; and which Ministers and officials from the Irish Government attended each meeting. [72698]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 20 June, Official Report, column 533W.

Ministerial Meetings

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many formal and official inter-ministerial meetings her Department has held with the Scottish Executive since May 1999, broken down by (a) Scottish Executive department, (b) subject and (c) date. [72713]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 24 July 2002]: There are regular and frequent meetings between my Department and the Scottish Executive, at both Ministerial and official levels, on policy issues which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Your Guide Pilot

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Government's evaluation of the Your Guide pilot will be completed; and if she will make a statement. [73234]

Stephen Timms: The final evaluation was completed on time at the end of June and was published on 23 July.

Petrol Retailers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many petrol retailers (a) are in operation and (b) have been closed and sealed since 1990, broken down by (i) oil company sites, (ii) main retailer sites, (iii) supermarket sites, (iv) smaller retailer sites and (v) other unbranded sites; and if she will make a statement. [72506]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 24 July 2002]: There were 12,201 petrol retailers operating at the end of last year (2001) compared with 19,465 sites in 1990.

Total sites closed since 1990 is 7,264, of which 5,085 are oil company sites, while 1,452 are from the main retailers.

No supermarket sites have closed, as they have been steadily increasing in numbers. We do not have a breakdown between categories smaller retailer and unbranded sites, however the total for this category is 727.

The data used were from the Institute of petroleum (IP) annual "UK Retail Marketing Survey" (last published in March of this year).

University Business Start-Ups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information she collated on the performance of the companies that were spun out of universities in 1999–2000. [73130]

Ms Hewitt: The first survey of Higher Education Business Interaction carried out in 2001 showed that 199 companies were spun out from universities in the academic year 1999–2000, compared to an average of 70 each year for the previous 5 years. In 1999–2000, UK universities identified one spinout for every £8.6 million of research expenditure, compared with one spinout for every £13.9 million in Canadian Universities in 1999, and one spinout for every £53.1 million in the US. The Survey also covered employment, turnover and equity value of spinouts established by universities but responses were incomplete and raised concerns about the burden associated with collecting this data. A modified second survey currently underway seeks a build on data previously collected to provide a more systematic overview of exploitation performance across the higher education sector.

Science and Discovery Centres

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with other Departments about the funding of science and discovery centres; and if she will make a statement. [72322]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 24 July 2002]: My noble Friend the Minister for the Arts at DCMS called a meeting to discuss science and discovery centres on 18 July 2002 with my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for Science and Innovation and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for Early Years and School Standards at DfES.

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to assist the funding of science and discovery centres; and if she will make a statement. [72323]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The Government has currently no plans to assist the funding of science and discovery centres. The Millennium Commission, together with the Wellcome Trust and the Wolfson Foundation, on Monday launched a £33 million fund for science centres and museums to allow them to renew or replace high quality science, education and technology exhibitions.

Biotechnology Research Projects

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what biotechnology research projects in (a) agriculture and (b) biomedics have been supported by her Department; and what level of public investment has gone into them in each of the last three years. [73239]

Ms Hewitt: DTI has not funded any biotechnology research projects in agriculture. The Department has provided £5 million of funding under the Applied Genomics LINK programme, which was launched in 2000, together with £10 million funding from the Research Councils, to assist the exploitation of genomics for healthcare applications. In addition, a substantial part of the £25 million Harnessing Genomics programme, launched by DTI in 2001, is providing support for industrially relevant R and D in key underpinning technology areas, including bioinformatics and nanobiotechnology.

Miners' Compensation

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the (a) minimum, (b) maximum and (c) average final compensation settlements made to date in respect of (i) VWF and (ii) COPD are. [72924]

Mr. Wilson: The figures are:

Full and Final Settlement	COPD	VWF
Minimum	£5	£200
Maximum	£372,115	£53,185
Average	£6,823	£7,687

Abandoned Vehicles

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cars were recorded as having been (a) abandoned and (b) scrapped in each of the last three years; and if she will make a statement. [73138]

Mr. Wilson: Local authorities are responsible for dealing with abandoned vehicles and DEFRA currently holds no central records of the number of vehicles abandoned each year. However, it estimates that some 350,000 were abandoned in the United Kingdom in 2000. Information on the number of abandoned vehicles removed by local authorities has been collected for the first time in DEFRA's 2000–01 Municipal Waste Management Survey which will be published in August.

In its three most recent annual reports, the Automotive Consortium on Recycling and Disposal (ACORD) has estimated that the following numbers of vehicles were scrapped: 1.8 million (1998), 1.8 million (1999), 2.0 million (2000).

Telephone Exchanges

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which telephone exchanges in Somerset have been converted to DSL; and what plans there are to convert the remaining exchanges. [73258]

Stephen Timms: At the end of May 2002, ADSL was available to 66 per cent. of households in the UK. A map showing geographical availability of broadband services by one or more of ADSL, cable, wireless and satellite can be found in the UK Online Annual Report [http://www.e-envoy.gov.uk/ukonline/champions/anrep_menu.htm].

We are working with the Broadband Stakeholder Group to help industry increase availability and take-up of broadband throughout the country. As part of this strategy, we have provided £30 million to the RDAs and DAs to help develop innovative solutions for extending networks into areas considered commercially unattractive.

We are acting to improve the business case for service providers in rural areas by examining how the public sector can most effectively procure its own broadband. On June 26, I announced my intention to establish a new Regional Broadband Unit. Its purpose will be to stimulate economic development and enhance the delivery of public services through extending broadband services at the regional and local level.

Telecommunications Masts

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many telecommunications masts in the United Kingdom there are; and what measures are taken by the Telecommunications Agency to ensure that these are mapped and recorded. [73368]

Stephen Timms: There are approximately 26,000 transmitter sites in the UK. The "Sitefinder" Mobile Phone Base Station Database at www.sitefinder.radio.gov.uk is a national database of mobile phone base stations and their emissions. The database is managed by the Radiocommunications Agency, an Executive Agency of the Department of Trade and Industry, on behalf of Government. The database provides information on all operational, externally sited, cellular radio transmitters in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The database is updated every three months from information provided by the cellular operators. It should be noted that only operational transmitters, i.e. those that are actually transmitting, are included on the database. Consequently, sites that are currently going through the planning process, are in the process of being built, or are yet to be switched on, will not be found on the database.

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will establish a nationwide audit of telecommunications masts. [73371]

Stephen Timms: Last year the Rdiocommunications Agency completed an audit across the UK of 100 masts on school grounds. This year they are carrying out a further audit of masts near to schools and hospitals. Details of the audit and results for last year and those completed so far this year are available on the Agency's website at www.sitefinder.radio.gov.uk. The audit results indicate in every case levels of radiation far below those specified in the guidelines of the International Commission on Non-Ionizing Radiation Protection

Compulsory Purchase Orders

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many compulsory purchase orders each regional development agency is helping to promote; what the total gap funding is each has awarded; and what the total investment of each has been in direct development in each year since their formation. [73409]

Alan Johnson: Most RDAs do not promote their own Compulsory Purchase Orders (CPOs), and therefore there is no associated gap funding or investment, although this may change in the future. The exceptions are South of England Development Agency (SEEDA), London Development Agency (LDA) and North West Development Agency (NWDA).

For SEEDA, the number of CPOs is one (with no gap funding nor any investment in development yet).

For LDA, there are no CPOs yet (with no gap funding nor any investment in development), but two CPOs are being considered.

For NWDA, three CPOs have been made (total gap funding of £2.4 million and a total investment of £2.7 million over the years 1999 to 2002) and a further two CPOs are being considered.

Privatised Utilities

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received from (a) the DTLR, (b) the SRA, (c) the Office of the Rail Regulator and (d) train operating companies with regard to the Government's policy towards the independence of the economic regulators of the privatised utilities. [62304]

Mr. Wilson: None.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of employers breaking the minimum wage regulations were reported in the last two years. [73361]

Alan Johnson: The number of employers found not to be paying the minimum wage in the last two years is as follows:

Year
2001–02	1,937

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans she has to increase the level of penalties for employers who fail to comply with the minimum wage legislation; [73366]

(2) what the maximum penalty is that can be imposed on employers who fail to comply with the minimum wage legislation; [73362]

(3) what the average penalty imposed on employees was who failed to comply with the minimum wage legislation in the last 12 months; [73363]

(4) how many employers have been reported for forcing their employees to work unpaid hours beyond their contracts in the last 12 months; and what the maximum penalties are that can be imposed in such cases. [73364]

Alan Johnson: The Inland Revenue enforces the national minimum wage on behalf of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Under the National Minimum Wage Act 1998, Inland Revenue compliance officers can issue penalty notices where businesses have failed to comply with an enforcement notice in respect of the minimum wage. Penalty notices impose a financial penalty equal to twice the hourly amount of the main minimum wage rate per worker, for each day of non-payment of the minimum wage from the date that the enforcement notice was issued. Each time the main minimum wage rate is increased, the level of penalties is therefore also increased. There is no upper limit on the penalty that can be imposed on an employer.

In the year ended 31 March 2002, sixty-five Penalty Notices were issued for a total of £95,804, giving an average penalty of £1,973.90. No separate information is held on the number of minimum wage cases where employees were found to be working beyond their contracted hours.

Part-Time Workers Directive

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the (a) one off administration costs and (b) ongoing recurring costs to May 2002 for the Part-Time Workers Directive were; and if she will make a statement. [73135]

Alan Johnson: The Part-time Workers (Prevention of Less Favourable Treatment) Regulations 2000 came into force on 1 July 2000, transposing the Part-time Work Directive into British law. Under the Regulatory Impact Assessment for the Regulations which the Government published at the time, total recurring costs were estimated to be £27.4 million per year. The one off administration costs were estimated to be negligible.

Employment Law

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to review the resources available for employment rights enforcement. [73367]

Alan Johnson: In October 2001, along with the Lord Chancellor, the Secretary of State announced a joint Taskforce to make recommendations on how the Employment Tribunal system can be made more efficient and cost effective. Their terms of reference include advising on the need for new investment to meet any revised service objectives and performance measures. The Taskforce have just delivered their report, which the Secretary of State is publishing today. We are now considering their recommendations, including the resource implications.

In addition, on 11 July 2002 the Secretary of State also announced a review of the operation of the Employment Relations Act 1999. This will look at the operation of the law as regards the institutions which enforce employment rights in this area.

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to increase penalties for breaches of employment law. [73365]

Alan Johnson: The Employment Act 2002 provides that employment tribunals must normally vary any award made under the main jurisdictions where there is a failure on the part of either party to complete a statutory dispute resolution procedure before a tribunal application is made. The Act also provides that penalties will be increased under the main jurisdictions if an employee's written statement of employment particulars is absent or deficient. These provisions will be implemented in due course.

Limits on various payments and employment tribunal awards are varied each year in line with any changes in the Retail Prices Index, in accordance with the provisions of the Employment Relations Act 1999. In line with our previous commitments, on 11 July 2002 the Secretary of State announced a review of the operation of this Act

Sexual Harrassment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she takes to ensure that women at work have suitable avenues to report sexual harrassment. [72856]

Ms Hewitt: The Government take the issue of sexual harassment very seriously. In employment law it is well established that sexual harassment constitutes a form of detriment under the Sex Discrimination Act.

Reporting instances of sexual harassment can be channelled through managers, personnel officers or trade union representatives. Many employers also appoint sexual harassment counsellors who are specially trained to deal with complaints.

The Government have published leaflets for employers and employees on how to avoid, how to report, and how to deal with sexual harassment. Guidance for women and men on how to report and deal with instances of sexual harassment is also available from the Equal Opportunities Commission, and the Equal Opportunities Commission can help individuals bring a complaint.

Equal Pay

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are in place to ensure that women are paid the same as men when they are in the same job. [72854]

Ms Hewitt: The Equal Pay Act 1970 makes it unlawful for an employer to pay a woman less than a man for the same job, a job rated as equivalent or a job of equal value. The Act applies equally to men and women. A booklet about the Act is available from the Government.

The Equal Opportunities Commission's (EOC) Code of Practice on Equal Pay provides practical guidance and recommends good practice to employers. It is a statutory Code, and can be referred to in Tribunal evidence.

The EOC was given extra funding to develop an Equal Pay Toolkit, aimed at helping employers to carry out pay reviews. The kit was launched on the 4 of July.

We have made funding available to Trade Unions to train their representatives to negotiate on equal pay issues in the workplace.

The Employment Act (2002) provides a new power to introduce an Equal Pay Questionnaire into the Equal Pay Act. The questionnaire procedure will help women who think they may not be receiving equal pay to request key information from their employers before deciding whether to institute proceedings. We will be consulting interested parties on the design and content of the form later this year.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action can be taken against companies that do not enforce an equal pay policy. [72855]

Ms Hewitt: The Equal Pay Act 1970 imposes an obligation to pay men and women equally for the same work, work rated as equivalent and work of equal value. While employers are not legally required to have an equal pay policy, we encourage voluntary pay reviews through, for example, the Castle Awards and the Fair Pay Champions.

Individuals who feel they are suffering pay discrimination on the basis of their gender are entitled to take a case to an employment tribunal under the Equal Pay Act.

The Equal Opportunities Commission (EOC), which helps to enforce sex discrimination and equal pay legislation, has the power to conduct formal investigations, and to issue non-discrimination notices where, in the course of a formal investigation, it is satisfied that the Equal Pay Act is not being complied with. The EOC also has the power to provide financial or other assistance to applicants bringing a case under the Equal Pay Act and to seek preliminary findings as to whether there may have been an infringement of the Act, and apply for an injunction to restrain persistent discrimination.

Employee Regulations

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of (a) businesses and (b) employees would be excluded if those firms with up to 10 employees were exempted from regulation; and if she will make a statement. [73139]

Nigel Griffiths: Data are available for businesses with 0–9 employees at the start of 2000. The figures are for all types of regulations, including fire.

Contribution of micro sized (0–9 employees) businesses (per cent., 2000)

Businesses	Employees

Regulations are drawn up to address specific issues. There are already a number of regulations that exempt small companies. Such exclusions are looked at on a case by case basis, and not necessarily by size of company but also turnover and other measures.

Blanket exclusions can cause their own problems when companies exceed the threshold they are expected to comply with all regulations at once.

SMEs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many employees are employed in the UK in (a) small, (b) medium sized enterprises and (c) in total; and if she will make a statement. [73134]

Nigel Griffiths: The latest figures relate to the start of 2000 and include full-time and part-time employment.

Employment (thousands, start 2000)

Working Time Directive

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many breaches of the EC Working Time Directive have been recorded to date in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland. [72399]

Alan Johnson: We do not record "breaches", but we do collate figures relating to enquiries and complaints:

The ACAS helpline currently receives over 5,000 working time calls during a year

The Employment Tribunal Service Annual Report for 2001–02 showed that, during the period, the Employment Tribunal Service disposed of 1,632 cases that were specifically concerned with the working time entitlements (rest and paid annual leave). 169 (10 per cent.) were successful and 495 (30 per cent.) were ACAS conciliated settlements.

Since the introduction of the Working Time Regulations in 1998 (up to March this year), the Health and Safety Executive Working Time officers have dealt with 685 complaints and completed 469 investigations on the working time and night work limits. Local authority Environmental Health Departments have recorded one successful prosecution over the past two years

These figures relate specifically to GB (there are separate Regulations for Northern Ireland). There is no individual breakdown currently available for Scotland.

Machinery

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Standing Committee on the approximation of the laws of the member States relating to machinery is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66441]

Ms Hewitt: It is my understanding that the hon. Member is referring to the Standing Committee set up under Article 6.2 of Directive 98/37/EC on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to machinery. It is anticipated that the above Committee will meet later in the year, however, dates have not been set. The UK is represented by officials from the Department of Trade and Industry. They are supported by a technical expert from the Health and Safety Executive. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in, discussions at official and Ministerial level with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

ACMs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the mandate of the Committee for the Adaptation to Technical Progress of the Directive on the Removal of Technical Barriers to Trade in Pressure Vessels is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if she will list the items currently under its consideration; if she will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [55215]

Ms Hewitt: It is assumed that the question concerns the provisions of the Directive on the harmonisation of the laws of the Member States relating to simple pressure vessels 87/404/EEC. There is no provision for such a Committee in that directive.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on the implementation of projects promoting co-operation and commercial relations between the European Union and the industrialised countries of North America, the Far East and Australasia is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64919]

Ms Hewitt: The EU Committee on the implementation of projects promoting cooperation and commercial relations between the European Union and the industrialised countries of North America, the Far East and Australia is next due to meet on 24 July 2002. Relations with the European Union are the responsibility of the Parliament and Government of the United Kingdom, as Member State. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on common rules for imports of products from third countries is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64928]

Ms Hewitt: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 21 May 2002, Official Report, columns 232–33W.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on protection against dumped imports is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64926]

Ms Hewitt: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 22 May 2002, Official Report, column 389W.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on defence against obstacles to trade which effect the market of the Community or a non-member country is next due to meet, whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64918]

Ms Hewitt: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 21 May 2002, Official Report, column 230W.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on protection against subsidised imports is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64905]

Ms Hewitt: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 22 May 2002, Official Report, column 389W.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Textile Committee (conventional regime) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64917]

Ms Hewitt: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 22 May 2002, Official Report, column 388W.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Coordinating Group for the Community regime for the control of exports of dual-use goods is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64922]

Ms Hewitt: No date has yet been fixed for the next meeting of the Co-ordination Group for the Community Regime for the Control of Exports of Dual-Use Items and Technology.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Standing Committee on technical rules and standards, including rules relating to information society services is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [64827]

Ms Hewitt: The Committee on Standards and Technical Regulations is next due to meet on 30 October 2002. The UK is normally represented by one or two officials from the Department of Trade and Industry. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for management of generalised preferences is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64920]

Ms Hewitt: The Committee last met on 3 June 2002. There are currently no plans for it to meet in the near future. The UK is normally represented by officials from the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI). As the EU's Generalised System of Preferences Scheme is an international trade issue, the DTI delegates at this committee represent all of the UK. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the harmonisation of credit insurance provisions for transactions with medium- and long-term cover is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64921]

Ms Hewitt: The Committee for the harmonisation of the main provisions concerning export credit insurance for transactions with medium and long-term cover is a comitology committee covering the work of the European Council Working Group on Export Credits.

Comitology procedures only exist for a very limited number of issues, the committee meets on an ad hoc basis and the committee has had no reason to meet in the past twelve months. We are unable to anticipate if or when it might be required to meet in future.

If a meeting of the committee was convened, the UK would be represented by our delegation to the Council Working Group comprising officials from the Export Credits Guarantee Department. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on standardisation in the field of information technology is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64902]

Ms Hewitt: The Advisory Committee on Standardisation in the field of Information Technology (SOGITS) has not met for over two years and there are no issues under consideration at present. Discussions are taking place to reactivate this Committee. The UK is normally represented by an official from the Department of Trade and Industry. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Standing Committee for the approximation of the laws of the Member States concerning pressure equipment is next due to meet; what the UK representation on it is; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [64825]

Ms Hewitt: Provision for such a Standing Committee is contained in Article 7.2 of the Pressure Equipment Directive 97/23/EC but this has not yet been put into effect and so the Committee has never met.

An informal "Working Group on Pressure" has been convened, however, under the auspices of Article 17 of the Directive.

Representation from the United Kingdom is led by officials from the Department of Trade and Industry. They are supported by a technical expert from the Health and Safety Executive. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the harmonisation of national legislation relating to recreational craft is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64882]

Ms Hewitt: It is my understanding that the hon Member is referring to the Standing Committee set up under Article 6 of the Directive 94/25 on the approximation of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of Member States relating to recreational craft. The next meeting is scheduled for December 2002. The UK is represented by two officials from the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI).

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on implementation of the multiannual programme for enterprise and entrepreneurship, in particular for small and medium-sized enterprises is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64914]

Ms Hewitt: The next Enterprise Programme Management Committee (EPMC) is due to take place during September/October 2002.

The Multiannual programme for enterprise and entrepreneurship is not a devolved activity.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee for implementation of the Community market-access strategy is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64961]

Ms Hewitt: The Advisory Committee for the Implementation of the Community Market-access Strategy last met on 6 June 2002. Its next meeting is likely to be in the first half of 2003. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on common rules for exports of products is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64927]

Ms Hewitt: The EU Advisory Committee on Common Rules for Exports of Products last met on 8 May 2001. No date has been set for its next meeting and I believe it is unlikely to do so again in the foreseeable future. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for protection against the effects of the extra-territorial application of legislation adopted by a third country, and actions based thereon or resulting therefrom (anti-boycott) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive have been members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64923]

Ms Hewitt: It was intended that a Committee for Protection Against the Effects of the Extraterritorial Application of Legislation Adopted by a Third Country and Actions Based Thereon or Resulting therefrom (anti-boycott) would be established in Brussels to assist EU companies affected by extraterritorial jurisdiction by third countries, and in particular those affected by the extraterritorial aspects of the US trade sanctions against Cuba, Iran and Libya.

Thus far, the Committee has not been convened. UK companies are obliged to inform HMG and the European Commission of any extraterritorial action taken against them, but whilst it is clear who would be responsible for representing the UK at any meeting of the Committee, in these times of improved electronic communication, it has not been necessary in practice for it to meet.

In addition, as part of the 1997 Understanding between the EU and the US, the US undertook to exempt European individuals and companies from the extraterritorial aspects of US legislation drastically reducing the number of cases occurring, thus further reducing the need for the Committee to meet.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at officials and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touched on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on restrictive practices and dominant positions is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [67752]

Ms Hewitt: The Advisory Committee on Restrictive Practices and Dominant Positions met on 15 July. The UK is normally represented by officials from the Office of Fair Trading, and sometimes the DTI. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on restrictive practices and dominant positions in the transport industry is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [67753]

Ms Hewitt: The Advisory Committee on Restrictive Practices and Dominant Positions in the transport industry meets only when there are European Commission decisions or legislative proposals to discuss. No meetings are currently planned. The UK is normally represented by officials from the Office of Fair Trading, the DTI and the DTLR. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on concentrations between undertakings is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [67749]

Ms Hewitt: The Advisory Committee on Restrictive Practices and Dominant Positions met on the 15 July. The UK is normally represented by officials from the Office of fair Trading and sometimes the DTI. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on General Authorisations and Individual Licences in the Field of Telecommunications Services is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68553]

Ms Hewitt: No meetings are currently scheduled for the EU Committee on General Authorisations and Individual Licences in the Field of Telecommunications Services.

The UK is normally represented at the Licensing Committee by two officials, one each from Oftel and the Radio Agency. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on the Implementation of Open Network Provision is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68554]

Ms Hewitt: No meetings are currently scheduled for the EU Committee on the implementation of Open Network Provision.

The UK is normally represented on the ONP Committee by three officials, one from DTI and two from Oftel. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the Implementation of the Multiannual Community Action Plan on Promoting the Safe Use of the Internet is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68573]

Ms Hewitt: The Internet Action Plan Programme Committee is next due to meet on 28 October 2002. An official from the Department of Trade and Industry normally attends, and represents all of the UK. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the Implementation of the Multiannual Community Programme to Stimulate the Development and Use of European Digital Content on the Global Networks and to Promote Linquistic Diversity in the Information Society (e-Content) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68569]

Ms Hewitt: The Programme Management Committee met on 22 March 2002, and is next due to meet on 11 September 2002. The UK is normally represented by one official from the Department of Trade and Industry. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the Approximation of the Laws of the Member States Relating to Noise Emission in the Environment by Equipment for Use Outdoors is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68567]

Ms Hewitt: The Noise Committee met on 16 November 2001, and is next due to meet on 6 December 2002. The UK is normally represented by two officials from the Department of Trade and Industry. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on Telecommunications Procurement is next due to meet;

whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68551]

Ms Hewitt: No meetings of the Advisory Committee on Telecommunications Procurement are currently planned. Under the Cabinet Office and Scottish Executive Concordat on Co-ordination of European Union Policy Issues, UK representation falls to the relevant UK Department (in this instance the Office of Government Commerce). The Concordat requires that the Scottish Executive should be fully consulted prior to any meeting of the Committee and provides that it may send observers or, with the prior agreement of the relevant UK Department, represent the UK at meetings. To date, UK representation at meetings of this particular committee has been by officials of the Office of Government Commerce.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on Security of Information Systems is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68555]

Ms Hewitt: The Advisory Committee on Security of Information Systems (SOG-IS) has not met for over three years and there are no issues under consideration at present. The UK is normally represented by an official from the Department of Trade and Industry.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department of the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on fees, implementation rules and the procedure of the boards of appeal of the Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (trademarks and design) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [70904]

Ms Hewitt: The next meeting, which is expected to be the last in the current round aimed at agreeing detailed rules for the Community Registered Design, is due to be held on 19 September. The only officials normally attending are those who are expert on the specific issues, who come from the Patent Office.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touches on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee for co-ordination in the internal market field is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [71823]

Ms Hewitt: The Advisory Committee for Co-ordination in the Internal Market Field has several formations. The next meeting of the "general" formation is planned for 3 December, although there are meetings of the Heads of Delegations formation planned for 8 October, "Better Regulation" formation planned for 24 July and 9 October and a Heads of Co-ordination Centres formation planned for 5 November.

The DTI co-ordinates single market policy and represents the UK at meetings of this committee, except in the case of the "Better Regulation" formation where Cabinet Office (Regulatory Impact Unit) officials also attend.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee of experts on the transit of natural gas through grids is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [71824]

Ms Hewitt: There is no date for the next meeting of the Committee, perhaps because it is due to be abolished under the Commission's current proposals for liberalising the European gas market.

The Committee is and always has been made up purely of experts from the industry, so no representatives of the Scottish Executive have ever sat on it. Lattice Group plc represents the UK, including Scotland, on the Committee.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Advisory Committee on the development and reconversion of regions is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [73161]

Ms Hewitt: The next meeting of this Committee is scheduled for 25 September. My Department, which has co-ordinating responsibility for Structural Funds in the UK, sends one representative. Other departments with responsibility for the European Regional Development Fund, and the Devolved Administrations, are also invited. A representative of the Scottish Executive normally attends as an observer. On average the UK representation is three officials.

For further information regarding the Committee I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 4 July 2002, Official Report, columns 467–68.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee of experts on the transit of electricity through grids is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [73152]

Ms Hewitt: There is no date for the next meeting of the Committee, perhaps because it is due to be abolished under the Commission's current proposals for liberalising the European electricity market.

National Grid Company plc represents the UK, including Scotland and Northern Ireland, on the Committee.

The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many new pieces of legislation originating in the European Union were implemented by her Department in each of the last three years; and if she will make a statement. [73136]

Ms Hewitt: My Department has implemented five EU directives so far this year. It implemented nine EU directives in 2001 and sixteen in 2000.

EU Directives

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the Government policy is towards the EU Hallmarking Directive; and if she will make a statement. [71867]

Mr. Wilson: The draft Directive proposing a single market in hallmarking precious metals is not the subject of current negotiations. Should they resume in future, the Government would wish to participate constructively to work for a fair outcome for business and consumers. The Department encourages key stakeholders to consider the implications of a possible Directive.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of the EU Hallmarking Directive on UK assay offices; and if she will make a statement. [71868]

Mr. Wilson: The draft Hallmarking Directive has not progressed in Europe for a number of years due to unresolved difference and it is unclear whether or when it may do so. In the event of further discussions or new proposals coming forward, impact on a wide range of interests will need to be assessed, including business and consumers and others such as assay offices.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through her Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64989]

Ms Hewitt: Five EU directives have been implemented by DTI so far in 2002:

Directives 97/64/EC, 98/44/EC, 1999/42/EC, 1999/93/EC, and 2001/77/EC.

The cost and saving information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the EU directives relating to her Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64939]

Ms Hewitt: The following EU directives relating to DTI have been amended or repealed so far in 2002.

Amended: Directive 76/768/EEC

Repealed: Directives 90/387/EEC, 91/396/EEC, 92/44/EEC, 92/264/EEC, 95/47/EC, 97/13/EC, 98/10/EC

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on the directives on names and labelling of textile products is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66440]

Ms Hewitt: No meeting of the EU Committee on Directives relating to Textile Names and Labelling is scheduled currently. When it does meet the UK is normally represented by one official from the Department of Trade and Industry. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in the sector of protective equipment and systems for use in explosive atmospheres is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66437]

Ms Hewitt: It is my understanding that the hon Member is referring to the Standing Committee set up under Article 6 of Council Directive 94/9/EC of 23 March 1994 on the approximation of the laws of the Member States concerning Equipment and Protective Systems Intended for Use in Potentially Explosive Atmospheres (the so-called ATEX Directive). The date of the next meeting of the Standing Committee is 11 December 2002.

Representation from the United Kingdom is led by officials from the Department of Trade and Industry, supported by a technical expert from the Health and Safety Executive to provide technical advice. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in the sector of pressure vessels is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66427]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) earlier today.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in the sector of electric materials used in an explosive atmosphere is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66438]

Ms Hewitt: It is my understanding that the hon. Member is referring to the committee responsible for adaptation to technical progress of the Directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in electrical equipment for use in explosive atmospheres set up under Article 6 of Directive 76/117/EEC on the approximation of the laws of the Member States concerning electrical equipment for use in potentially explosive atmospheres. The committee has not met for several years and is unlikely to meet again because Directive 76/117/EEC is being superseded by Directive 94/9/EC (the ATEX Directive) and will be repealed on 1 July 2003 when Directive 94/9/EC comes fully into force.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in the sector of construction plant and equipment is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66428]

Ms Hewitt: It is my understanding that the hon Member is referring to the Committee on the Adaptation to Technical Progress set up under Article 4 of Directive 79/113/EEC on the approximation of laws of the Member States relating to the determination of the noise emission of construction plant and equipment. Directive 79/113/EEC has been superseded by Directive 2000/14/EC and was repealed on 3 January 2002 when Directive 2000/14/EC came fully into force. Therefore, this Committee will not meet again. However, at previous meetings the UK was normally represented by two officials from the Department of Trade and Industry. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in the sector of lifting and mechanical handling appliances is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66439]

Ms Hewitt: Directive 84/528/EEC, on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to common provisions for lifting and mechanical handling appliances, was repealed on 1 July 1999 by the Lifts Directive 95/16/EC.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of directives on the removal of technical barriers to trade in the sector of cosmetics is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66425]

Ms Hewitt: The EU Technical Adaptation Committee on the safety of cosmetic products next met on 22 July. The UK is represented by two officials from the Department of Trade and Industry. The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of EU policy which touch on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive.

Consignia

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what redundancy package has been agreed with Consignia; and if she will make a statement. [72507]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Redundancy packages are an operational issue for the company in consultation with the unions.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how Consignia measures and calculates its quality of service targets; and if she will make a statement. [73231]

Ms Hewitt: Targets for scheduled services and standards are set in the licence issued by the Postal Services Commission (Postcomm) and agreed between Consignia and the Consumer Council for Postal Services (Postwatch). The system for measurement of performance against those targets is a matter for the company. However independent auditors appointed by Postwatch conduct ongoing audits of the figures to ensure that the reported results are calculated correctly and are an unbiased representation of the actual quality of service. As this is an operational matter for the company I have asked Consignia's Chief Executive to write direct to the hon Member.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what costs are associated with the (a) formation, (b) printing, (c) publishing and (d) distribution of Consignia's annual report and accounts; and if she will make a statement; [72508]

(2) how many modified sub-postmasters offices have closed since 1997, listing for each year the reasons why the office was closed; and if she will make a statement; [72830]

(3) if she will make a statement on the employment status of modified sub-postmasters/mistresses; [72831]

(4) how many modified subpostmasters' offices are run by (a) the self-employed and (b) employees of Consignia; and if she will make a statement. [72840]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 24 July 2002]: These are matters that fall within the day to day responsibility of Consignia and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what tender process was used to select companies involved in non-audit services provided to the Post Office in 2001–02; and if she will make a statement; [73235]

(2) which Post Office branches will have cash machines installed by March 2003 broken down by constituency; and if she will make a statement; [73233]

(3) if she will list the charitable donations made by Consignia since 1997; and if she will make a statement; [73298]

(4) how many cash machines are installed in Post Office branches; and if she will make a statement. [73232]

Stephen Timms: These are matters that fall within the day to day responsibility of Consignia and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon member.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what provision has been made by Consignia to compensate modified post offices for loss of income from ACT; and if she will make a statement. [72832]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The Government is committed to the future of the post office network. £480 million has already been invested in modernisation of the post office network. In addition, the Government as owner of the Consignia Group, has taken steps to strengthen the management of the company, including the appointment of David Mills as Chief Executive for Post Office Limited who has been charged with development of a strategic plan to include widening commercial opportunities for the network.

Banking will be a central part of post offices' strategy to move forward. Universal banking services, together with Post Office Limited's plans for an expansion of network banking—the provision of counter services for ordinary current accounts—should lead to a substantial increase in the range and volume of banking at post offices, tapping into a very much larger customer base than benefit recipients alone. This should benefit subpostmasters both directly and through increased footfall, providing a major income stream offsetting the loss over time of the benefit book related revenue.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many days were lost due to (a) sickness, (b) official industrial action and (c) unofficial industrial action in each of the last five years; broken down by grade, by (i) Consignia, (ii) Royal Mail and (iii) Post Office Counters; and if she will make a statement. [72491]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 23 July 2002]: These are matters that fall within the day to day responsibility of Consignia and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions she has had with (a) Postcomm and (b) Postwatch regarding the maintenance of the universal service obligation on the Post Office. [72802]

Stephen Timms: Ministers regularly have discussions with Postcomm and Postwatch on strategic postal issues.

The postal universal service obligation was laid down in the Postal Services Act 2000 and consists of a service provided at an affordable price determined by a public tariff uniform throughout the United Kingdom. It includes the delivery each working day to the home or premises of every individual in the United Kingdom and a collection each working day from access points, subject to the exceptions to this agreed with Postcomm.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions have taken place between the Government and Consignia to merge the services provided by "your guide" with the website www.ukonline.gov.uk; and if she will make a statement. [70518]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Post Office Limited discussed with Government a wide range of services which might potentially be offered via a Your Guide-type scheme, including the possibility of access to ukonline. My Department has worked closely with the Office of the eEnvoy on the options.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when her Department was informed of the decision to change the name of the Post Office to Consignia. [70883]

Stephen Timms: The Department was informed by the Post Office in November 2000 of the proposed name of the company that was to be designated as the Post Office company.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when her Department was informed of the proposal to charge to deliver early morning mail for small businesses receiving fewer than 20 letters per day. [70882]

Stephen Timms: The Department was informed about the level of the charge for Consignia's additional service a few days before Consignia announced that it would be running pilots of its new Tailored Delivery Service on 10 July. The service will now be trialled at £5, £10 and around £14 per week for the pilots but the Chairman of Consignia, Allan Leighton, has said that the final proposed price will be part of the evaluation of the pilots in consultation with the regulator, the Postal Services Commission, and the consumer body, Postwatch.

Sub-Post Office Closures

Ann McKechin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions she has had with Consignia with regard to the closure of sub-post offices in Scotland. [72023]

Stephen Timms: I have met recently with Consignia executives to discuss plans for the post office network which are likely to lead to some closures as a result of the forthcoming programme to restructure the urban post office network. Any closure would need to be preceded by discussion with the subpostmaster and local consultations. The Post Office has been tasked with avoiding preventable rural closures.

Rural Post Offices

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research was (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated in the last 12 months on the effect of the introduction of automated credit transfer on the future financial viability of rural post offices; and what plans she has to commission future research in this area. [70849]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 18 July 2002]: The Performance and Innovation Unit's report "Counter Revolution: Modernising the Post Office Network", showed that the future viability of the network was challenged by the introduction of automated credit transfer. In December 2000, PostComm advised my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on support for rural post offices. This advice was based on research which included consideration of the impact of automated credit transfer. No other research has been commissioned into the effects of this on rural post offices in the last twelve months.

As set out in the PIU report the effect on the network will depend on the Post Office's ability to generate replacement business. We are concentrating on supporting the Post Office's efforts to build up these new business opportunities, including universal banking services, so as to mitigate the effects of the move to automatic credit transfer. We will be monitoring the situation closely as the programme unfolds. We have no proposals for other research in this area.

Post Office Card Accounts

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the Government's target is for the number of Post Office card accounts to be operational in (a) 2003, (b) 2004, (c) 2005 and (d) 2006; what the estimated cost is to the Government of those accounts; and if she will make a statement. [72509]

Stephen Timms [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The Government does not have a target for card accounts at the Post Office, rather there is an operating assumption of 3 million card accounts at the end of the benefit and tax credit migration period in 2005, but there will be no cap and no eligibility criteria. Numbers will build up over the migration period from April 2003 but the scale of that build up will depend critically on individual consumer decisions which are difficult to predict with any certainty. The Government has agreed contractual terms with the Post Office for the provision of the card account, the details of which are commercially confidential to the parties.

Solar Power

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the payback period is on available photovoltaic and other domestic solar power installations; what contribution the Government's major photovoltaics demonstration programme makes to reducing the payback period; what the comparative payback period is for solar energy technology; and what packages of financial support are available to support and promote the use of solar energy. [73192]

Mr. Wilson: The typical payback period for photovoltaic installations is 50–100 years. The major photovoltaics demonstration programme effectively halves this payback period for the purchaser by offering 50 per cent. grants on this technology. Our rationale for supporting photovoltaics is that it is a technology at a relatively early stage of development, but with significant potential for further cost reduction and for meeting our electricity needs in the future.

Solar water heating is a proven and commercial technology with a payback period of 15–20 years. No financial support is currently available for this technology through central government, although such support is currently being considered under the £10 million Community and Household renewables scheme. Support may, however, be available through local authorities and energy suppliers.

Consumer Credit

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the review of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 will be completed; what the terms of reference of that review are; and if she will make a statement. [73011]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Last July I published a consultation document Tackling loan sharks—and more! which set out proposals for the first major review of our consumer credit laws in almost 30 years. The aim of the review is to create a modern regulatory framework that protects consumers against loan sharks and other unfair lending practices, while enabling business to operate competitively in a modern credit market.

The priority areas for review are:-

Changing the financial limit for credit agreements covered by the Act and reviewing the categories of exemption

Amending the rules on early settlement of loans

Enabling consumers to conclude credit agreements on-line

Changing the licensing regime to target enforcement on keeping the loan sharks out of the market

Making the extortionate credit provisions more effective

Simplifying the advertising regulations, including the regulations on Annual Percentage Rates (APR's), and

Simplifying the rules on multiple agreements

In March I consulted on the first of the substantive issues—increasing/removing the financial limit. We are now considering the responses to that consultation. Further consultations on the remaining priority issues will follow during the remainder of 2002 and the early part of 2003.

Vehicle Fuel Consumption

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment her Department has made of the effectiveness of the intelligent motor generator technology developed by Ricardo in reducing fuel consumption in road vehicles. [72626]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 24 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 23 July 2002, Official Report, column 964W, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Transport. The intelligent motor generator technology developed by Ricardo and other proposals from various other suppliers are currently being appraised by the DTI and DfT under the New Vehicle Technology Fund. As such an assessment of its likely benefits (to the environment) are not yet available.

Fuel Suppliers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent action she has taken with the competition authorities to ensure that a free and open market between fuel suppliers operates within the UK petrol retail industry; and if she will make a statement. [73236]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Under UK competition legislation the Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for monitoring markets and investigating allegations of anti-competitive behaviour.

The Director General has investigated the petrol retail industry a number of times in recent years and has found it to be competitive. He has said that he will continue to monitor the market closely.

Electricity Generation (Mablethorpe)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessments she is making of the electricity generation programme now in place at Mablethorpe, Lincolnshire; how long she expects such evaluation to take place; and what plans she has to encourage further air-powered generation. [72950]

Mr. Wilson: The department does not evaluate the performance of individual wind farms.

Accreditation of wind farms and other renewable energy generating stations for the Renewables Obligation is given by Ofgem.

Wind energy, along with other forms of renewable energy, stands to benefit substantially from the introduction of the Renewables Obligation from 1 April this year. This places an obligation on electricity suppliers to supply a specified proportion of their electricity from renewable sources. The level of the Obligation is set to rise each year reaching a target of 10 per cent. by 2010, by which time its value could be up to £1 billion per year. The Obligation has been set up for a 25 year period (2002–27), providing the right climate for expansion of wind energy and renewable energy generally.

Wind energy, along with other renewables, also benefits from exemption from the Climate Change Levy.

The Government has assigned £74 million over the next three year for capital grants for offshore wind energy projects, where initial capital costs are greater, and the technology is less well established, than is the case for onshore projects.

We are encouraging a positive approach to new renewable energy proposals, including new windfarm proposals, through regional renewable energy plans and targets.

Fuel Reduction Technology

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her Department's policy is on providing collaboration funding for development of fuel reduction technology with British companies; and whether it is the policy of her Department to seek tenders from other European companies before awarding such funding. [72318]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 23 July 2002]: I refer the hon Member to the answer given to him on the 23 July 2002, Official Report, column 964W, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Transport.

National Transmission Service

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the average entry charges into the National Transmission Service were from each of the major UK gas terminals over the last year. [72557]

Mr. Wilson: The information for 3 major terminals is as follows:

p/therm	Winter 2001–02	Summer 2002	Gas Year 2001–02
Bacton	0.03	0.02	0.02
St Fergus	1.19	1.30	1.25
Teesside	0.34	0.19	0.26

Source:
Transco
Notes:
(i) Volume-weighted averages of prices achieved in Transco's primary auctions for entry capacity. (ii) Winter is the period from October–March (inclusive). Summer is the period from April–September (inclusive). The Gas Year runs from 1 October to 30 September.

Transco

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what statutory obligations apply to Transco. [72560]

Mr. Wilson: Transco is subject to various obligations under a range of legislation. Its main obligations of a sectoral economic nature are imposed under the Gas Act 1986 (as amended). These include obligations under section 9 of that Act: to develop and maintain an efficient and economical pipe-line system for the conveyance of gas; to comply (so far as it is economical to do so) with any reasonable request to connect premises to its system and convey gas to such premises or to connect a pipe-line system operated by another authorised transporter to its system; to facilitate competition in the supply of gas; and to avoid any undue preference or discrimination in the connection of premises or another pipe-line system to its system or in the terms on which it undertakes the conveyance of gas by means of its system.

Renewable Energy

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations her Department has received regarding the price imbalance exposure of (a) CHP and (b) renewable energy generators. [71582]

Mr. Wilson: On 4 April 2002 the Government Response to the Consultation on NETA and Smaller Generators of 1 November 2001 was published (http://www.dti.gov.uk/energy/domestic_markets/electricity_trading/neta_resp.pdf).
Chapter 2 of the Response summarised the representations that were received, including from CHP and renewable generators or their industry associations, on a variety of issues. One of the issues in question was the risk of exposure to NETA's imbalance prices.

The DTI has also held a number of meetings with interested companies and their representative organisations. Copies of the responses to the DTI Consultation on NETA and Smaller Generators are available for viewing in the DTI library.

Wind Farms

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make it her policy to take into account the cumulative effect of large numbers of wind farms in areas of outstanding natural beauty when considering planning applications. [70247]

Mr. Wilson: Planning policy guidance covering Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONBs) already exists to protect such areas, and the Government has made it clear that AONBs should share the protection given to National Parks in relation to landscape and scenic beauty. PPG7 (for England) was accordingly amended in June 2000 so that for major projects in AONBs, consideration of planning applications should normally include an assessment of the need for the development, in terms of national considerations, and the impact of permitting it or refusing it on the local economy; the cost of and scope for developing elsewhere outside the area or meeting the need for it in some other way; and any detrimental effect on the environment and the landscape, and the extent to which that should be moderated.

Energy Industry

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by what proportion UK electricity generating capacity exceeds average peak demand in 2002. [71526]

Mr. Wilson: A UK-wide estimate of the plant margin (i.e., the proportion by which installed generation capacity exceeds peak demand) in 2002 is not currently available.

However, according to table A2.3 in Appendix 2 of "The Development of British Electricity Trading and Transmission Arrangements" (http://www.ofgem.gov.uk/docs2001/74 BETTA.pdf), which was published by OFGEM during December 2001, it was estimated that the plant margin in Great Britain was 25 per cent. in 2001–02. This was forecast to remain constant at 25 per cent. in 2003–04.

Carbon Emissions

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what she estimates the carbon emissions from coal-fired power plants underwritten by the Export Credit Guarantees Department over the past five years will be over the 10 year operating period; and what she estimates the projected carbon emission savings in the United Kingdom over the same 10 years will be. [72298]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 23 July 2002]: For coal-fired power plants underwritten by ECGD since 1997 it is estimated that upon completion total annual carbon emissions be of the order of 11.1 million tonnes.

The Government published the UK Climate Change Programme in November 2000 outlining a range of additional policies and measures that it is estimated could by 2010 reduce UK carbon emissions by 17.75 million tonnes below our projected baseline. The baseline reflects trends in energy use and the changing fuel mix in the electricity supply industry. It also includes the emission reductions expected from some policies that were introduced before the Programme was published, such as the climate change levy, the fuel duty escalator to 1999, and the 10 per cent. renewables target.

The carbon emissions from power plants are calculated using the following assumptions:

Fuel Type	ECGD Estimated Capacity (MW)	CO_2 (Tonnes per year)	Carbon (Tonnes per year)
Coal	11,260	40.6 million	11.1 million

It has been assumed the plants operate for 60 per cent. of the time (5256 hours per year). CO_2 emissions are calculated using the following conversion factors—Coal: 0.687 tonnes of CO_2 per MW per hour, Oil 0.417, Gas: 0.309. These are taken from The Greenhouse Gas Protocol website (www.ghgprotocol.org) and are the 1999 average values for power plants in "Economies In Transition". These are the markets where ECGD most commonly provide guarantees.

Carbon emissions are calculated by assuming that carbon makes up 27.3 per cent. of the atomic mass of CO_2.

Nickel-Cadmium Batteries

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the quantity of cadmium recovered from nickel-cadmium batteries stored in the UK; and if she will make a statement about the proposed disposal or reuse of this material. [73647]

Mr. Wilson: Waste nickel-cadmium batteries arising in the UK are primarily recycled in France.

Estimates suggest that this recycling led to the recovery of 21.4 tonnes of cadmium in 1999 and 19.7 tonnes in 2000. The recovered cadmium is suitable for reuse including the manufacture of new nickel-cadmium batteries.

Waste Electronic and Electrical Equipment

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if it is the Government's intention that manufacturer and retailer responsibility for waste electronic and electrical equipment under the WEE Directive will begin at the central collection point. [73646]

Mr. Wilson: The Directive is still in draft form and is undergoing the conciliation process.

Under the Common Position text, retailers are obliged to take back items of waste electrical and electronic equipment (WEEE) from private households when supplying similar replacements. This can be fulfilled in-store, upon delivery of the new item or through a third party arrangement as long as returns are not made more difficult for the consumer.

Producers are responsible for financing costs associated with WEEE at least from deposit at a central collection point. Member States have an option to place costs on producers before this. The Government has not yet decided whether this option will be used in the UK and will consult widely on the Directive on a variety of potential implementation approaches, once a final text is available.

Nuclear Industry

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with the Scottish Executive regarding the licensing of nuclear power stations. [71550]

Mr. Wilson: I have had no such discussions.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what opinion polls her Department has initiated regarding nuclear energy since 1997; and if she will place copies of the results of such polls in the Library. [71548]

Mr. Wilson: No such polls have been conducted. The current energy policy consultation is seeking views on the role that nuclear power might play in a delivering a future energy policy and we hope that all those with an interest will make their views known.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list her Department's measures to accelerate new investment in nuclear energy. [71523]

Mr. Wilson: There are no specific measures to accelerate investment in new nuclear capacity. The PIU energy review report recommended that there are good reasons, both security of supply and low carbon, for the Government to take a positive stance on keeping the nuclear option open. We are currently consulting on this and other PIU recommendations and the results will form the basis of a White Paper to be published around the turn of the year.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has held with (a) BE and (b) BNFL officials regarding the exemption of the nuclear industry from the Climate Change Levy. [71509]

Mr. Wilson: Representations have been made by BE and BNFL about the exemption of nuclear generation from the climate change levy. This is a taxation matter for the Treasury.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she has taken to decrease the risks associated with new nuclear stations. [71513]

Mr. Wilson: The financial risk involved in building new nuclear stations would be primarily a matter for the potential investor.

The Government is concerned to ensure that the inherent risks involved in electricity generation, whatever the means, are properly controlled. We expect the nuclear power industry to meet high safety and environmental standards.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when her Department last met (a) BE, (b) BNFL and (c) UKAE to discuss the nuclear industry. [71296]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, Ministers and officials meet BE, BNFL and UKAEA regularly to discuss a broad range of issues and there have been meetings with representatives from each of those companies within the last month.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations her Department has received regarding changes in carbon emissions after (a) 2020 and (b) the closing of all existing nuclear power stations; [71520]

(2) what representations her Department has received regarding the minimisation of local opposition to the development of nuclear energy; [71551]

(3) what representations she has received on the potential of nuclear energy as a low-carbon energy source; [71528]

(4) what representations she has received from non-Governmental organisations regarding the building of new nuclear power stations; [71547]

(5) what her Department's assessment is of the strategic security of (a) renewable and (b) nuclear energy supply; [71530]

(6) if she will make a statement on the building of new nuclear power stations; [71519]

(7) what representations her Department has received regarding the level of carbon tax at which new nuclear build becomes economic; [71511]

(8) what representations she has received regarding (a) the speed at which renewable energy sources can be developed and (b) whether new nuclear build will be needed; and if she will make a statement; [71521]

(9) what representations her Department has received regarding the (a) environmental and (b) discharge implications arising from (i) lifetime extension and (ii) new construction of nuclear power stations; [71514]

(10) what her assessment is of the environmental (a) benefits and (b) dangers of nuclear energy; [71518]

(11) what her assessment is of the case for new nuclear build in the future; [71510]

(12) what her Department's plan is for stimulating public debate on (a) nuclear-specific risks and (b) carbon abatement potential. [71531]

Mr. Wilson: These are all issues on which the Government is currently taking views in its consultation on energy policy and on which our position will be set out in a White Paper around the turn of the year. The White Paper will take account in particular of the report and recommendations of the recent PIU energy review, the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution report "Energy—the Changing Climate", other recent Parliamentary reports, existing Government commitments and the findings of the current energy policy consultation. The consultation is very wide-ranging and is engaging stakeholders as well as the public through a variety of innovative approaches and events. It includes consideration of the role of all generation sources including nuclear power in delivering future energy policy, and the actions that might be needed to maintain nuclear as energy option. In parallel and specifically relevant to nuclear, the Government has also been consulting on the management of radioactive waste and DTI has recently published a White Paper on managing the public sector civil nuclear legacy.

Nuclear Power currently provides about a quarter of UK's electricity supplies. Existing stations are expected to continue to contribute to the country's energy requirements and to helping limit carbon emissions provided they do so to the high safety and environmental standards currently observed. The Government is concerned to ensure that the inherent risks involved in electricity generation, whatever the means, are properly controlled.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of nuclear generating capacity within the United Kingdom. [65004]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 27 June 2002]: The current energy policy consultation is considering the future role of all generation sources, including nuclear power, in delivering a future energy policy, submission have been requested by 13 September and we intend to issue a White Paper around the turn of the year.

Nuclear Power currently provides about a quarter of UK's electricity supplies. Existing stations are expected to continue to contribute to the country's energy requirements and to helping limit carbon emissions provided they do so to the high safety and environmental standards currently observed.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the estimated total cost is of dealing with nuclear fuel waste. [66096]

Mr. Wilson: In the UK, the majority of spent fuel is owned by the operators of the UK's nuclear power stations—BNFL which owns the UK's Magnox stations and British Energy which owns the UK's Advanced Gas Cooled Reactors and one Pressurised Water Reactor. The cost of managing spent nuclear fuel will depend on the management option chosen by the owner of the fuel. BNFL and British Energy publish annual accounts that include information on their respective nuclear provisions. These include provisions for de-fuelling, reprocessing and the management of spent nuclear fuel.

BNFL (Fines)

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the fines British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. has had to pay in each year since 2000, arising from safety and environmental breaches at (a) Sellafield, (b) Chapelcross, (c) Springfields and (d) the magnox nuclear stations. [69448]

Mr. Wilson: BNFL Ltd. have incurred fines arising from safety and environmental breaches at the sites listed for the following years:

	2000	2001	2002
a. Sellafield	£44,000	£8,000	£15,000
b. Chapelcross	£5,000	Nil	Nil to date
c. Springfields	nil	Nil	Nil to date
d. Magnox nuclear stations (excluding Chapelcross)	£38,000	£100,000	Nil to date

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the (a) percentage stake and (b) real amounts of BNFL investments in the (i) AP1000, (ii) AP600, (iii) Pebble Bed Modular Reactor and (iv) Candu 6. [69446]

Mr. Wilson: AP1000 and AP600 are designs owned by BNFL's subsidiary Westinghouse Electric Company. BNFL currently has a stake of around 20 per cent. in the PBMR, but no interest in Candu 6.

Levels of investment are a commercial matter for the company.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the meetings held in the last two years between representatives of BNFL and its subsidiaries and members of the United States Congress. [69502]

Mr. Wilson: No. Details of individual meetings of BNFL employees or representatives are a matter for the company.

Nuclear Security

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations her Department has received regarding the ability of the Office for Civil Nuclear Security to vet nuclear industry personnel with access to sensitive nuclear material or information. [69451]

Mr. Wilson: The Department has received no recent representations concerning vetting undertaken by the Office for Civil Nuclear Security.

Sellafield

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations her Department has received regarding projected clean-up costs for the next 20 years at Sellafield after BNFL privatisation. [69504]

Mr. Wilson: The Department of Trade and Industry has not received any representations on this specific issue. However, it has recently published a White Paper "Managing the Nuclear Legacy: A Strategy for Action" which sets out plans to drive forward the clean up of the civil nuclear legacy safely, securely, cost effectively and in ways which protect the environment for current and future generations. The White Paper seeks views on a range of issues, including those related to clean up costs. Copies are available from the Libraries of the House.

Power Stations

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations her Department has received regarding the prospects for lifetime extensions of (a) AGR and (b) pressure water reactor stations. [71533]

Mr. Wilson: This is an operational matter for British Energy, subject to any regulatory requirements.

Nuclear Plant Decommissioning

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations her Department has received regarding the eventual decommissioning costs associated with proposed nuclear plants. [69449]

Mr. Wilson: None.

MOX Plutonium

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what security measures will be enforced to ensure the safe passage of the pending shipment of MOX plutonium via sea from Japan to the United Kingdom; and with whom this responsibility lies. [69134]

Mr. Wilson: The Office for Civil Nuclear Security (OCNS) regularly review the potential threats posed to MOX shipments. They are satisfied that the thorough precautions that have been taken to prevent the theft or sabotage of this shipment are adequate. For obvious reasons, the Government is not prepared to give details of the security arrangements in place.

Public Buildings

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will name the projects the departmental Design Champion has sponsored as part of the Better Public Buildings initiative; and if she will make a statement on the extent of her personal input in respect of each. [73644]

Mr. Wilson: I am currently identifying the projects to be put forward by the DTI as sponsored projects for the Better Public Buildings initiative. I have written separately to the Regional Development Agencies and the other DTI Agencies and NDPBs and expect to announce the first DTI sponsored projects in the autumn.

I welcome the agreement by my Ministerial colleagues that all the sponsored projects put forward by Government Departments will be Rethinking Construction Demonstration Projects. They will also act as trailblazers for the new Design Quality Indicator, which has been developed by CABE and the Construction Industry Council with DTI funding. This will help to ensure that the sponsored projects will be examples of best practice in public sector procurement, design and delivery.

Departmental Report

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry with reference to Target 2 on page 16 of the 2002 Departmental report, what plans she has to issue further competitiveness indicators in each of the next three years. [73132]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's Competitiveness Indicators are now available on the Department's website (http://217.154.27.195/competitiveness/index.htm), and are regularly updated with the latest data. The Department is planning to issue an update of the Competitiveness Indicators in Autumn 2002, and a full assessment in 2003, with a further update to follow during 2004.

Departmental Bodies

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs under the remit of her Department in (a) the core department, (b) non-departmental public bodies, (c) executive agencies and (d) independent statutory bodies, organisations and bodies financially sponsored by her Department and other such organisations, are located in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, excluding Greater London, (iii) Greater London, (iv) Wales, (v) Northern Ireland and (vi) overseas, broken down by (A) whole time equivalent jobs and (B) the percentage per individual department, body or organisation. [72741]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 24 July 2002]: It is not possible to provide all the information requested. Information in respect of the NDPBs for which my Department has responsibility is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The information requested for DTI headquarters and the Executive Agencies is shown on the table below. My Department does not have offices overseas.

Secondments

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to her answer of 21 June, Official Report, column 593W, how many people from organisations outside her Department were seconded to start work in her Department between 1 January 1999 and 31 December 2001. [72651]

Ms Hewitt: Centrally held records show that 133 inward secondments have started between 1 January 1999 and 31 December 2001.

Departmental Staff

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many staff were seconded to her Department in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–01 and (e) 2001–02 from (i) KPMG, (ii) KPMG Consulting, (iii) Deloitte and Touche, (iv) PWC, (v) PWC Consulting, (vi) Ernst and Young, (vii) EY Cap Gemini and (viii) Grant Thornton; what position each held; and if she will make a statement. [70552]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Since 2000–01 we have recorded centrally the DTI grade range and posts held by inward secondees. Before 2000–01 we recorded centrally only the DTI grade range and the Directorate to which each secondee was attached. All of this information relating to the businesses listed is given in the attached table.

All secondments into the Department are subject to contractual agreements, including provisions on avoidance of conflict of interest.

Business Ethics Training

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what staff grades within her Department are given business ethics training; [70528]

(2) what amount of business ethics training she has given to her staff, broken down by how many (a) staff have received the training and (b) training days; and if she will make a statement; [70526]

(3) what companies have given her Department business ethics training in the last five years; and how much this cost; [70525]

(4) what business ethics training is given to her staff; and if she will make a statement. [70527]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Business ethics and corporate governance are discussed periodically at Board level. The Department does not provide specific business ethics training to all staff, but ensures that all are aware of the Civil Service Code (which covers Service ethics more broadly).

DTI staff working on the regulatory framework for companies, professions and employment, and on DTI policy towards corporate social responsibility, are aware of the ethical issues in these sectors. In some areas, for example in relation to auditors, the DTI has a formal role in underpinning ethical requirements. Heads of Management Unit in these areas have devolved responsibility for specialised training. This is not centrally recorded.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the (a) dates, (b) location and (c) sources were of attributable (i) articles, interviews or contributions for the media, books or other journals and (ii) speeches or presentations made in the public domain, by departmental special advisers since March 2001; who in her Department authorised the activity; and on what date this activity was recorded with the departmental Head of Information. [72255]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's answer of 24 July, Official Report, column 1373W.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which special advisers assist her in identifying priorities for encouraging and stimulating new businesses in rural areas. [71673]

Ms Hewitt: My special advisers offer advice to me on a wide range of policy issues, including small business matters where appropriate.

A description of the role and duties of special advisers is set down in the Code of Conduct for Special Advisers.

Public Consultations

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the public consultations undertaken by her Department since 8 June 2001, indicating the (a) length and (b) number of responses received in each case. [68704]

Ms Hewitt: The consultations undertaken by the Department since June 2001 are as follows:

Commission proposal for a directive on the working conditions of temporary (agency) workers.

The Department is required to comply with the Consultation Code of Practice requiring a period of at least 12 weeks for responses to public consultations. Records relating to consultations the compliance with Criterion 5 of the consultation Code are currently being compiled. I will write to the hon. Member with the requested information as soon as possible and place a copy in the Libraries of the House. Information on the number of responses in each consultation exercise is not held centrally.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what public consultations have been commenced by her Department since 1 April; and what the (a) closing date and (b) website address of each were. [72065]

Ms Hewitt: The public consultations commenced by the Department since 1 April are as follows:

Commission proposal for a directive on the working conditions of temporary (agency) workers (closes 18 October 2002)

Developing Energy Policy—Key Issues for Consultation for the White Paper (closes 13 September 2002)

Employment status in relation to statutory employment rights. (closes 11 December 2002)

Flexible working (closes 10 October 2002)

The DTI Race Equality Scheme (closes 20 September 2002)

The preliminary decision to add new user groups to the approved users list in the Airwave mm02 Telecommunications Act licence (closes 5 June 2002)

The process for identifying the GB system operator (GBSO) (closes 12 July 2002)

Young Workers Directive (closes 6 September 2002)

All DTI consultation documents are published on the Department's website at www.dti.gov.uk

Law Enforcement Agencies

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what statutory law enforcement agencies and prosecuting authorities there are within the responsibility of her Department; and what complaints procedure is available for each. [57125]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 16 May 2002]: There are no statutory law enforcement agencies and prosecuting authorities within the responsibility of my Department; prosecutions are brought by the Department itself. The Department's basic procedure for dealing with complaints is that, if someone has a complaint, they should initially go back to their original contact in the Department; if the complainant is not satisfied with the response, they are invited to contact the official's line manager; if the problem still cannot be resolved, the matter is referred to the Head of the Management Unit for review. This procedure does not affect the complainant's right to approach, via an MP, the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration or myself.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by her Department since 1 January; and what the (i) cost and (ii) saving has been in each case. [64623]

Ms Hewitt: 52 statutory instruments have been made by DTI since the beginning of 2002. These SIs revoked a total of 16 earlier SIs, and amended a total of 17 earlier SIs.

The cost and saving information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much and what proportion of the departmental expenditure limit for 2002–03 will be accounted for by staff costs; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if she will make a statement. [61026]

Ms Hewitt: Pay negotiations for 2002–03 have not yet been finalised. Therefore, planned pay costs as a proportion of total planned expenditure is not yet available.

The total resources of the Department for 2001–02 are shown in Table 1 of The Government's Expenditure Plans (Cm 5416), and the Department's admin expenditure is detailed in Table 5 of the same publication.

Departmental Policies (Wycombe)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the activities pursued by her Department that have had a particular impact on the Wycombe constituency since 7 June 2001. [58623]

Alan Johnson: The Department of Trade and Industry has funded a number of initiatives that have been delivered through the Small Business Service to help the economy in the Wycombe area. To date, a total of £518,856 of this funding has been spent since June 7 2001. This has included a Business Recovery fund (£9,000), a Diagnostic and Consultancy Scheme (£45,385), and International Trade Advice (£36,063).

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will answer the question of 17 June, 2002, from the hon. Member for Maidenhead, ref 464, on the Government's policy towards the independence of the economic regulators of privatised utilities. [71493]

Ms Hewitt: I have answered today.

Parliamentary Answers

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it is her policy to ensure that documents referred to in parliamentary answers are available via her Department's website. [72276]

Ms Hewitt: Departmental policy is that all documents published by DTI are available via the department's website. The policy on retention and archiving of elements of the website is currently under review.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for how long she retains documents referred to in parliamentary answers on his Department's website. [72286]

Ms Hewitt: Departmental policy is that all documents published by DTI are available via the department's website. The policy on retention and archiving of elements of the website is currently under review.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will answer the written question from the hon. Member for Chichester, tabled on 22 May, on the official travel of departmental and non-departmental special advisers. [72680]

Ms Hewitt: According to Part 1 of the Order Book for 22 May, there was not a question on this subject tabled to me from the hon. Member.

Regulation

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of (a) the Better Regulation Task Force and (b) the Ministerial Panel for Regulatory Accountability in strengthening the systems which control the regulatory burden. [70099]

Mr. Douglas Alexander: I have been asked to reply. The Government is committed to ensuring that regulations are fair and effective. The Better Regulation Task Force and the Panel on Regulatory Accountability, together with the Regulatory Impact Unit, are working together to achieve this goal. The Better Regulation Task Force has recently announced its new work programme. It will be reviewing:

alternatives to state regulation;

independent (non-economic) regulators;

the difficulties faced by small firms doing business with the public sector; and regulatory issues associated with "producer responsibility" for the disposal of goods at the end of their lives.

To date, the Task Force has published 21 substantive reports, together making over 300 recommendations.

It is established practice under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information that information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committee business is not disclosed.

Credit Unions

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what actions she has taken to promote the use of credit unions; and if she will make a statement. [70524]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

Credit unions have an important role to play in tackling financial exclusion and enhancing opportunity, through the provision of core financial services. That is why we have been involved in initiatives to help the movement grow. We are delivering a programme of strategic deregulation to enable credit unions to offer a greater range of services to their members.

Through the Financial Services and Markets Act we have brought credit unions under the regulatory supervision of the Financial Services Authority and given depositors with credit unions similar protection to those with banks or building societies. The new regulatory system, combined with our programme of deregulation, will give the movement a strong position from which to build and thrive.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will include nuclear energy generation in an emissions trading scheme. [71516]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

For target-holders, the UK Emissions Trading Scheme places the responsibility for emissions created by the generation of power with the end user of that power. This provides a strong incentive for energy users to increase their efficiency and to reduce emissions at the point of use. Therefore, if generators were also covered there would be a risk of double counting, where the generators could count emissions reductions made by down-stream users. Therefore, nuclear energy generation is not included in the UK Emissions Trading Scheme.

Nuclear Power

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the progress

the Government have made under the Ospar Convention to reduce nuclear discharges from Sellafield into the Irish Sea. [66106]

Margaret Beckett: I have been asked to reply.

The UK Strategy for Radioactive Discharges 2001–20 will be published very shortly. This will show how the UK will implement the OSPAR Radioactive Substances Strategy. The aim of that Strategy is to ensure progressive reduction of concentrations of radioactive substances in the marine environment so that by 2020 they are close to zero to historic levels.

Radioactive discharges from Sellafield have decreased dramatically over the past 25 years, to around 1 per cent. of their peak levels in the 1970s. The Strategy will show that further substantial reductions will be made in the period to 2020. The Environment Agency has carried out a full review of discharge authorisations at Sellafield and are expected to announce their draft decision soon. It will then be for me as Secretary of State for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and the Secretary of State for Health to decide whether we wish to exercise our statutory powers before any changes are put into effect. The Secretary of State for Health and I expect to announce shortly whether we wish to exercise our statutory powers in relation to the Agency's proposed decision on discharges of technetium-99 from Sellafield.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the estimated clean up costs are for each (a) current and (b) past nuclear power station. [73119]

Mr. Wilson: The estimated cost of decommissioning depends on the strategy adopted by the operator and agreed with the relevant nuclear regulators. BNFL and British Energy publish annual accounts that include information on their respective nuclear provisions, including provisions for decommissioning and waste management, and the basis of their approach to decommissioning.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what limit is set on the financial liability of nuclear operators for damage arising from a nuclear accident; and if she will make a statement. [72989]

Mr. Wilson: With regard to liability of the UK nuclear industry in the event of a nuclear accident, the UK is a Contracting party to the Paris and Brussels Conventions on Third Party Liability in the Field of Nuclear Energy. One of the underlying principles of the Paris Convention is that all liability arising from a nuclear accident is channelled to the operator of the nuclear installation on a no fault basis. Present UK legislation requires operators to cover their liability by insurance, (the Nuclear Installations Act 1965) and operator's liability is currently limited to a maximum £140 million per accident.

Liability amounts are reviewed by the UK along with our international partners and the Paris and Brussels Conventions are currently in the process of revision with a view to substantially increase the operator's liability to £430 million per accident.

Nuclear Waste Disposal

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the timetable for deciding on the disposal of medium-level nuclear waste. [69456]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

We propose to press ahead with a review of waste management options. The review will seek the views of interested stakeholders, the public and government departments. We will appoint an independent body to oversee the review process which will make recommendations on the option, or combination of options, for managing radioactive waste which would achieve long-term protection for people and the environment. We will review all options—including surface storage and underground disposal—and revise the timetable to a four stage process rather than five as proposed in the original consultation.

The waste from our existing nuclear facilities will arise over the next century or so. So we intend, in assessing management options, to include not only materials currently classified as waste but also to consider the consequences of providing for other materials which may have to be managed as waste during the period, such as some separated plutonium, and uranium, as well as certain quantities of spent nuclear fuel.

We propose that the new body will be in place by the end of the year. Over the summer and autumn, we shall publish more detailed proposals. These will include details of the new body and its terms of reference. They will also address pressing issues such as arrangements for managing waste safely in the short-term and an announcement on waste substitution. We shall report progress on the other issues covered in the consultation, including decommissioning nuclear sites, the powers of the Environment Agencies, managing spent sealed sources of radioactivity, and waste classification.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution's advocacy of a 60 per cent. carbon dioxide reduction by 2050. [71525]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

The Government will respond formally to all the recommendations in the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution's twenty-second report—"Energy—the Changing Climate"—alongside publication of the Energy White Paper, which is due around the turn of the year.

Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will formally reply to the RCEP's recent proposals. [71527]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

The Government will respond formally to all the recommendations in the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution's twenty-second report—

"Energy—the Changing Climate"—alongside publication of the Energy White Paper, which is due around the turn of the year.

Johannesburg Summit

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to offset the carbon emissions (a) she personally and (b) the British Government delegation will account for in their attendance at the forthcoming earth summit in Johannesburg. [71774]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 22 July 2002]: I have been asked to reply.

The carbon emissions caused by the government delegation's travel to and attendance at the World Summit on Sustainable Development have been offset through our participation in the Johannesburg Climate Legacy Project.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) investigations, (b) penalties and (c) prosecutions have been instituted since 31 December 2001 in respect of working families tax credit fraud. [67777]

Dawn Primarolo: During the period 1 January 2002 to 30 June 2002, 13,305 investigations have been opened by the issue of the Inland Revenue's Code of Practice on enquiries, 334 penalties determined and 25 prosecutions instituted in respect of Working Families Tax Credit and Disabled Persons Tax Credit.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 25 June to the hon. Member for Havant, Official Report, column 763W, on Working Families Tax Credit, when the Inland Revenue completed its compliance benchmarking exercise; when it began to analyse it; when he expects to receive it; and what the administrative cost was of the benchmarking exercise. [67935]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue began analysing the results of compliance benchmarking exercise on Working Families' Tax Credit in February 2002 and that work is continuing. It is not possible to ascertain the specific costs of this exercise because the work was undertaken as part of routine compliance casework.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent of fraud in the child care element of working families tax credit; and how many (a) investigations and (b) prosecutions have been instituted into fraud in the childcare element of WFTC since 31 December 2001. [67773]

Dawn Primarolo: The childcare element is only one component of both Working Families' Tax Credit and Disabled Person's Tax Credits (WFTC and DPTC). During the period 1 January 2002 and 30 June 2002, 13,305 investigations of WFTC or DPTC awards were opened by the issue of the Inland Revenue's Code of Practice on enquiries, but it is not possible to say how many of these were in relation to childcare charges. During the period, one of the twenty-five prosecutions was instituted as a result of the falsification of childcare documentation.

Physical Activity

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the success of the Public Service Agreement with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport to raise significantly the average time spent on sport and physical activity by those aged five to 16 years. [72466]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 23 July 2002]: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Wyre Forest (Richard Taylor) on 23 July, Official Report, column 975W.

WALES

Regulations (Cost-effectiveness)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Minister about the cost effectiveness of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 (Electronic Communications) (Wales) Regulations. [60984]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Unfortunately, due to an administrative error, this question was missed. I can, though, now provide you with a full answer:

These are matters for the National Assembly for Wales. Section 65 of the Government of Wales Act 1998 provides for an appraisal of the costs and benefits of complying with Assembly general subordinate legislation to be carried out before a draft of the statutory instruments is laid before the Assembly.

Public Consultations

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the public consultations undertaken by his Department since 1997, indicating for each consultation (a) if copies were available online, (b) if copies were available in print, (c) the date the time period given for responses opened and (d) the date the time period given for responses closed. [69799]

Mr. Paul Murphy: It was necessary to check through a number of files to obtain the relevant details and the final pieces of information did not arrive until after the deadline for responses on 24 July. I can, though, now provide a full answer to your question as follows:

Since its creation in July 1999 my Department has undertaken consultation on the following:

"Greater Protection and Better Management of Common Land in England and Wales". Copies were available online and in print. Consultation ran from 15 February to 26 July 2000.

"Amendments to the Government's Proposals for New Assisted Areas". Copies were available online and in print. Consultation ran from 10 April to 2 May 2000.

"Proposals to change the Administration of the Housing Transfer Programme". Copies were available online and in print. Consultation ran from 14 July to 31 August 2000.

"Government Proposal for the Reform of Business Tenancies" (jointly with Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions). Copies were available online and in print. Consultation ran from 19 March to 30 June 2001.

"Draft NHS (Wales) Bill". Copies were available online and in print. Consultation ran from 17 May to 5 July 2002.

"Draft Mental Health Bill" (jointly with Department of Health). Copies are available online and in print. Consultation is running currently from 25 June to 16 September 2002.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Crime Reduction Directors

Brian Cotter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the amount allocated to each of the regional crime reduction directors. [71217]

Mr. John Denham: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave the hon. Member for Castle Point (Robert Spink), on 22 July 2002, Official Report, column 863W.

Retail Crime

Brian Cotter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will list for each Government office in the regions what proportion of the office's annual spend for 2001–02 was allocated to combating retail crime; [71224]

(2) if he will list for each statutory crime and disorder partnership the amount spent on retail crime partnerships in the financial year 2001–02. [71223]

Mr. John Denham: I have been asked to reply.

The attached table shows the amounts spent by regional crime reduction directors specifically on retail crime reduction initiatives in 2001–02 and shows these as a proportion of their total spending on crime reduction initiatives. These figures do not include funding spent on non-specific schemes, such as town centre Close Circuit Television (CCTV), which may also benefit retailers in the areas where they operate.

The Home Office does not record the amounts spent on retail crime partnerships in each of the 376 statutory crime and disorder partnerships.

Accommodation (Review)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library his Department's last accommodation requirements review. [70769]

Mr. Christopher Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is assessing its future accommodation requirements in the light of the Machinery of Government changes in June 2002 and will be reviewing the position in the Autumn. No documents are currently available.

Empty Properties

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many dwellings he estimates are empty in each local authority area in (a) Essex and (b) Suffolk. [71471]

Mr. Tony McNulty: The information presented in the table below is taken from the 2001 Housing Investment Programme Housing Strategy Statistical Appendix.

Local Authority dwellings are those which the authority owns within the authority area

Registered Social Landlord dwellings are those owned or leased by landlords registered with the Housing Corporation.

Other public sector dwellings cover those owned by the authority for non-housing purposes and by other authorities inside the LA area. Housing Action Trusts, government departments and other public sector agencies (e.g. Regional Health Authorities, Forestry Commission and county councils).

Other private sector is defined as all privately owned dwellings

The total number of vacant dwellings in a district can be estimated using council tax records, or a local survey if available, and have the same coverage of dwellings except that second homes, holiday lets, dwellings in unlicensed accommodation, and flats and houses normally occupied by students should not be included. Vacants include dwellings that are empty between changing occupants or undergoing modernisation, repair or conversion, or awaiting demolition; or newly completed but not occupied.

These figures relate to those returned by local authorities in July 2002 as part of the annual Housing Investment Programme returns. This years round is now underway and local authorities are due to submit figures to OPDM by 31 July 2002.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Love: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what evaluation has been made of the potential of modular assembly in the construction of affordable housing; and if he will make a statement. [73542]

Mr. Tony McNulty: Modular housing has the potential to offer significant time savings and potential cost reduction in provision of affordable housing particularly in high density, urban housing schemes as illustrated by the Peabody Trust development at Murray Grove, Hackney. It is still a developing area and we will be taking a close interest in what it can offer as part of a solution to housing need.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much funding has been granted to the Housing Corporation in each of the years 1990 to 2001. [71298]

Mr. Tony McNulty: The expenditure by the Housing Corporation for each of the following years 1990–91 to 2001–02 is shown below. The figures include capital and revenue grants to housing associations, and the Corporation's administrative expenditure.

1990–91	920.0
1991–92	1,870.7
1992–93	2,670.6
1993–94	2,326.9
1994–95	2,098.9
1995–96	1,753.4
1996–97	1,638.1
1999–2000	1,329.9

The Housing Corporation accounts for 2001–02 are due to be published shortly. A copy will be placed in the House library.

Home Extensions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what statutory restrictions there are on people who want to build extensions to their home. [72857]

Mr. Tony McNulty: A range of statutory consents may be required depending on the particular circumstances. These may include: planning permission, listed building consent, conservation area consent and building regulations approval. Other consents may also be required. For example, if the proposed development would obstruct a public path, it may require an order to divert or close it.

The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 sets out categories of permitted development, where an application for planning permission would not be required. This includes the building of a house extension in certain defined circumstances. The Department's booklet "Planning, A Guide for Householders" provides advice to home owners on the need for planning permission. (This is available on our website at www.planning.odpm.gov.uk/householders/index.htm) Home owners are advised to consult their local authority before beginning any works.

Planning Application (Seller Properties)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he received the planning application submitted to the London Borough of Southwark on behalf of Sellar Properties by Healey and Baker, registered as LBS application reference 0100476 and granted planning permission by LBS on 11 March, subject to call in by the Secretary of State; when he expects to make a decision on whether to call in the application for public inquiry; and if he will make a statement. [72999]

Mr. Tony McNulty: This application was referred to the Secretary of State following approval by LB Southwark and was received on 19 March. The Secretary of State called this application in for public inquiry earlier today.

Out-of-Town Shopping Centres

Keith Vaz: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many appeals have been made concerning applications for out-of-town shopping centres; and how many have been successful since 7 June. [73244]

Mr. Tony McNulty: The information requested on the location of appeals made and decided is not readily available and could only be made so at disproportionate cost.

Urban Allotment Land

Mr. Love: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action is being taken to protect urban allotment land from development; and if he will make a statement. [73544]

Mr. Tony McNulty: Section 8 of the Allotments Act 1925 requires local authorities to obtain the Secretary of State's consent for the disposal of any statutory allotment site. In February this year, guidance was issued to local authorities clarifying and strengthening the criteria against which consent decisions are made.

In addition, we have recently published a revision of Planning Policy Guidance Note 17: Planning for Open Space, Sport and Recreation, which provides enhanced protection through the planning system to all typed of open space, including allotments.

Local Government Expenditure

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the per capita central Government funding is for local government expenditure on (a) Surrey and (b) Durham. [72393]

Mr. Nick Raynsford: Local authorities, including police authorities, within Durham and Surrey budgeted to receive £920 and £630 government grant per head in 2002–03, respectively. Government grant here consists of revenue support grant, non-domestic rates, specific grants inside aggregate external finance and police grant. These figures do not include capital grants or grants paid to the Housing Revenue Account.

Budgeted revenue expenditure, financed from the grants referred to above, council taxes and reserves, was £1,246 per head in Durham and £1,052 per head in Surrey. For each area, almost all of the locally raised expenditure was budgeted to come from council taxes: £315 per head in Durham and £413 per head in Surrey.

The figures quoted above for Durham include grants receivable in Darlington, which is now a unitary authority. This is because Durham Police Authority covers the areas of both Durham County Council and Darlington Borough Council, and a separate figure is not available for the grant receivable by Durham Police Authority for the area of Durham County Council.

Homelessness (Castle Point)

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will intervene in respect of Castle Point Borough Council to ensure that the local homelessness problem is tackled. [73307]

Mr. Tony McNulty: The Homelessness Directorate within my Department has recently been set up to ensure that homelessness is tackled effectively and officials will be working closely with local authorities to assist them in the development of their homelessness strategies over the coming year.

Latest figures for the first quarter of 2002–03 indicate that on average 0.1 households per 1,000 in Castle Point are accepted as being in priority need for accommodation. The area currently has around 20 families with children in B and B accommodation.

Officials from the Homelessness Directorate have discussed with the authority how this number can be reduced and have encouraged Castle Point to put in a bid for a share of the £10 million available to local authorities to support their homelessness strategy. These resources will be additional to Castle Point's share of the £8 million the Government has already allocated through Revenue Support Grant to implement the Homelessness Act. Castle Point will also receive a share of £10 million which is about to be allocated to local authorities to assist in the implementation of the Priority Need Order. The Directorate will be monitoring the Authority's progress closely.

High Hedges

Mr. Love: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what powers are available to local authorities to mediate in disputes involving the problems of high hedges and rapidly growing trees; and if he will make a statement. [73015]

Mr. Nick Raynsford: Local authorities currently have no specific powers to intervene in disputes involving the problems of high hedges and rapidly growing trees. The Government is, however, committed to bringing forward new laws, which would allow local authorities to deal with complaints about high hedges, as soon as Parliamentary time can be found.

Job Locations

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many jobs under the remit of his Department in (a) the core department, (b) non-departmental public bodies, (c) executive agencies and (d) independent statutory bodies, organisations and bodies financially sponsored by his Department and other such organisations, are located in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, excluding Greater London, (iii) Greater London, (iv) Wales, (v) Northern Ireland and (vi) overseas, broken down by (A) whole-time equivalent jobs and (B) the percentage per individual department, body or organisation. [72734]

Mr. Christopher Leslie: I would refer the right hon. Lady to the table below which shows the position within the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister at 1 June 2002:

Office of Deputy Prime Minister	Full Time Equivalent	Location
Core Department[1]	1,856	London, South East, Midlands and the NW
Government Offices	2,360	English Regions which consists of:
		East of England—Cambridge
		East Midlands—Nottingham
		London
		North East—Newcastle-upon-Tyne

Office of Deputy Prime Minister	Full Time Equivalent	Location
		North West—Liverpool and Manchester South East—Guildford South West—Bristol, Plymouth and Truro West Midlands—Birmingham Yorkshire and The Humber—Leeds
Executive Agencies[2]	1,744 which consists of:-
Fire Service College.	180	Gloucestershire
The Planning Inspectorate.	667	Bristol and Cardiff
Queen Elizabeth 2 Conference Centre.	55	London
The Rent Service.	842	Throughout England
Grand Total	5,960

[1] The core department for the Office for the Deputy Prime Minister (ODPM) employs approximately 1,856 staff. This figure is composed of staff working on policy areas and includes an estimate of 50 per cent. of the support staff who worked for the former Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions (DTLR). This figure may change when re-structuring is complete and final decisions have been taken on how support staff are to be allocated to the Office for the Deputy Prime Minister (ODPM) and Department for Transport (DfT).
[2] The figures for the Executive Agencies are estimates—based on their plans for year 2002–03 and are taken from the DTLR (C) Departmental Annual Report 2002.

I will write to the hon. Member with details for non-departmental public bodies and independent statutory bodies in due course.

It has not been possible to calculate the percentage per individual department, body or organisation as we do not have a breakdown of the total figures by region.

Public Consultations

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what public consultations have been commenced by his Department since 1 April; and what the (a) closing date and (b) website address of each were. [72069]

Mr. Christopher Leslie: A list of the public consultations by the Office or its predecessors since 1 April 2002 has been placed in the Library, including the closing dates for responses and the website address of each document. The list is based on central records and reflects the public consultations undertaken within the areas for which the Office is currently responsible.

Information Campaigns

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Collins) of 27 February 2002, Official Report, column 1362W, if he will list the campaigns managed by the Central Office of Information in each of the last five financial years; and what the (a) costs and (b) advertising agencies that received contracts for each campaign were. [72419]

Mr. Douglas Alexander: I have been asked to reply.

Tables listing the advertising campaigns managed by the Central Office of Information in each of the last five financial years with their costs and the advertising agencies contracted have today been placed in the libraries of the House.

Air-Conditioning

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what actions his Department has taken to communicate to (a) the Chartered Institute of Building Services Engineers and (b) the Building Services Journal the Government's policy on the use of HFC refrigerants in air-conditioning. [71357]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

The Government issued the UK Climate Change Programme in November 2000 and its publication was widely publicised. The Programme sets out the key elements of the Government's policy on HFCs to enable industry and users to make investment decisions with more certainty.

My officials are now writing to the Building Services Engineers and the Building Services Journal enclosing details of the policy on HFC use in air-conditioning systems.

Formaldehyde Emissions

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proposals he has to change the regulations on industrial formaldehyde emissions in the light of HSE advice on the levels of concentration at which strong odours occur. [68354]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

Risks to worker health from formaldehyde are already addressed by the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1999 (COSHH). The Health and Safety Commission has approved Maximum Exposure Limits (MELs) for formaldehyde at 2 ppm (parts per million by volume) as an 8-hour time-weighted average, and 2 ppm as a short-term limit with a 15-minute reference period. Under COSHH, exposure by inhalation to a substance with a maximum exposure limit must be reduced as far as is reasonably practicable, and in any case below the MEL.

In its documentation summarising the criteria for setting MELs, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) states that formaldehyde has a threshold of detection by smell at around 0.8 ppm. An earlier HSE Toxicity Review notes that the threshold for odour detection varies among individuals, with values in the range 0.05–1 ppm having been reported; it is expected that all would detect the odour at the latter value. HSE has issued no further advice relating odour to concentration; it does not normally seek to offer advice on odour problems.

Industrial formaldehyde emissions to the wider environment are currently regulated by local authorities or, where larger industrial processes are concerned, by the Environment Agency, under the provisions of the Environment Protection Act 1990. Each industrial process requires an authorisation from the regulator. Where formaldehyde emissions are likely to cause environmental harm, each authorisation will contain conditions designed to limit its release. The regulator may at any time vary those conditions if it considers that necessary.

The regulatory system established by the 1990 Act is gradually being replaced—from now to mid-2007—by that set out in the Pollution Prevention and Control (England and Wales) Regulations 2000. Each industrial installation will require a permit, which must contain conditions relating to formaldehyde emissions if these are likely to be significant to human health or human senses, or to impair or interfere with amenities and other legitimate uses of the environment.

CABINET OFFICE

Arms Exports

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to the oral statement of the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Nigel Griffiths) of 24 June 2002, Official Report, column 635, of criterion 8 of the Consolidated EU and National Arms Export Licensing criteria; whether the review is devising a series of tests to determine whether an arms export may compromise the sustainable development of a developing country; when he expects the review to be completed; and how the Government intends to inform Parliament of the outcome of the review. [64963]

Nigel Griffiths: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the detailed reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 31 July.

Women (Consultation)

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which women's organisations have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during 2000–01 and 2001–02 sessions; and if their responses have been published. [61081]

Mr. Douglas Alexander: The Cabinet Office consulted on the proposed Regulatory Reform Bill in March and September 1999. The Women's National Commission was consulted, but did not respond. The Regulatory Reform Act received Royal Assent on 10 April 2001.

Communications Bill

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which Government Department will have lead responsibility for the Communications Bill when it is introduced for Second Reading. [68044]

Stephen Timms: I have been asked to reply The Communications Bill has been prepared jointly by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. Should the Bill be given a place in the legislative programme for the next session, both Departments will continue to take it forward jointly.

Departmental Report

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the cost was of publishing his Department's annual report for each of the past five years. [70489]

Mr. Douglas Alexander: The costs which can be identified are shown in the table. Some costs are met by the publisher and do not fall to Government.

Year	Cost
1998	£1,696
1999	£6,251
2000	£2,699
2001	£25,248*

* Included Main Estimates for 2001–02, an increased number of tables and an improved presentational format.

The Cabinet Office's departmental report also incorporated the departmental report requirement and submissions for the Central Office of Information; the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and Health Service Commissioner for England; the Privy Council Office; House of Lords; House of Commons; National Audit Office and the Electoral Commission.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) whether it is his policy to ensure that documents referred to in parliamentary answers are available via his Department's website; [72291]

(2) for how long he retains documents referred to in parliamentary answers on his Department's website. [72283]

Mr. Douglas Alexander: The Cabinet Office does not have a set time limit for documents to be retained on its website.

Minimum requirements for the type of documents which should be published on Government websites are set out in guidance issued by the Office of the e-Envoy, "Guidelines for UK Government Websites" (Illustrated Handbook for web management teams—section 2.2 "What content should be on your website?" and section 2.3 "Cross-government requirements").

In addition to setting out guidelines on documents for inclusion, the Guidance also explicitly requires Departments to ensure that the content of the site as a whole is up to date and current and, where it is necessary, to update the content of individual documents to show the latest date of amendment clearly on the document concerned.

Section 1.2.7 deals with the issue of Records management and the Office of the e-Envoy currently has a consultation paper out on archiving websites. The purpose of this draft annex to the Illustrated handbook is to provide government website managers with a framework towards developing within their website management policy suitable procedures and systems to assist in the management, appraisal and preservation of electronic records. A copy of this draft is available online at http://ww.e-envoy.gov.uk/webguidelines.htm

The Cabinet Office is in the process of updating its website to conform to these Guidelines.

Education Reform

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress his office has made in helping delivering reform of education services since the Comprehensive Spending Review. [72090]

Estelle Morris: I have been asked to reply. Since the Comprehensive Spending Review 1998 the Government has put in place a number of reforms to raise standards of attainment, improve the quality of education and skills provision and invest in the workforce and physical infrastructure to deliver these reforms. The Department has met several of its targets and is making good progress towards almost all of the others. Further information can be found in the department's annual report on www.dfes.gov.uk/deptreport2002

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on what dates ministers in his Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 June 2000; where each meeting took place; which Ministers were involved in each meeting; which Irish Government departments were involved in each meeting; and which Ministers and officials from the Irish Government attended each meeting. [72689]

Mr. Douglas Alexander: There have been no bilateral meetings between Cabinet Office Ministers and Irish Government Ministers and officials since 1 June 2000.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions between 31 March 2001 and 31 March 2002 (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity; what places were visited; and how much each visit cost. [58731]

Jane Kennedy: The information you have requested is not held centrally and could therefore only be provided at disproportionate cost.

North Belfast

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the community background is in percentage terms of those juveniles prosecuted since 1 July 2001 arising out of disturbances in North Belfast. [62636]

Jane Kennedy: Although the existing database is currently being upgraded and the information on prosecutions since July 2001 will not be available until late summer 2002, it will not enable identification of the offender's community background.

Royal Prerogative

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what decisions have been made by his Department in the last year under authority from the Royal Prerogative. [63134]

Jane Kennedy: Records are not kept of individual occassions on which powers under the Royal Prerogative are exercised, nor would it practicable to do so.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through his Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64996]

Jane Kennedy: There have been no EU directives and regulations implemented through the Northern Ireland Office in 2002.

Buildings Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost of buildings insurance to his Department was (a) before and (b) after 11 September 2001. [66929]

Jane Kennedy: Departments are required to comply with the Government's general policy on insurance, which is set out in Government Accounting, Chapter 30, para. 30.2.5, which notes that government does not need to purchase insurance to protect the viability of its business, and should consider insurance only were the value of claims met would exceed the cost of insurance premiums. Commercial insurance of a building is acceptable in cases where (a) insurance is a condition of a lease (b) the lessor will not except a Government indemnity (c) incurring the total cost of the accommodation in question, including the cost of the insurance, is more cost-effective than other accommodation options [Government Accounting, para. 30.2.11a].

The NIO occupies approximately 40 different properties, which are a mixture of commercially and publicly owned. In terms of building insurance, only a handful of premises pay for their own insurance costs directly (at a total value of less than £10,000). The rest either pay for insurance as part of a quarterly service charge (or it is inclusive with their rental) or claim indemnity as described above.

Of these buildings which pay their own insurance, premiums have increased over the last year, however it is not possible to say how much of this years increase is directly related to September 11.

Public Consultations

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the public consultations undertaken by his Department since 8 June 2001, indicating the (a) length and (b) number of responses received in each case. [68705]

Jane Kennedy: The information requested is as follows:

Consultation	Length	Responses
Northern Ireland Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme 2002	5 months	15
Creating a Safer Northern Ireland through Partnership	3 months	31
Consultation Paper on the Review of Part 1 of the Sex Offenders Act 1997	3 months	22
Consultation of Rehabilitation of Offenders (Exceptions) (Amendment) (No2) Order (Northern Ireland) 2001	6 weeks	12
Trainee Regulation	3 weeks	6
Flags and Emblems Regulation	3.5 weeks	41
Planning Regulation	6 weeks	3
Code of Practice on the appointment of Independent members to District Policing Partnerships	14 months	20

Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much is set aside for the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission for 2002–03. [67335]

Desmond Browne: A budget of £1.2 million has been made available for the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission for the financial year 2002–03.

Consultation

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the public consultations undertaken by his Department since 1997, indicating for each consultation (a) if copies were available online, (b) if copies were available in print, (c) the date the time period given for responses opened and (d) the date the time period given for responses closed. [69800]

Jane Kennedy: The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation applies to all formal national public consultation documents issued by Departments from 1 January 2001 and the information requested is not available before that date. Since 2001, the details are as follows:

Parades Commission

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the annual cost of the Parades Commission in Northern Ireland since its inception; and how much in allowances has been paid to those currently on the Commission. [69938]

Jane Kennedy: The annual cost of the Parades Commission since it's inception in March 1997 was:

1998–99	£1,066,220
1999–2000	£1,023,559
2000–01	£1,105,677
2001–02	£1,119,807
Total:	£4,928,827

In relation to allowances, those on the Commission are entitled to mileage and subsistence allowances. It is not possible to identify these allowances from the total cost of travel.

Departmental Press Office

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) full-time equivalents were employed by his press office and (b) secondees were placed in his press office in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [70542]

Jane Kennedy: (a) The number of staff employed in the Information Service in the last five years is as follows:

April 1998	40
April 1999	52
April 2000	52
April 2001	36
April 2002	37

(b) There have not been any secondees placed in the Information Service in the last five years.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Pension Tax Credit

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the cost to the Exchequer will be of the pension tax credit when implemented for (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05, (c) 2005–06 and (d) 2006–07. [71577]

Mr. McCartney [holding answer 24 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Perth (Annabelle Ewing) on 24 July 2002. Official Report, column 1542W.

Benefits (London)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the total cost of (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit in (i) the London Borough of Enfield and (ii) Greater London was in each of the last 10 years. [73538]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is in the table.

Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit expenditure in the London Borough of Enfield and Greater London (£ millions)

	London Borough of Enfield		Greater London
	Housing Benefit	Council Tax Benefit	Housing Benefit	Council Tax Benefit

4. Greater London consists of the 32 London boroughs and the Corporation of the City of London.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Crown Prosecution Service

Ms Drown: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to allow the Crown Prosecution Service to attend hearings of appeals against sentences to represent the victim's interests. [73414]

The Solicitor General: Sir Robin Auld in his Review of the Criminal Courts (October 2001) recommended in relation to the work of the Court of Appeal that:

"The Crown Prosecution Service should consider on a case by case basis whether to appear on the hearing of an appeal against sentence so as to be able to assist the Court, if required, on matters of fact, including the effect on any victim, or of law" (Recommendation 321)

The Government has accepted that recommendation which will be taken forward by the Lord Chief Justice building on existing arrangements that enable the CPS to be represented at some sentencing appeals in the Court of Appeal. The role of the CPS at such hearings is to represent the state. In doing so it can take account of the interests of individual victims.

Pensions Appeal Tribunal

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Pensions Appeal Tribunal finds that a pension payable to a retired disabled officer was granted on account of medical unfitness attributable to military service from when payments of that pension are payable. [72850]

Dr. Lewis Moonie: I have been asked to reply.

When the Pensions Appeal Tribunal (PAT) decides that disablement is attributable to, or aggravated by, service the Secretary of State for Defence assesses the degree of disablement and decides from which date any payment of pension should be paid in accordance with Schedule 3 to the Naval, Military and Air Forces Etc (Disablement and Death) Service Pensions Order 1983. There is a right of appeal against the decision on the level of assessment of disablement and since 9 April 2001 a right of appeal against the decision on the commencement date of the pension.

If an appeal is successful the pension will normally be paid from the date of the claim or date of the application for review, whichever led to the appeal.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the (a) dates, (b) location and (c) sources were of attributable (i) articles, interviews or contributions for the media, books or other journals and (ii) speeches or presentations made in the public domain, by departmental special advisers since March 2001; who in his Department authorised the activity; and on what date this activity was recorded with the departmental Head of Information. [72261]

Ms Yvette Cooper: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 24 July 2002, Official Report, column 1373W.

Criminal Courts Review

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the Central Council of Magistrates' response to the Criminal Courts Review. [73049]

Ms Yvette Cooper: The Central Council of Magistrates' Courts Committees submitted a written response to Sir Robin Auld's Report, which is available on our website. Their views were considered along with the nearly 500 other responses received, many from individual magistrates and Magistrates' Courts Committees. This consideration helped form the Government's conclusions which were set out in the Criminal Justice White Paper "Justice for All", which was published on 17 July 2002.

CAFCASS

Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much money is owed within the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service; and (a) by and (b) to whom it is owed. [73224]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service's (CAFCASS) Accounts for 2001–02, show £4.3 million as being owed to creditors on 31 March 2002. The three largest amounts owed were to CAFCASS Guardians at £1,211,900, £1,706,700 for accommodation and £248,400 for staff related expenses. During 2001–02, CAFCASS paid 88 per cent. of all invoices within a 30-day period, during 2002–03 this has risen to well above 90 per cent.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Press Office

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) full time equivalents were employed by his press office and (b) secondees were placed in his press office in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [70547]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 22 July 2002]: (a) The number of full-time officers working in the Foreign and Commonwealth Press Office (News Department) over the last 5 years was:

23	23	20 (3 slots vacant)	19 (4 slots vacant)	29

(b) No records are kept of the number of short term secondees for the last five years.

Baroness Amos

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings the Baroness Amos has had with hon. Members since 7 June 2001. [71592]

Mr. Straw: My noble Friend the Baroness Amos has had 59 meetings with hon. Members since 7 June 2001. This figure includes meetings with Ministers from other Government Departments, but does not include meetings with Peers or FCO Ministers.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visits abroad the Baroness Amos has made since 7 June 2001. [71593]

Mr. Straw: My noble Friend the Baroness Amos has made 28 overseas visits since 7 June 2001.

Overseas Territories

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answers of 1 March 2002, Official Report, column 1639W, on overseas territories if he will make a further statement on (a) the Order in Council and (b) local legislation in (i) Bermuda, (ii) Gibraltar and (iii) the Cayman Islands. [72652]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Anti-terrorism (Financial and other Measures) (Overseas Territories) Order 2002 was laid before Parliament on 26 July and came into force on 1 August. The text of the Order has been sent to the Territories to which it extends (Anguilla, Falkland Islands, Montserrat, St Helena and Dependencies, Turks and Caicos Islands and the British Virgin Islands) and has been posted on the Stationery Office website. Copies have been sent also to Bermuda, Gibraltar and the Cayman Islands where the text will be used as a model for their own domestic legislation. Legislation is unlikely to be introduced in Bermuda before the House of Assembly rises for the summer. In Gibraltar drafting of local legislation is underway. Draft legislation for the Cayman Islands is being finalised.

Nice Treaty

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what rules will apply to the Ambassador and staff of the British Embassy in Dublin during the forthcoming Irish referendum on the Nice Treaty; what guidelines will be issued on intervention in Irish public and political affairs (a) in the run up to and (b) during the referendum; and if he will make a statement. [72990]

Peter Hain: In accordance with normal practice, and Article 41 of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations 1961, the Ambassador and staff of the British Embassy in Dublin will make no intervention in Irish public and political affairs in connection with the forthcoming referendum on the Nice Treaty.

British Council

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide support to the British Council to enable it to undertake its proposals to develop further its Connecting Futures programme. [73197]

Mr. Macshane: In his statement to the House on 15 July my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced increases of £5 million, £10 million and £20 million in the grant-in-aid for the British Council over the next three years; an average annual increase of 3.0 per cent. in real terms. This increase, on top of the 3.3 per cent. average annual increases after inflation in the 2000 Spending Review, will have increased the total grant funded activities of the British Council by nearly £50 million since 2000–01.

The additional funding will enable the Council to press ahead with a number of important initiatives, including its Connecting Futures Programme.

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide assistance to enable the British Council to open new regional centres in (a) Kaliningrad, (b) Banya Luka and (c) Sarajevo. [73194]

Mr. Macshane: The British Council has had an office in Sarajevo since 1994. In its recent Spending Review bid the British Council set out various proposals for increasing its activities, including opening regional centres in Kaliningrad and Banja Luka.

In his statement to the House on 15 July my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced increases of £5 million, £10 million and £20 million in the grant-in-aid for the British Council over the next three years, an average annual increase of 3.0 per cent. in real terms. This increase, on top of the 3.3 per cent. average annual increases after inflation in the 2000 Spending Review, will have increased the total grant funded activities of the British Council by nearly £50 million since 2000–01.

The additional funding will enable the Council to press ahead with a number of important initiatives. Decisions about the opening of new offices are expected in the autumn.

Cyprus

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) of 16 July 2002, Official Report, column 178W, on Cyprus, if he will set out the framework of relevant Security Council resolutions and treaties to be considered in the comprehensive peace negotiation between the two communities in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [73021]

Peter Hain: UN Security Council Resolution 1250 (1999) sets the framework for the current talks for a comprehensive settlement in Cyprus. It calls upon the two leaders to commit themselves to the following principles:

— no preconditions;

— all issues on the table;

— commitment in good faith to continue to negotiate until a settlement is reached;

— full consideration of relevant United Nations resolutions and treaties.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors will be taken into account by the (a) UK and (b) EU in deciding whether Cyprus will accede to membership of the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [73681]

Peter Hain: In order to accede to the EU, each candidate country must comply with the EU's accession criteria as set out by the Copenhagen European Council in 1993. In respect of the accession of Cyprus, the UK and EU position remains as set out in the Conclusions reached by the 1999 Helsinki European Council, which stated that:

"A political settlement will facilitate the accession of Cyprus to the European Union. If no settlement has been reached by the completion of accession negotiations, the Council's decision on accession will be made without the above being a precondition. In this the Council will take account of all relevant factors."

Crime Against International Law

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) the German Government, (b) representatives of the German Government in London and (c) his own representatives in Berlin, concerning the German Act to introduce the Code of Crimes Against International Law of 26 June; what advice he has received on its implications for citizens of the UK; and if he will make a statement. [73193]

Peter Hain: This legislation is designed to bring Germany's domestic criminal law into line with its commitments under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. Although Germany ratified the Rome Statute on 11 December 2000 it has not until now completed its legislation to implement the Statute. The United Kingdom adopted its own legislation (the ICC Act and ICC Scotland 2001) before ratifying the Statute. The German government has kept British Embassy officials in Berlin informed of its legislative progress. I do not envisage any special problems for British citizens arising from this legislation.

Baku-Ceyhan Pipeline

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has received in the last 10 months concerning the Baku-Ceyhan pipeline; and if he will make a statement. [73165]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is in regular contact with the Government of Azerbaijan and the commercial companies involved in the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline project. We fully support this project, in which BP is taking a leading role.

Two high level visits have been made to Baku this year. The Minister for Energy, my hon. friend the Member for Cunninghame North (Mr. Brian Wilson), attended the Caspian Oil and Gas Show in Azerbaijan in June. In the same month, the Lord Mayor of London led a delegation from the financial services sector to Kazakhstan and Azerbaijan. Both discussed oil and gas issues, including the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline.

Spain/Gibraltar

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government have taken in the European Court to address border queues between Spain and Gibraltar. [72861]

Peter Hain: None. The Commission announced the conclusion of their investigation into the situation at the border on 19 March. A copy of their statement has been placed in the libraries of the House. The Spanish government also confirmed on 19 March that in response to requests made by the UK during the Brussels Process talks a new second channel would be opened. This became operational on 21 March. We continue to believe that dialogue is the best way of overcoming our differences with Spain over Gibraltar.

Terrorism

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with European colleagues over intensifying co-operation to neutralise funding for terrorist purposes. [73209]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In addition to obligations under UNSCR 1390 to freeze the assets of Al Qa'ida and its associates, EC Regulation 2580/02 obliges member states to freeze the assets of other agreed terrorist groups and individuals. We and EU partners have regular discussions on implementation of this regulation. The Bank of England website (www.bankofengland.co.uk) maintains a full list of all those whose assets are currently frozen in the UK.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in increasing co-operation between member states of the EU in the war on terrorism since 11 September 2001. [73212]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There has been good progress in implementing the counter-terrorism measures agreed by EU Heads of Government and Justice and Home Affairs Ministers in September 2001. In particular, the Council of Ministers has adopted the framework decisions on a European arrest warrant; on terrorism; and on joint investigative teams. Practical and effective co-operation between Europe's intelligence and law-enforcement agencies to combat terrorism has also continued to improve. The Seville European Council in June committed the EU to continue to maintain the closest possible coordination with the United States and other partners in the fight against terrorism, and to contribute further to international efforts against terrorism. Through its political dialogue with third countries, the EU is encouraging others to take the necessary legislative and operational actions to combat terrorism. Where appropriate, the EU is seeking to deliver assistance in counter-terrorist disciplines, through existing programmes.

Anglo-Scottish Ministerial Meetings

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many formal and official inter-ministerial meetings his Department has held with the Scottish Executive since May 1999, broken down by (a) Scottish Executive department, (b) subject and (c) date. [72720]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Ministers from my Department have frequent meetings with Ministers from the Scottish Executive, both formal and informal, covering a broad range of topics.

India

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his latest assessment is of the situation regarding cross-border terrorist incursions into India. [73057]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As my right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary, made clear during his visit to India and Pakistan on 19–20 July, we all want to see a permanent end to infiltration across the Line of Control. The recent reduction in the level of infiltration, and de-escalatory steps taken by both sides, are welcome developments. We will continue to work with international partners to encourage India and Pakistan to maintain the de-escalatory momentum and return to productive dialogue on all outstanding issues between them, including Kashmir.

Immigration Officers

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many immigration officers and support staff work in the Consulate in New Delhi, Mumbai, Islamabad, Karachi and Lahore when the operations are fully operational. [73052]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The authorised establishments in New Delhi, Mumbai, Islamabad, Karachi and Lahore prior to June were:

Karachi—8 Entry Clearance Officers and 32 support staff.

Islamabad—32 Entry Clearance Officers and 100 support staff.

New Delhi—14 Entry Clearance Officers and 40 support staff.

Mumbai—11 Entry Clearance Officers and 25 support staff.

Lahore—6 Entry Clearance Officers and 26 support staff.

East Timor

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Indonesian Government on the death in East Timor in 1999 of Sander Thoenes and on the deaths in East Timor in 1975 of British citizens Malcolm Rennie and Brian Peters, and other newsmen; and if he will make a statement. [73545]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are in close touch with the Dutch Government who have led on the case of the Dutch citizen Sander Thoenes. On 17 July, Indonesian prosecutors said they would seek to reopen the investigation into this case after receiving new evidence from the Dutch authorities. We have raised the Balibo case with the Indonesian authorities at every appropriate opportunity and will continue to do so.

Israel

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Israel's holding of the relatives of suspected militants. [73305]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We believe that Israel is currently detaining twenty-one relatives of suspected terrorists. If Israel suspects that these people have committed offences, they should be brought to justice. In the absence of such evidence, they should be released. Collective punishments and deportation of protected persons are prohibited under the Fourth Geneva Convention. We strongly urge Israel to refrain from such action.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence his Department has collated on political influence in prosecution decisions in Sierra Leone. [72178]

Mr. Macshane: We have collated no specific evidence on the influence of politics in prosecution decisions. But we are aware of the parlous state of the judiciary in Sierra Leone, which has been allowed to deteriorate over the past twenty years or more. We also recognise that the confidence of ordinary Sierra Leoneans in the proper functioning of the judiciary is at a low ebb. We are especially concerned about delays in moving forward a large number of outstanding corruption cases, and have made clear our desire that they be brought to an early conclusion.

A properly functioning judicial process is an essential element of good governance. We are therefore helping the government of Sierra Leone with judicial reform. Part of our engagement in Sierra Leone has concentrated on law reform, including the refurbishment of court buildings in both Freetown and the provinces that were damaged or destroyed during the civil war.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with Sierra Leone's President on (a) broadening his Government, (b) defusing ethnic tensions in Sierra Leone and (c) speeding up reforms of the security structures in Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [72179]

Mr. Macshane: We maintain a regular dialogue with President Kabbah and senior members of his government on a wide range of international issues and matters relating to our bilateral engagement in the country. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development and my noble Friend Baroness Amos met with President Kabbah on 17 June. A major part of our bilateral relationship involves reform of the security sector. Since May 2000, we have made, and continue to make, considerable progress in the development of a new army under democratic control, and restructuring the police. But there is still much work to be done.

The end of the conflict in Sierra Leone, brought about by the sustained engagement of the United Nations, the UK and regional leaders, has opened up a new and promising chapter in Sierra Leone's road to democracy. It is the prerogative of the President to nominate members of his government. We believe that politicians both in government and in opposition, and from all ethnic backgrounds, have a vital role to play in helping to consolidate the peace and move the country forward, and we have made clear our strong commitment to helping Sierra Leone in its post conflict recovery.

Bermuda

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department's policy is with regard to the use of opinion polls conducted in Bermuda on the proposed constitutional changes as evidence of Bermudan opinion. [73473]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our policy is to encourage the widest possible public consultation throughout the constitutional review process. Reliable and published opinion polls can play a part in that.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria he proposes to use to determine whether there is consensus in Bermuda on the proposed changes to the electoral system. [73474]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We propose to take into account the report of the Constituency Boundaries Commission, which itself invited the views of the public, the subsequent debate in the Bermuda House of Assembly, and any other available evidence of public opinion in Bermuda.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department will make public the UK Civil Service College review of the Bermudan Civil Service. [73475]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Review of the Bermuda Public Service was commissioned by the Government of Bermuda. It is for them to decide when and if the report should be published.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it his Department's policy to convene a constitutional conference to discuss proposed changes to Bermuda's constitution; and if he will make a statement. [73476]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A Constitutional Conference has neither been ruled in nor out at this stage. We do not propose to reach a judgement on the case for a further process until we have received the report of the Constituency Boundaries Commission and there has been an opportunity for the House of Assembly in Bermuda to discuss the report.

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Bermudan Government have made to his Department explaining why it wishes to reduce the size of the House of Assembly; and if he will make a statement. [73477]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The current Government of Bermuda have made it clear that they favour a move from dual to single-seat constituencies. This commitment was part of their 1998 election manifesto. The Boundaries Commission are to produce a report, recommending the number and boundaries of constituencies within a margin no fewer than 20 and no greater than 40. The House of Assembly, which at present consists of 40 members, will then debate the report.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken to ensure that financial markets beyond those of the EU and Switzerland are off-limits to those members of the ZANU-PF whose assets are frozen. [72300]

Mr. Macshane: Article 6 of the EU Common Position of 18 February, which imposed an assets freeze on senior members of the Mugabe regime, made clear that the EU "shall encourage third States to adopt restrictive measures similar to those contained in this Common Position".

The EU Accession States, New Zealand, Norway and Switzerland have followed the EU's lead. The Government has made private representations to a number of countries to adopt similar measures. These efforts are on-going.

Burundi

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of the human rights situation in Burundi; and if he will make a statement. [73014]

Mr. Macshane: The conflict in Burundi has led to abuses of human rights and humanitarian standards by all sides. We have repeatedly called on all parties to respect international humanitarian law and continue to register our concerns over human rights in Burundi in bilateral political discussions. We have also given material support to the Ministry for Human Rights in Burundi and the UN Human Rights Field Office in Burundi.

SADC

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the SADC Parliamentary Forum's electoral norms and standards; and what steps the Government are taking to promote them in Africa. [72299]

Mr. Macshane: Through our High Commission in Windhoek we are in contact with the Secretary General of the SADC Parliamentary Forum. We welcome the adoption of the Electoral Norms and Standards by the Parliamentary Forum.

We welcome, too, the African Union's declaration on the principles governing democratic elections in Africa issued in Durban earlier this month.

We provide support to countries in Africa that are holding elections to assist them in meeting internationally recognised standards.

BAe Systems

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations have been carried out by UK agencies into the bribery allegations in the contract between BAe Systems and the Government of Qatar. [72546]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 24 July 2002]: I have been asked to reply. At the request of the Attorney General of Jersey, the Director of the Serious Fraud Office exercised her powers under section 2 of the Criminal Justice Act 1987 to obtain information in connection with criminal investigations that he was conducting concerning the affairs of the Yaheeb Trusts and the Havana Trust and their associated entities in Jersey. No other UK agencies conducted investigations. The Attorney General's criminal investigations are now concluded.

TRANSPORT

Rail Safety

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 10 June, Official Report, columns 781–782W, on rail safety, if he will list those occasions on which an incident involved trains or road vehicles carrying (a) hazardous substances and (b) nuclear flasks; and if he will make a statement. [62180]

Mr. Spellar: The number of road accidents involving vehicles carrying hazardous substances notified to the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 since 1997 are provided in the table below:

Overturning or serious damage to a tank while conveying by road prescribed dangerous substances, or the uncontrolled release or fire involving the substance being conveyed	49	28	21	26
Uncontrolled release or escape of a dangerous substance, or a fire involving the dangerous substance, when being conveyed by road in a vehicle	40	24	44	74

The number of rail accidents involving trains carrying hazardous substances registered by HSE's HM Railway Inspectorate since 1997 are in the table below:

Rail accidents involving trains transporting dangerous goods	15	11	4	4	16

Information on accidents and incidents involving the transport of radioactive material in the UK is published annually and placed in the Libraries of the House. The latest report, "Radiological Consequences resulting from Accidents and Incidents involving the Transport of Radioactive Materials in the UK—2000 Review, National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB)-M120", was published in October 2001. Data is still being collated for the 2001 report and is not yet available.

"Transport 2010"

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the planned review of "Transport 2010" will be accompanied by a published environmental appraisal. [63500]

Mr. Jamieson: We plan to publish a progress report on the 10 Year Plan in the autumn. This will include details of progress towards environmental objectives.

Underground

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the backlog of (a) maintenance and (b) renewal work on the London Underground was for each of the last three years. [67787]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: This is a matter for London Underground.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers (a) he and (b) the Mayor of London (i) have and (ii) will have to place the Tube Infracos into administration; under what legislation these powers are in place; and if he will make a statement. [70813]

Mr. Jamieson: Neither the Secretary of State nor the Mayor have, or will have, any powers to place the infrastructure companies into administration. Decisions on such matters are, and will remain, for the Courts. Under the Insolvency Act 1986 (as modified by the Greater London Authority Act 1999), the Courts may consider and act upon a petition from any person (including the Secretary of State and the Mayor) for administration or winding-up of a company.

Additionally, sections 220–224 of the Greater London Authority Act 1999 specify the circumstances under which the Courts could make a PPP administration order. Such an order would bring into effect a special administration regime designed to allow for the continued operation of a safe and effective passenger service. The Secretary of State has the power to make the Rules of the special administration regime.

Air Traffic Centre

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place a copy of the report by the Health and Safety Executive on IT systems in operation at Swanwick and West Drayton in the Library. [70735]

Mr. Jamieson: No. There are statutory restrictions on the disclosure of information obtained by HSE in pursuance of its powers which apply to the HSE report on the IT System at Swanwick. National Air Traffic Services are working with HSE, the Civil Aviation Authority and the trade unions to resolve any issues associated with the new working environment at Swanwick.

There is no corresponding HSE report on the IT System at West Drayton air traffic control centre.

Road Deaths

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will analyse the results from Holland and other countries where traffic lights have been removed in an attempt to reduce road deaths; and if he will make a statement. [73687]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department is always interested in ways of making roads safer for all, especially for vulnerable road users, and in reducing unnecessary street furniture. My officials will be looking at the work in The Netherlands and elsewhere, and at the context in which it is being done, to see what lessons may be transferable to this country.

Traffic lights

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take powers to prevent local authorities and elected mayors from altering the timing on traffic lights other than for the purpose of improving traffic flows commensurate with safety. [72952]

Mr. Spellar: The timing of traffic signals depends on many factors, including the layout of junctions, the movements and types of vehicles to be accommodated at the junction and the proximity of junctions to each other, as well as the numbers of vehicles and pedestrians. We look to local authorities and elected mayors to provide for the safe and efficient passage of all road users and to ensure the smooth flow of traffic.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

BSE

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what legal action she will take in relation to the incident in Wales last November whereby meat from the offspring of a cow with BSE entered the human food chain. [28689]

Mr. Morley: The case has been investigated and a warning letter has been sent to the farmers concerned. Offspring cull procedures have been tightened up.

Aggregates Levy

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she plans to take to ensure that the Sustainability Fund is used to deliver environmental improvements in localities where the extractive activities incurring the aggregates levy occur. [30167]

Mr. Meacher: The Aggregates Levy Sustainability Fund will be distributed through the Countryside Agency, English Heritage, English Nature, WRAP, DTI's Construction Innovation and Research Management Programme, ODPM's Planning Research and Clean Up programmes and DfT's Freight Facilities Grant.

Of the total £58.6 million available in England over the next two years, £29.5 million has been allocated to projects designed to reduce the local effects of aggregates extraction, and £1.6 million to a local authority pilot project run by Leicestershire, Derbyshire and Somerset County Councils.

Glazebury-on-Wye Bridge

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the hon. Member for Leominster will receive a response to his letter of 29 October 2001 concerning the new flood-warning monitor at Glazebury-on-Wye bridge. [38272]

Mr. Morley: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 13 February.

Correspondence

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when her Department will answer the letter of Mr. J. C. Dixon, received on 8 November 2001, a constituent. [40846]

Mr. Morley: The Department has no record of Mr. Dixon's letter.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when he expects to reply to the letter of 29 October 2001 from the hon. Member for Leominster on behalf of a constituent, Mr. M. J. Cox. [45331]

Mr. Morley: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 13 August.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Fareham, dated 18 January, concerning his constituent Mr. Broadbridge. [45811]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 March 2002]: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 30 July.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) when she intends to write to the hon. Member for Hertsmere regarding the case of Mr. T Haworth of Radlett, as referred to in the letter from the then Minister of State in her letter of December 2000, ref. 148710; [56555]

(2) when she plans to answer the question tabled on 10 May from the hon. Member for Hertsmere, ref 56555; [64475]

(3) when she plans to reply to the question tabled on 10 May by the hon. Member for Hertsmere regarding the case of Mr. T. Haworth of Radlett, ref 56555. [73411]

Mr. Morley: My noble Friend Lord Whitty wrote to the hon. Member on 31 July with an undertaking that officials would look into Mr. Haworth's case urgently.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will answer the letter from the hon. Member for Canterbury dated 21 December 2001, ref radiation, emissions and pollution. [57783]

Mr. Meacher: I responded to the hon. Member's letter on 10 September.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) when she will reply to Mr. Bennett and Mrs. Wilcockson, constituents, regarding the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme; [61402]

(2) when she will reply to correspondence from the hon. Member for West Suffolk of October 2001 in respect of his constituents, Mr. Bennett and Mrs. Wilcockson, regarding the home energy efficiency scheme. [70449]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 18 July 2002]: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 30 July.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letters of the hon. Member for Hexham of 19 March, ref. 167263, and 21 February, ref. 167311, in respect of compensation claims for foot and mouth disease. [65543]

Mr. Morley: Responses were sent to the hon. Member on 14 and 15 August.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will respond to the letter of the hon. Member for Hexham of 7 March, ref. 167576. [65646]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: A response was sent to the hon. Member on 14 August.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will respond to the letter of the hon. Member for Hexham of 3 December 2001, ref. 160528. [65647]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: A response was sent to the hon. Member on 14 August.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the correspondence from the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed dated 15 February and 18 April concerning an outbreak of scab in Northumberland. [65095]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 2002]: A reply was sent to the right hon. Member on 30 July.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when he will respond to the letter from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan of 17 May regarding the future of farming. [67698]

Mr. Morley: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 26 July.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when he will respond to the letters from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan of 31 January, 10 April and 5 June regarding the corporate sector's role in delivering sustainable development. [67649]

Mr. Morley: The hon. Member's letters have been transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry who have responsibility for the particular issues raised.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will respond to the letters of the hon. Member for West Derbyshire of 25 February, 9 April and 23 May regarding the future of farming in the United Kingdom. [63182]

Mr. Morley: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 24 July.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter to her dated 18 June from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs. M. Wood. [72146]

Mr. Morley: A reply was sent to my right hon. Friend on 26 July.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes of 10 June about GM seeds. [71270]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 July 2002]: A response was sent to the hon. Member on 12 August.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes of 22 May concerning EU regulations on GM foods. [71271]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 July 2002]: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 29 August.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 18 and 19 March; what the Government's stance was and how it voted on each issue discussed; and if she will make a statement. [45105]

Margaret Beckett: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Agriculture Council in Brussels on 18 March.

The Council agreed by qualified majority the aid arrangements to apply to tobacco production for the years 2002–04. A welcome small reduction in, and some re-orientation of, support was agreed, but the Council as a whole was unwilling to endorse a commitment to the eventual phasing out of support to this sector. The UK made clear its continued strong opposition to supporting tobacco production and abstained in the vote.

The Council unanimously agreed proposals for aid in the nut sector. I joined several other member states in noting that the measures concerned were intended to be time-limited and that we would be unwilling to endorse any extension of them.

The Council took stock of the EU Enlargement negotiations on agriculture; and on Tuesday EU Ministers met the agriculture Ministers of the applicant countries to hear their appreciation of key issues.

Spain tabled a memorandum on the possible use of insurance as a risk management tool in agriculture and reported frost damage to some of its olive groves; Germany tabled a note on the Mid Term Review of Agenda 2000 and raised concerns about the monitoring of residues in food products imported from third countries; and France drew attention to pressures on the EU cereals markets.

GM Foods

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment was in possession of relevant data when assessing T25 maize under the genetically modified foods approval procedure; and if she will make a statement. [54344]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 7 May 2002]: The application to market T25 maize was submitted to the French competent authority under Directive 90/220/EEC in 1995. Having assessed the application and being content that all relevant data was available, the French competent authority forwarded the application to other Member States via the Commission with a favourable opinion. ACRE considered the dossier on T25 maize in June 1996 and gave their advice. Subsequently, and following a favourable opinion from the European Commission Scientific Committee on Plants, the application was approved and consent issued by the French on behalf of the EU in August 1998.

In the light of the seed listing hearing on Chardon LL, and following an open meeting of ACRE that considered issues raised during the hearing, ACRE are in the process of drafting further advice concerning T25 maize. This advice will be completed and published during the summer.

Warm Front Initiative

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what assessment she has made of the number of people experiencing delays when seeking improvements to their homes under the Warm Front initiative. [56205]

(2) what assessment she has made of the progress of the Department's Warm Front initiative; and if she will make a statement. [56204]

Mr. Meacher: The Home Energy Efficiency Scheme for England is marketed as the Warm Front Team. To date Warm Front has assisted over 350,000 households and spent over £180 million on installing measures.

The two Scheme Managers have target times for completion work. These are set at 40 days for insulation measures, and 120 days for heating measures. The table below shows the number of households receiving either a central heating system or insulation measures and the time taken from survey to completion of work:

Waiting times between 1 June 2000 and 31 March 2002

Central heating
Total number of households in sample	66,600
Waiting time less than 120 days	33,100
Waiting time greater than 120 days	33,500
Insulation
Total number of households in sample	311,200
Waiting time less than 40 days	91,900
Waiting time greater than 40 days	219,300

There is usually a period of 1–8 weeks between the date of actual installation and receipt of the invoice from installers.

The Scheme Managers provide monthly performance reports covering delivery against targets, customer care and heating capacity. There have been delays in the installation of measures under the scheme, but my Department is working closely with the Scheme Managers to address these problems.

Some applicants to the scheme have experienced delays due to the national shortage of gas heating engineers. To help address this problem my Department has funded training courses to provide additional qualified engineers to work under the scheme.

In addition, over 290,000 households receive assistance in 2001–02 against an original target of 228,000. This will also have impacted upon timelines, although it is not possible to quantify the affect at this time.

We will carry out a review of Warm Front during this financial year to look at how effective its delivery has been, the issues faced, solutions found, examples of best practice and future priorities.

Public Consultation

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the public consultations undertaken by her Department since June 2001, stating in each case the (a) number of respondents and (b) percentage of those specifically consulted who responded. [60149]

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the public consultations undertaken by her Department since 8 June 2001, indicating the (a) length and (b) number of responses received in each case. [68707]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 June 2002]: Information on public consultation processes undertaken by DEFRA is held in the public domain and can be obtained from the DEFRA website at www.defra.gov.UK. in the section titled "Consultation Exercises". Contact details regarding each consultation are provided. Responses to public consultations where the respondents have not asked for anonymity are also listed on this website page.

Further analysis of the responses to these processes could only be provided at a disproportionate cost.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much was spent on press and advertising campaigns in 2001–02; and what the planned expenditure is for 2002–03. [60901]

Mr. Morley: I refer the honourable member to my earlier replies given to him on 26 March, Official Report, columns 828–89W, and to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Alex Salmond) on 18 July, Official Report, column 474W.

The centralised budget allocation for DEFRA's Communications Directorate publicity group for the financial year 2002–03 is £4.1million.

The process of allocating funds within this budget for expenditure on media advertising and campaigns is structured to be flexible and responsive to changing priorities. Each project is evaluated, and a budget estimated and costed, on a case by case basis, except for those instances when UK statutes or EU directives require that press and advertising campaigns should be undertaken.

Sheep

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which breeds of sheep are defined by her Department as rare breeds. [61551]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 13 June 2002]: DEFRA currently uses the Rare Breeds Survival Trust Priority List for rare breeds of sheep, as defined by them under seven distinct categories. A copy of this list has been placed in the Library of the House. It is also updated and published quarterly in "The Ark", the journal of the Rare Breeds Survival Trust.

BSE in Sheep

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's response to the recommendations of the Food Standards Agency's report on BSE and Sheep, May 2002 concerning the development of a rapid diagnostic test for BSE in sheep. [64116]

Margaret Beckett: The report by the Food Standards Agency's Core Stakeholder Group is fully consistent with existing Government policy in this respect. The development of methods and tests that can distinguish between scrapie and sheep is a key focus for research.

Indeed, DEFRA has long recognised the need for a rapid test which can reliably distinguish a "BSE-like" strain of TSE agent from the strains known to represent traditional scrapie. For example, there are two different technologies being studied at the Veterinary Laboratories Agency which show some promise in this regard.

A modified version of the Western Blot is now being used (in addition to standard Histopathology and Immunohistochemistry) for statutory testing of all clinical scrapie suspects in GB and for retrospective testing of archived case material. So far, there have been no results which would suggest a "BSE-like" strain.

Work on differential testing is not limited to the UK. DEFRA also monitors and collaborates on research developments throughout the world. The European Commission's Scientific Steering Committee recently published a strategy to apply a common protocol for testing scrapie cases for BSE across Europe.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what information and instructions EU member state Governments received from the European Union in respect of the outbreak of foot and mouth in KwaZulu-Natal last year; [280]

(2) what response the Government made to information and instructions received from the European Union in respect of the outbreak of foot and mouth in KwaZulu-Natal last year. [281]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 25 June 2001]: I regret that this reply has been overlooked. The Standing Veterinary Committee (SVC) first received a report from the European Commission of an unconfirmed foot and mouth outbreak in KwaZulu-Natal on 19–20 September 2000. On 3–4 October 2000 the Commission informed the SVC of two confirmed outbreaks and tabled background information of the action taken by the South African authorities. On 18 October 2000 the SVC was informed of one further outbreak and that a Commission inspection visit to South Africa was expected to take place on 23 October 2000.

On 7–8 November 2000 the European Commission informed the SVC of the outcome of the inspection and indicated that safeguard measures may be necessary. On 17 November 2000 the Commission adopted Decision 2000/739/EC formally stopping imports of fresh meat into the Community from 16 districts in the province of KwaZulu-Natal. On 5 December 2000 the Commission informed the SVC of an outbreak in Swaziland linked to the South African outbreaks. They confirmed that no export certificates could be signed by either country. At the SVC on 20 December 2000 the Commission reported there had been no change in the situation.

As there had been no significant improvement in the situation in South Africa, the Government took a decision to take additional safeguard measures by formally stop imports of meat of FMD susceptible species.

On 5 January 2001 the Government took measures under the Products of Animal Origin (Import and Export) Regulations 1996, prohibiting fresh meat imports from all of South Africa. A note explaining the situation was sent to trade interests on 8 January 2001, as was a letter to all UK Border Inspection Posts at ports and airports. Scotland and Northern Ireland took similar action shortly afterwards.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) when the European Union converted its temporary suspension on South African meat imports into a formal import ban following the outbreak of foot and mouth in KwaZulu-Natal; and how the terms of the ban differed from those of the suspension; [213]

(2) for what period and on which products and geographical areas the European Union imposed a temporary suspension of South African livestock imports following the outbreak of foot and mouth in KwaZulu-Natal last year. [212]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 25 June 2001]: I regret that this reply has been overlooked. Technically there is no difference between a suspension and a ban.

In October 2000 the European Commission advised the Standing Veterinary Committee (SVC) that with effect from 21 September 2000, the South African authorities had stopped the issue of export certificates for fresh meat from 16 districts of the province of KwaZulu-Natal following an outbreak of foot and mouth disease. On 17 November 2000, the Commission adopted a Decision to formally stop the importation of fresh meat of foot and mouth disease susceptible species from the same 16 districts by amending the relevant Community legislation. The districts were as follows: Camperdown, Pietermaritzburg, Lions River, New Hanover, Umvoti, Kranskop, Mapumulo, Ndwedwe, Lower Tugela, Inanda, Pinetown, Durban, (including the metropolitan area of Durban), Chatsworth, Umzali, Umbumbulu and Richmond.

In August 2001, following sufficient guarantees from the South African authorities with regard to the control measures taken, some restrictions were lifted. Community restrictions remain in place in respect of the following areas:

the part of the foot-and-mouth disease control area situated in the veterinary regions of Mpumalanga and Northern provinces, in the district of Ingwavuma of the veterinary region of Natal and in the border area with Botswana east of longitude 28°, and the district of Camperdown, in the province of KwaZula-Natal.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what information the letters sent by MAFF to border inspection posts and traders after 5 January included concerning (a) foot and mouth in KwaZulu-Natal last year and (b) outbreaks in other South African provinces. [427]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 25 June 2001]: I regret that this reply has been overlooked. On 8 January 2001, traders and Border Inspection Posts (BIPs) were advised that the importation into England and Wales of fresh meat of FMD susceptible species from South Africa was prohibited unless it was produced before 15 September 2000. They were also advised that certain other products of animal origin derived from FMD susceptible species including meat products, blood and blood products, milk products and colostrum and bones, horns, hooves and products thereof may not be able to meet appropriate EU or GB certification requirements.

On 14 June 2001 a Declaration was issued in accordance with Regulation 35 of the Products of Animal Origin (Import and Export) Regulations 1996 permitting, in accordance with Community legislation, the importation into England and Wales of fresh meat of FMD susceptible species from those areas in South Africa where FMD is not present. Copies of the relevant letter to the trade and the Declaration are available on our website:

http://www.defra.gov.uk/animalh/int-trde/default.htm

On 22 June a further Declaration and letters to traders and BIPS were issued in respect of the importation from South Africa of game meat. The letters also clarified the position with regard to imports of sheep meat as a result of an error in Community legislation.

Fishing

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on the introduction of a system of individual transferable quotas across the EU. [64544]

Mr. Morley: Under the current EU rules the Total Allowable Catch for each fish stock is apportioned between Member States according to the principle of "relative stability". It is then for individual Member States to decide how the quota should be allocated to their fishing industries. We believe that this arrangement offers significant advantages in terms of flexibility and meeting the different needs of the fishing industries in different Member States. While we would, of course, consider carefully any proposal for a system of individual transferable quotas across the EU, it is not clear that such a system would yield greater benefits than the current arrangements.

Litter

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment (a) has been and (b) is planned (i) by and (ii) for her Department on the problem of litter for (A) local authority roads, (B) trunk roads and motorways, (C) railway lines and (D) canals and other waterways; and if she will make a statement. [64740]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Protection Act 1990: Code of Practice on Litter and Refuse defines standards of cleanliness for various locations and specifies periods of time within which any particular area should be returned to the appropriate standard, should it fall to a lower standard.

The Highways Agency is responsible for litter clearance on motorways and a few all-purpose trunk roads transferred under section 86(11) of the Act. All other roads are the responsibility of the local Districts and Borough Councils in respect of litter and refuse.

The managing agents and contractors employed by Highways Agency carry out daily safety patrols and weekly safety inspections on the motorways during which they also report on instances of litter accumulation. The contractor then removes litter to achieve the overall cleanliness standards set out in the Code.

The Highways Agency aims to secure continuous improvement in its routine maintenance through a move towards performance related procurement for all new contracts. One of the performance criteria of these new contracts is an environmental amenity index that examines the overall appearance of the road taking account of litter and debris, grass cutting, weed growth, cleanliness and visibility of signs.

Under the Pathfinder Programme, which I launched last year to address, amongst other local environment quality issues, ways of tackling litter in canals and other waterways, a methodology is being developed for DEFRA which allow the problem to be assessed.

It is planned that this methodology will be developed into a code of best practice for use on canals and other waterways.

I understand that Railtrack have in hand a national programme to ensure that the lineside is clear from surplus engineering material and debris by October 2002; and that systems are in place by the following month to prevent the future build-up of such material.

Radioactive Waste

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what representations she has received regarding the consultation on radioactive waste management; and if she will make a statement; [64793]

(2) what action she plans in relation to radioactive waste management; and if she will make a statement; [64730]

(3) what steps she (a) has taken and (b) plans to take to change (i) guidance and (ii) legislation relating to radioactive waste management; and if she will make a statement; [64796]

(4) what public consultation (a) has taken place and (b) is planned in relation to radioactive waste management; and if she will make a statement. [64797]

Mr. Meacher: I refer the hon. Member to the letter of 29 July from my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State. She wrote to all Members with the results of the consultation on radioactive waste management, and announced the next steps of the policy making process.

The consultation on Managing radioactive waste safely, published by the UK Government and the devolved administrations, ran from 12 September 2001 to 12 March 2002 and 330 responses were received. A summary of the responses has been placed in the Library of the House, and those of the devolved administrations. The summary lists other events during the consultation period, including recommendations from two Parliamentary Select Committees and a number of research reports. Copies of individual responses are available in my Department's Library, and in those of the relevant Departments in the devolved administrations.

In her letter, my right hon. Friend said that the Government and the devolved administrations had considered these responses and recommendations and decided the next steps in the policy process. In particular, we propose to press ahead with a review of waste management options. The review will seek the views of interested stakeholders, the public and government departments. We will appoint an independent body to oversee the review process which will make recommendations on the option, or combination of options, for managing radioactive waste which would achieve long-term protection for people and the environment. We will review all options and revise the timetable to a four stage process rather than five as proposed in the original consultation.

The review process must engage with stakeholders and the public. The review will therefore start by setting the framework for debate by establishing broad agreement on the wastes to be considered, the range of management options for each of them, and the criteria against which these options should be assessed. We want to promote a dynamic and extensive process of public engagement. This approach, coupled with regular reports to our Parliaments and Assemblies, will reach far more people and encourage active involvement in decision making, rather than occasional opportunities to react to consultation papers.

The waste from our existing nuclear facilities will arise over the next century or so. So we intend, in assessing management options, to include not only materials currently classified as waste but also to consider the consequences of providing for other materials which may have to be managed as waste during the period, such as some separated plutonium, and uranium, as well as certain quantities of spent nuclear fuel.

We propose that the new body will be in place by the end of the year. Over the summer and autumn, we shall publish more detailed proposals. These will include details of the new body and its terms of reference. They will also address pressing issues such as arrangements for managing waste safely in the short-term and an announcement on waste substitution. We shall report progress on the other issues covered in the consultation, including decommissioning nuclear sites, the powers of the Environment Agencies, managing spent sealed sources of radioactivity, and waste classification.

In the meantime we are not planning any changes to legislation or guidance on this issue.

GMOs

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Biotech Unit will update its public register on the list of trial sites where GMOs may be released to include the list of sites where winter oil seed rape was planted last autumn for research and development. [65588]

Mr. Meacher: Aventis, the consent holder, notified the Joint Regulatory Authority (Biotech Unit) of the proposed locations of trial sites for planting of winter oil seed rape last autumn on 26, 27 and 31 July 2001. In all cases the location of trial sites was added to the Public Register within 2 working days.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether (a) scientific assessments, (b) peer reviews and (c) field scale evaluations outside the formal regulatory process will be a pre-requisite for investment in new start-up companies carrying out research and development in agricultural biotechnology. [65518]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

Scientific assessment, peer review and regulatory requirements are all important factors in the normal due diligence exercise carried out by any investor in new high technology ventures.

GM Crops

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the scientific steering committee will next meet to decide locations for the farm scale evaluations of genetically modified crops. [66170]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Scientific Steering Committee considered the proposed locations of the next round of farm-scale evaluations, autumn-sown oil seed rape, by correspondence. The SSC's formal advice has been published on their web-site as previously they deliberated at length the criteria for selection during several early meetings. By the time of this year's selection, however, the process has become efficient enough to be confidently agreed by correspondence without the need for everyone to travel to a meeting.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proportion of GM crops authorised for commercial use in the United States her Department has DNA samples of; and if she will make a statement. [71253]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The Department does not hold samples of GM crops authorised for commercial use in the in the United States. GM crops are only permitted to be imported into EU countries if they also have consent under EU directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release of genetically modified organisms to the the environment. Importers must ensure that grain and seed imports have the necessary authorisation. DEFRA's GM inspectorate at the Central Scientific Laboratory (CSL) carry out audits to check compliance. CSL has the capability to perform tests to check for unauthorised GM presence as necessary. The tests look, for non-specific DNA sequences that are characteristic of the genetic modification process.

Equal Treatment

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment; and what progress has been achieved. [66731]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The Government is committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experiences of those affected by them.

Guidance on building this approach into all policy development and implementation was issued to all Divisions which now make up DEFRA. Whilst no baseline has been established since the creation of DEFRA, current consultation arrangements aim to ensure that there is no differential impact on different groups of the population such as men or women, ethnic minorities or those from particular age groups.

In addition, the Department's draft Equality Scheme required by the Race Relations (Amendment) Act, sets out the proposed actions in respect of its duties to promote equality between different racial groups.

Progress has been made in embedding awareness of the need to take account of diversity and equality not only in employment but also in delivering policies. However, there is more to be done and we are currently considering further ways to ensure that our procedures reflect these aims.

Women's Organisations

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the women's organisations which have been consulted on proposed legislation by her Department since its creation; and whether their responses have been published. [66734]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 4 July 2002]: DEFRA guidance on consultations, and that previously available in the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, stresses the importance of including in consultation exercises all relevant interest groups, including consumer and general public interest groups. Included in the list of relevant bodies in the guidance are the Women's National Commission, the Co-operative Women's Guild, the National Federation of Women's Institutes, the National Housewives Association and the Townswomen's Guilds. Other organisations are added to individual consultation exercises according to the subject matter, however no central register of all bodies consulted in a particular period is kept.

Individual responses are not generally published but can be obtained from the DEFRA library on request, for which an administrative charge is made to cover photocopying and postage.

Departmental Data

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what new data series, separated by (a) gender, (b) race, (c) disability and (d) age have been commissioned by her Department since it was created. [66730]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The June Agricultural Census collects data on employment in agriculture and horticulture broken down by gender, and the Department also runs a survey which collects information on the earnings of these workers by gender. However, no new questions were introduced with the creation of DEFRA. In 2003 a labour survey will be conducted as part of the EC farm structure surveys. This will ask questions broken down by age and gender.

DEFRA's draft Equality Scheme, required under the Race Relations (Amendment) Act, sets out the actions required to meet the duty and over time it is possible that this will lead to the commissioning of new data series on ethnicity if this is identified as being necessary.

Internally, data is collected on gender, disability, age and race. Personnel procedures which may have an impact on applicants and staff are monitored, broken down by gender race and disability and sometimes also by age. A new monitoring programme is being finalised which will take account of the requirements of the Race Relations (Amendment) Act and, as far as possible, forthcoming legislation on sexual orientation, religion and age.

Gender Impact Assessments

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the subjects of the gender impact assessments drawn up by her Department since its creation, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [66732]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Guidance on ensuring that polices and procedures are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experiences of those affected by them has been issued to all Divisions which now make up DEFRA.

The guidance requires, among other things, the preparation of an impact analysis during policy development in cases where there is a possibility of differential impact on different groups such as men and women. Whilst no formal impact assessments have been drawn up since the creation of DEFRA, current consultation arrangements ensure that a good range of organisations, including those representing women, have been contacted for their views on a wide range of issues proposals.

Swill-Feeding

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the risk to animal health from the import of pig meat and other products from countries where the animals have been fed swill. [68489]

Margaret Beckett: The risk of introduction of serious pig diseases is addressed by the European Community rules governing the import of pig meat and other products. These are designed to ensure that animals carrying disease, however it may have been transmitted, cannot be slaughtered and sent for export to member states.

Committee Mandates

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the Adaptation to Technical and Scientific Progress and Implementation of the Directive on the Deliberate Release into the Environment of Genetically Modified Organisms is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68548]

Mr. Meacher: The European Commission has not set a date for the next meeting of the regulatory committee established under Directive 2001–2018/EC on the deliberate release into the environment of genetically modified organisms.

The committee comprises representatives from member states, and the UK is usually represented by an official from this department. DEFRA is the UK lead department for international relations on these matters. The devolved administrations are fully involved in the preparation for regulatory committee discussions, and in any relevant follow-up work arising from them.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of the Directive on procedures for the surveillance and monitoring of environments concerned by waste from the titanium dioxide industry is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68564]

Mr. Meacher: The role of the Committee, which is set out in Article 10 of the Council Directive 82/882/EEC (OJ L 378, 31/12/1982, p. 1), is to give its opinion on any measures proposed by the Commission which are necessary to adapt the Decision's provisions to technical or scientific progress. This Committee has not met for more than 5 years and there are no meetings scheduled. Therefore the most recent meeting predated the establishment of the Scottish Executive in 1999, and potential UK representation has not been addressed. In the event of any meeting being scheduled, officials in this Department would, as a matter of course, liaise with their counterparts in the Scottish Executive.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the overseas trips on departmental business that have been undertaken in each of the last five years by officials in her Department; and what the (a) cost, (b) purpose and (c) result was in each case. [68733]

Mr. Morley: All overseas travel by officials in my Department is undertaken in accordance with the principles set in Chapter 8 of the Civil Service Management Code, and the detailed rules and guidance are set out in our Departmental staff handbook.

The detailed information requested about individual trips is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Nitrate Vulnerable Zone

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the administrative and regulatory costs to the Environment Agency of designating (a) 55 per cent. and (b) 100 per cent. of England as a nitrate vulnerable zone. [68103]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 10 July 2002]: Following a detailed consideration of all the issues raised during the consultation process, the Government announced on 27 June that it intends to adopt the targeted approach, and designate 55 per cent. of England as Nitrate Vulnerable Zones (NVZs).

The Environment Agency is in the process of assessing the costs and resources required for administering and enforcing the new designations under the Nitrates Directive. Initial indications are that both options cost around £2 million each, excluding costs arising from staff training and resolving boundary disputes. This similarity between costs arises because even if the whole territory had been designated, the Agency would have adopted the same priority based approach to enforcement that it will be using in the newly designated areas.

Illegal Timber Imports

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the illegal importation of timber from the Amazon basin. [69487]

Mr. Meacher: Imports of illegally logged timber can only be seized at import by HM Customs and Excise where the timber concerned is covered by the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) and can be identified as having been imported in breach of its requirements. The same is true of other Member States of the EU. Thus, even if producing countries establish independent verification of legal compliance with chain-of-custody tracking to ensure timber was legally or illegally logged, Customs cannot seize or reject imports of illegally logged timber unless they are covered by CITES. New EU-wide legislation is needed to empower customs authorities to prevent entry of illegally logged timber. The UK is working within the EU to identify what legislation is needed and how it can be introduced.

Waste

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste list published in February 2001 will come into force in the United Kingdom. [69234]

Mr. Meacher: The UK will implement the European Waste Catalogue which now incorporates the Hazardous Waste List as part of its review of the Special Waste Regulations. A second round of consultation on the review will take place later this year and amended regulations are likely to come into force during 2003.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her estimate is for disposal of waste by landfill for each London borough in (a) the current year and (b) each of the last five years; and what her Department's prediction is for 2003–04. [71111]

Mr. Meacher: Estimates on the disposal of waste by landfill are collected from London boroughs in the Department's annual Municipal Waste Management Survey. Four year's results from 1996–97 to 1999–2000 are set out in the table below. The latest data for 2000–01 will become available in August.

In view of local authority recycling and composting targets and the forthcoming Landfill Directive targets to reduce the amount of biodegradable waste to landfill, we would expect to see disposal to landfill by local authorities to begin to decline over the next few years.

UA—Unitary Authority

WDA—Waste Disposal Authority

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her estimate is of the available landfill waste disposal capacity for London boroughs; and if she plans to increase capacity. [71112]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The availability of landfill capacity is a commercial matter for waste management companies. It is however recognised that suitable sites for landfill in the south-east of England are diminishing and planning authorities should take this into account. While the Government accepts that landfill has a part to play in waste disposal, it believes that the re-use, recycling and recovery of waste offers a much more sustainable future.

Reprocessing

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the capacity is in the United Kingdom for the reprocessing of (a) paper, (b) wood and (c) plastic. [69116]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP) estimates that the UK capacity for the recycling of paper, wood and plastic is as follows:

Paper

Recycling Options	2001 est. (Kt)
Newsprint	1320
Packaging	2600
Other grades e.g. tissue	Tbc
	3920

Wood

Capacity and utilisation estimates for the UK. Sources: Timber Packaging and Pallet Confederation (TIMCON), Wood Recyclers Assocation (WRA), Wood Panel Industries Federation (WPIF) and The Composting Association (TCA).

Recycling Options	2001 actual (Kt)	Est. capacity 2002 (Kt)
Panel board manufacturing	675	750
Other mechanical recycling	30	50
Composting	65	80

Note:
The forecast capacities for 2002 are derived from current industry estimates that are based on prevailing economic circumstances and the availability of wood waste (predominantly packaging material) that is suitable for recycling. The actual infrastructure is capable of consuming more wood waste but its further uptake is constrained by economic and technical barriers.

Plastics

Capacity and utilisation estimates for the UK. Source British Plastic Federation (BPF)—Recycling Council (RC).

Recycling stages	Capacity (Kt)	Utilisation (Kt)
Washing	45	17
Shred/granulate	400	200
melt process	400	250

Note:
The utilisation level is subject to market conditions as virgin or other non recycled material can replace recycled material if it becomes cheap enough or availability of recycled drops off.

The figures are derived from a market study recently delivered to WRAP for which the analysis of results is incomplete. Therefore, the information should be treated as indicative only. More detailed estimates will be generated in due course.

Consultation

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many consultation documents published in 2001 in (a) electronic and (b) printed form her Department has monitored and evaluated in accordance with the Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultations. [69848]

Mr. Morley: All consultations were available in both electronic and printed form. Each was monitored and evaluated against key criteria set out in the Code of Practice on Written Consultations and which formed part of our annual report to Cabinet Office. Information was gathered on the number of consultations undertaken, periods given for responses, how responses were analysed, the level of complaints received about the consultation process, whether written consultations were supplemented by additional public involvement and examples of consultations that had a direct influence on policy or service delivery.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the deadline is for adoption of the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste List into UK law. [69747]

Mr. Meacher: The European Waste Catalogue which now incorporates the Hazardous Waste List came into force in January 2002. It will be implemented in the UK as part of the current review of the Special Waste Regulations. Amended Regulations are likely to come into force in the UK during 2003.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to issue special waste carriers licences to transport end-of-life electrical items that have been reclassified as hazardous waste. [70273]

Mr. Meacher: A licence is not required for the transport of hazardous waste although since 1991 and in accordance with the EC Waste Framework Directive, waste carriers must be registered with the Environment Agency.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the new definitions of waste under the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste list require all end-of-life electrical products to be reclassified as hazardous waste. [70563]

Mr. Meacher: Electrical or electronic equipment must contain hazardous components for them to be classified as hazardous under the European Waste Catalogue. Hazardous components may include accumulators and batteries containing lead, nickel/cadmium or mercury; mercury switches, and glass from cathode ray tubes and other activated glass, CFC or HCFC.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether retailers will be able to continue to offer take-back of end-of-life electrical products through their home delivery networks when this is reclassified as hazardous waste. [70730]

Mr. Meacher: Electrical or electronic equipment will be classified as hazardous waste only if it has hazardous components. We are aware that retailers are concerned that the reclassification may have implications for their take-back schemes and we are looking at ways of minimising any impact.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate has been made of the cost to small businesses of the European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste list. [70731]

Mr. Meacher: The changes to the hazardous waste list, which is now incorporated within the European Waste Catalogue, are likely to lead to increased costs for hazardous waste disposal for many small businesses. A regulatory impact assessment estimating these costs will be published with the forthcoming consultation paper on the review of the UK Special Waste Regulations.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what information the Government have given to (a) retailers, (b) manufacturers, (c) local authorities and (d) the waste sector on the revision of the hazardous waste list. [70776]

Mr. Meacher: The changes to the hazardous waste list are to be implemented through a Review of the Special Waste Regulations. We issued a consultation paper containing proposed changes in March 2001. We expect to issue a second consultation paper with draft regulations, which will provide more information, in the next few months. We will consider what additional, more detailed guidance will be required for particular sectors.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what restrictions will be imposed on retailers for handling and storing end-of-life electrical products that have been reclassified as electrical waste. [70775]

Mr. Meacher: Electrical or electronic equipment will be classified as hazardous waste only if it has hazardous components. We are aware that retailers are concerned that the reclassification may have implications for their take-back schemes and we are looking at ways of minimising any impact.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste list will provide that retailers' special waste licences will require them to store end-of-life electrical items at places where they will be reclassified as hazardous waste. [71358]

Mr. Meacher: We are aware that retailers are concerned that the reclassification of some electrical items as hazardous may have implications for their storage. We are looking at ways of minimising any impact and will include our recommendations in the forthcoming consultation paper on the review of the UK Special Waste Regulations.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she has taken to ensure that civic amenity sites will be able to continue accepting end-of-life electrical products if they are reclassified as hazardous waste. [71688]

Mr. Meacher: The Spending Review announced on 15 July that additional money would be available to local authorities via the EPCS block in future years. This will enable local authorities to make any modifications to the licence for a civic amenity site that may be necessary. We are aware that local authorities have some concerns about the implementation domestically of the European Waste Catalogue and we are looking at ways of minimising any impact.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the deadline is for adoption of the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste list into UK law; when it will come into force in the United Kingdom; and what estimate has been made of the cost to small businesses when the European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste List comes into force in the UK. [72002]

Mr. Meacher: The European Waste Catalogue, which incorporates the Hazardous Waste List, came into force in January 2002. It will be implemented in the UK as part of the current review of the Special Waste Regulations. Amended Regulations are likely to come into force in the UK during 2003. The changes are likely to lead to increased costs for hazardous waste disposal for many small businesses. A regulatory impact assessment estimating these costs will be published with the forthcoming consultation paper on the review of the UK Special Waste Regulations.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste List will require retailers to have special waste licences to offload and store end-of-life electrical items at stores, depots and yards where they are reclassified as hazardous waste. [71690]

Mr. Meacher: Electrical or electronic equipment will be classified as hazardous waste only if it has hazardous components. We are aware that retailers are concerned that the reclassification may have implications for their take-back schemes and we are looking at ways of minimising any impact. Our recommendations will be outlined in the consultation paper published as part of the current review of the UK Special Waste Regulations.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what information the Government have given to (a) retailers, (b) manufacturing, (c) local authorities and (d) the waste sector on the revision of the hazardous waste list. [71691]

Mr. Meacher: The changes to the hazardous waste list are to be implemented through a Review of the Special Waste Regulations. We issued a consultation paper containing proposed changes in March 2001. We expect to issue a second consultation paper with draft regulations, which will provide more information, in the next few months. We will consider what additional, more detailed guidance will be required for particular sectors.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste List on UK business. [72004]

Mr. Meacher: The changes to the hazardous waste list, which is now incorporated within the European Waste Catalogue, are likely to lead to increased costs for hazardous waste disposal for many businesses. A regulatory impact assessment estimating these costs will be published with the forthcoming consultation paper on the review of the UK Special Waste Regulations.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the new definitions of waste under the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste List require all end-of-life electrical products to be reclassified as hazardous waste. [72005]

Mr. Meacher: Electrical or electronic equipment must contain hazardous components for them to be classified as hazardous under the European Waste Catalogue. Hazardous components may include accumulators and batteries containing lead, nickel/cadmium or mercury; mercury switches, and glass from cathode ray tubes and other activated glass, CFC or HCFC.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received from (a) local authorities, (b) retailers and (c) waste management companies about the impact of the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste List on the UK's disposal and recycling infrastructure. [72021]

Mr. Meacher: We have had informal exchanges with all these stakeholders and are aware of their concerns. We will shortly be consulting on the current review of the UK Special Waste Regulations and will ensure all these groups are fully involved.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether retailers will be able to continue to offer take-back of end-of-life electrical products through their home delivery networks when this is reclassified as hazardous waste; and what plans she has to issue special waste carriers' licences to transport end-of-life electrical items that have been reclassified as hazardous waste. [72003]

Mr. Meacher: Electrical or electronic equipment will be classified as hazardous waste only if it has hazardous components. We are aware that retailers are concerned that the reclassification may have implications for their take-back schemes and we are looking at ways of minimising any impact. Irrespective of this, a licence is not required for the transport of hazardous waste although since 1991 and in accordance with the EC Waste Framework Directive, waste carriers must be registered with the Environment Agency.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what restrictions will be imposed on retailers in handling and storing end-of-life electrical products that have been reclassified as hazardous waste. [71689]

Mr. Meacher: We are aware that retailers are concerned that the reclassification of some electrical items as hazardous may have implications for their handling and storage. We are looking at ways of minimising any impact and will include our recommendations in the forthcoming consultation paper on the review of the UK Special Waste Regulations.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what types of waste previously not hazardous waste will be reclassified as hazardous waste; and what assessment she has made of the effect on disposal routes of the reclassification of waste as hazardous. [71687]

Mr. Meacher: The European Hazardous Waste List (94/904/EC) has recently been extensively revised, and over 200 additions have been made. It will be transposed into UK law as part of the current review of the UK Special Waste Regulations. The most significant additions include end-of-life vehicles containing hazardous liquids or components, electrical equipment containing CFC/HCFC/HFC (fridges/freezers), and the following items if they contain hazardous substances: electrical equipment, contaminated soils, insulation materials, and bottom ash.

Reclassification of waste as hazardous will restrict its disposal via landfill to those sites classified as landfill sites for hazardous waste by the Environment Agency. Landfill site operators should have submitted site conditioning plans (required by 16 July) detailing what classification they are seeking for their site. It is still too early to assess what hazardous waste capacity will be available after 16 July but the waste management industry have informed us that they do not foresee a shortfall.

Mooring (British Waterways)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the (a) highest and (b) lowest residential mooring annual charge in London was in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 2001–02. [70144]

Mr. Meacher: British Waterways have provided the following information for these charges:

	1997	2001
Highest	£2,645	£7,050
Lowest	£1,346	£1,506

Prices shown are for a 21 metre vessel inclusive of VAT. Historic data for private operators is not available.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average increase in mooring rates charged by British Waterways was for each region in England in each year since 1997. [70148]

Mr. Meacher: British Waterways have provided the following information. Average percentage increases by region in 2002, were:

North West 7.6 per cent.

North East 2.7 per cent.

Midlands 4.6 per cent.

Southern 10.4 per cent.

London 8 per cent.

The information is not readily available in this form for earlier years.

Project Clearwater

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the terms of reference are of British Waterways Project Clearwater. [70147]

Mr. Meacher: Project Clearwater is British Waterway's IT modernisation strategy which secured Departmental approval earlier this year. The project provides a business management system to improve BW's efficiency and to enhance its customer service.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what consultation has been carried out by British Waterways on their latest review of mooring charges. [70150]

Mr. Meacher: British Waterways have advised that a national review of mooring rates was formally announced in December 2001, following routine consultation meetings and exchanges with national user groups representing boating interests.

A number of national user groups wished to see the previous "matrix score" pricing system retained. Their views were carefully considered, but BW took the view that the matrix did not allow sufficient flexibility for comparison to the private sector and market demand.

All BW moorers were sent details of the increases and the policy underlying them in February. A minimum period of six weeks was allowed for feedback. BW have held discussions with individual boaters and in some cases, have postponed the renewal of mooring permits to allow additional time for consideration.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what criteria are applied by British Waterways in determining a market rent for residential and non-residential moorings. [70149]

Mr. Meacher: British Waterways' Framework Document requires it to charge a market rate for its services as far as practicable. British Waterway's local waterway management units maintain data about all moorings in the area, both those owned by BW and by others. Comparison of this data, together with an assessment of market trends, informs decisions on setting rates.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what average price for (a) residential and (b) non-residential moorings was charged by British Waterways in each region in England in 2001–02. [70143]

Mr. Meacher: British Waterways have advised that since the majority of their residential moorings are concentrated in London, they do not normally compile this data by region. The average charge for a residential mooring for a 21 metre boat in London in 2001–02 was £2,647. The average charge for a non-residential mooring was £2,079.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average percentage change has been in residential and non-residential mooring fees in London since 1997; and what average percentage change is planned for 2002–03. [70145]

Mr. Meacher: British Waterways have provided the following information. The average rate based on the number of customers is set out below.

	1997 actual	2001 actual	2002–03 planned
Residential	£1,797	£2,715	£3,285
Non residential	£1,919	£2,797	£2,943

Prices shown are for a 21 metre vessel inclusive of VAT.

This includes data relating to new sites established since 1997. Rates for these sites have been set at relative market rates and have resulted in an increase in average mooring rates. The percentage change since 1997 is 47.7 per cent. The mooring rates for 2002–03 will result in a percentage change of 8 per cent. Historic data for private operators is not available.

Plastic Waste

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research her Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the health effects on (i) humans, (ii) animals and (iii) plants caused by the disposal of plastic products. [70259]

Mr. Meacher: Research in this area concentrates on the health effects of waste management in general, rather than being related to specific materials in the waste stream.

The Environment Agency is currently undertaking various projects to improve knowledge of the health impacts of waste management options (including incineration, landfill and waste recovery facilities) and is looking into the development and use of Health Impact Assessments.

My Department recently hosted a seminar to consider where there are gaps in the research on health impacts of all waste management options and to help prioritise future research. Conducting such research will allow local authorities and others to make more informed choices about the range, type and location of facility they wish to operate.

Bushmeat Trade

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations she has received from Mr. Clive Laurence from Ciel Logistics; and if her officials intend to meet him to discuss the illegal trade in bushmeat. [70308]

Mr. Meacher: DEFRA Ministers have not received any recent representations from Mr. Laurence. He met with the Head of our Illegal Imports Team on 31 May to discuss illegal meat imports generally and the use of x-ray technology specifically. Mr. Laurence was invited to provide relevant evidence of illegal trade in bushmeat to the disease risk assessment that is currently being carried out by the Veterinary Laboratories Agency as part of the Governments' action plan to tackle illegal imports.

EU Waste Regulations

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste List on UK business. [70272]

Mr. Meacher: The changes to the hazardous waste list, which is now incorporated within the European Waste Catalogue, are likely to lead to increased costs for hazardous waste disposal for many businesses. A regulatory impact assessment estimating these costs will be published with the forthcoming consultation paper on the review of the UK Special Waste Regulations.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Advisory Committee on waste management is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [70577]

Mr. Meacher: The most recent EU Advisory Committee on Waste Management was held on 27 March 2002. The committee convenes approximately every 6 months. Dates have not been finalised for the next scheduled meeting.

UK representation varies according to the agenda for each meeting and may include members of the Scottish Executive and other devolved administrations where there are items of sufficient interest.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 4 July 2002, Official Report, column 607W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical and scientific progress of the Directive on the prevention and reduction of environmental pollution by asbestos; and if she will make a statement. [73181]

Mr. Meacher: The EU Committee for the adaptation to technical and scientific progress of the Directive on the prevention and reduction of environmental pollution by asbestos has not met since the establishment of the Scottish Executive, so its officials have never attended it.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 606W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee on the Directive on packaging and packaging waste; and if she will make a statement. [73177]

Mr. Meacher: The devolved administrations are kept fully informed of the work of the Committee and may send experts to the meetings if they wish. In this case, the Scottish Executive has judged its interests to be adequately covered by the representation from DTI and DEFRA. The representatives from the DTI and DEFRA on the Committee advance UK interests, and negotiating lines are agreed in advance between the departments and the devolved administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 69W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee on the implementation of the Directive establishing a Community policy regarding water; and if she will make a statement. [73170]

Mr. Meacher: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 69W. Since this committee has never met, members of the Scottish Executive have not attended any meetings.

However, other meetings to consider aspects of implementation of the Water Framework Directive have taken place. Representatives from the Scottish Executive regularly attend meetings of the Water Directors of member states. Of late, this group's work has concentrated on the Water Framework Directive. It last met in Valencia on 10–12 June 2002 and a representative of the Scottish Executive attended. Scottish Executive officials also attend meetings of the Strategic Co-ordination Group on the implementation of the Water Framework Directive. This group last met on 29–30 April 2002 in Brussels and the UK team included a representative of the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 11 July 2002, Official Report, column 1124W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Management Committee for Fisheries Products; and if she will make a statement. [73171]

Mr. Morley: The Scottish Executive has been represented at all of the meetings which took place in the last year.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 11 July 2002, Official Report, column 124W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Management Committee for the fisheries and aquaculture sector; and if she will make a statement. [73182]

Mr. Morley: In the last six months, the Scottish Executive has been represented at 3 of the 6 meetings which took place.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 8 July 2002, Official Report, column 691W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee for the implementation of legislation on ambient air quality assessment and management; and if she will make a statement. [73291]

Mr. Meacher: There have been no meetings of this committee so the attendance of members of the Scottish Executive would not have arisen.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 8 July 2002, Official Report, column 691W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Advisory Committee for the implementation of the directive on the reduction of the sulphur content of certain liquid fuels; and if she will make a statement. [73290]

Mr. Meacher: The answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 691W, said that there had been no meetings of this committee in the last 12 months. That is incorrect: there was a meeting in April 2002. That was the first and only meeting of the committee. No members of the Scottish Executive attended that meeting.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 3 July 2002, Official Report, columns 368–369W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee for the adaptation to scientific and technical progress of the directive on water intended for human consumption; and if she will make a statement. [73295]

Mr. Meacher: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to the hon. Member for Buckingham on 10 June, Official Report, column 915–916W.

A representative of the Scottish Executive attended meetings held in November 2001 and in April 2002 of the Committee established under Article 12 of the Drinking Water Directive 1998.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 9 July 2002, Official Report, column 842W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee for the adaptation to scientific and technical progress of the Directive on protection of waters against pollution caused by nitrates from agricultural sources; and if she will make a statement. [73173]

Mr. Morley: In the period from September 2001 (the start of the new session) to date, Scottish Executive officials did not attend any of these meetings

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 371W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Management Committee of the common organisations of agricultural markets for pigmeat; and if she will make a statement. [73178]

Mr. Morley: To date, no members of the Scottish Executive have attended the EU Management Committee of the common organisations of agricultural markets for pigmeat.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 26 June 2002, Official Report, column 914W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee on geographical indications and protected designations of origin for agricultural products and foodstuffs; and if she will make a statement. [73292]

Mr. Morley: Members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee on geographical indications and protected designations of origin 6 times within the last 5 years.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 26 June 2002, Official Report, column 914W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee on conservation, characterisation, collection and utilisation of genetic resources in agriculture; and if she will make a statement. [73293]

Mr. Morley: To date, no members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of this Committee.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer of 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 248W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Management Committee of the common organisations of agricultural markets for sheep and goats; and if she will make a statement. [73176]

Mr. Morley: In the period from September 2001 (the start of the new session) to date, Scottish Executive officials have attended 3 of these meetings.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs with regard to the answer of 26 June 2002, Official Report, column 913W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Implementation Committee for Spirit Drinks; and if she will make a statement. [73296]

Mr. Morley: The Spirit Drinks Implementation Committee (SDIC) is mandated by Council Regulation 1576/89 and is responsible for the general rules on the definition, description and presentation of spirit drinks as laid down in that Regulation.

UK representation on SDIC meetings is determined according to the agenda items that are proposed for discussion and can include members of the Scottish Executive and other devolved administrations. Following consultation with devolved administrations about each SDIC agenda so far, it has been agreed that Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs alone would represent UK interests.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 370W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee on certificates of specific character for agricultural products and foodstuffs; and if she will make a statement. [73179]

Mr. Morley: Members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee on certificates of specific character once within the last 5 years.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 248W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Management Committee of the common organisations of agricultural markets for beef and veal; and if she will make a statement. [73175]

Mr. Meacher: The UK delegation to the Committee for the adaptation to scientific and technical progress on the EC Nitrates Directive ("the Article 9 committee") included officials from the Scottish Executive on the 26 October 1999 (12 meeting), 6 December 2001 (15 meeting) and 17 June 2002 (16 meeting).

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Standing Committee for Foodstuffs is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [70567]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

The Standing Committee for Food was replaced by the Standing Committee on Animal Health and the Food Chain (Section: Food Safety and Controls) from 21 February 2002, by virtue of EP/Council Regulation 178/2002. The United Kingdom is represented on this Committee by officials, usually from the Food Standards Agency (FSA) and the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA). The Scottish Executive is regularly consulted on, and is fully involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with both the FSA and DEFRA on the formulation of European Union policy which touches on matters which fall within the responsibilities of the Scottish Executive. Representatives of the Scottish Executive may attend as part of the UK delegation, should the subject matter require this. The Standing Committee is next due to meet on 11/12 September 2002.

Livestock Movements

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will place in the Library the latest scientific advice that she has received on the justification for the 20-day rule on livestock movements. [70112]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 16 July 2002]: A paper explaining the veterinary basis for the Interim Movements Regime, including the 20-day standstill, was placed in the Library on 7 February 2002 (Number 02/276 and has also been published on the DEFRA website (www.defra.gov.uk/footandmouth).

This is currently being reviewed following discussions with representatives of the cattle and sheep veterinary societies. We will also take into account the recommendations of the Royal Society and Anderson inquiry reports on this issue. We will shortly publish an updated paper outlining the latest scientific and veterinary advice.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations she has received from the Sheep Veterinary Society about the 20-day rule. [71646]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The Sheep Veterinary Society have written to DEFRA officials suggesting that the 20-day standstill could be replaced by a 5-day standstill.

Land Disposals

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many parcels of land have been identified by the Forestry Commission for disposal in England; how many have been the subject of agreement offers to the local planning authority to secure continued access to the land; how many have been sold; and how many of those sold were subject to access agreements in each year since 1997. [70042]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 July 2002]: The Forestry Commission has freedom to sell some woodlands due to their relatively small size and location, as part of the continuous process of rationalisation of its estate. This process involves the acquisition of land which will contribute to the Commission's wide-ranging objectives, as well as the sale of certain areas.

In all sales cases, the Forestry Commission notifies the relevant Local Authority when an area of woodland is to be sold. The information concerning Forestry Commission woodland sales and Continued Public Access Agreements (CPA) in England, for each year since 1997, is therefore as follows:

Financial Year	Number of woodlands identified for sale	Number of woodlands sold	CPA Offered	CPA Accepted
1997–98	16	52[1]	29	8
1998–99	3	30	13	3
1999–2000	10	11	8	0
2000–01	11	17	5	1
2001–02	8	18	3	0
Total[1]	137	128	58	12

[1]At the start of Financial Year 1997–98, the Forestry Commission had a total of 89 woodlands already identified for sale.

Disposal And Recycling

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received from (a) local authorities, (b) retailers and (c) waste management companies about the impact of the revised European Waste Catalogue and Hazardous Waste list on the UK's disposal and recycling infrastructure. [70610]

Mr. Meacher: We have had informal exchanges with all these stakeholders and are aware of their concerns. We will shortly be consulting on the current review of the UK Special Waste Regulations and will ensure all these groups are fully involved.

GM Crop Trials

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the conclusions were of the GM crop trials in Herefordshire. [71027]

Mr. Meacher: The results of the farm-scale evaluations will be not be published until data from all trial sites has been collated. Results for spring sown crops (maize, beet spring oil seed rape) should be available in summer 2003 and results of winter oil seed rape in 2004.

Chromate Copper Arsenate-treated Wood

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions

she has had with the Secretary of State for Health regarding the safety of CCA pressure treated wood. [69638]

Mr. Meacher: The European Commission has drawn up proposals under the Marketing and Use Directive (76/769/EEC) to prohibit the use of CCA wood preservatives, but with derogations to allow continued use in a number of essential areas where human contact is limited. Draft proposals are currently being considered by Member States and discussions on the content of the proposal have taken place between officials from Department of Health, DTI who represent the views of the construction industry/consumers and HSE who regulate wood preservative products under the Control of Pesticide Regulations (1986).

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations her Department has received regarding risk assessments of CCA pressure treated wood her Department has performed. [69637]

Mr. Meacher: The Department has not carried out any risk assessment of wood pretreated with copper/chrome/arsenic (CCA) wood preservative.

In the UK wood preservative products are regulated under the Control of Pesticide Regulations (1986) and the Health and Safety Executive lead on such non-agricultural pesticides. CCA is approved for use in products for pressure impregnation at industrial sites. This follows the advice to Ministers from the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides (ACP) that such products do not present any risk to human health or the environment.

Recently an expert advisory committee to the European Commission the Scientific Committee on Toxicity, Ecotoxicity and the Environment (SCTEE) has reviewed the safety of wood treated with this preservative and has concluded that there may be a risk to health of children from the use of such treated timber in playground equipment and also when treated wood is burnt or disposed.

The European Commission has drawn up proposals under the Marketing and Use Directive to prohibit the use of CCA wood preservatives, but with derogations to allow continued use in a number of essential areas where human contact is limited. Draft proposals are currently being considered by Member States.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures her Department has undertaken to prevent the household burning of arsenic-treated waste wood. [69636]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 17 July 2002]: The Clean Air Act 1993 prohibits the use of unauthorised fuel (such as wood and bituminous coal) in domestic grates in houses located in designated smoke control areas. Some closed domestic stoves are permitted for use in smoke control areas to burn specific types of wood, which are usually specified as firewood or wood or untreated dry wood.

The EU Scientific Committee on Toxicity, Ecotoxicity and the Environment has recently advised that there may be a risk to human health when wood treated with copper/chrome/arsenic (CCA) wood preservative is burnt. The European Commission has therefore drawn up proposals under the Marketing and Use Directive to prohibit the use of CCA wood preservatives, except for a limited number of essential areas where human contact is limited. Draft proposals are currently being considered by Member States and will form the basis of harmonised European Community controls on CCA.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations her Department has received regarding the (a) incineration and (b) landfill disposal of chromate copper arsenate pressure treated wood and its effects on (i) air and (ii) water pollution levels. [69635]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 17 July 2002]: I am not aware that the Department has received any representations regarding wood pressure treated with chromate copper arsenate. Any question of the incineration or landfill of these chemicals or any evaluation of the environmental impacts of imported chemicals or pressure treated wood would be a matter for the Environment Agency, who control disposal facilities for hazardous waste.

However, the UK has agreed to take back chromated copper arsenate waste from Djibouti. This waste resulted from a huge leakage at the dockside in Djibouti, and is being taken back on environmental and humanitarian grounds, as Djibouti does not have facilities to dispose of such waste.

EU Directive on Environmental Liability

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact on (a) British business and (b) the public sector of the draft EU Directive on environmental liability. [70841]

Margaret Beckett: The draft Directive was adopted by the Commission in January 2002 and DEFRA launched a public consultation on the proposals on April 12. Extensive study has been carried out throughout this period to assess the impact of the draft Directive. Through direct consultation with a selection of stakeholders, and using the responses received to the public consultation, DEFRA recently produced an extended partial Regulatory Impact Assessment (COM (02) 17) which considers the potential benefits and costs of the draft Directive.

The assessment indicates that much of the environmental damage that would fall within the scope of the proposed regime is already subject to existing domestic legislation. It does suggest however, that the proposed Directive could have additional positive environmental benefits, by requiring higher standards of remediation and by encouraging operators to take additional precaution. Businesses could face additional costs through, amongst other things, possible financial security requirements, and additional expenditure on precautionary measures. Additional study is being carried out in this area in order to quantify such costs.

In requiring higher standards of remediation, the responsibilities of the Competent Authority, which is designated by the Member State to require operators to take preventative or restorative measures, would be increased. Under the Commission's proposal, the Competent Authority would have a duty to take action to remedy damage if the liable party could not be found. A preliminary assessment provided by selected enforcement agencies indicates that the Directive would largely constitute an extension of existing responsibilities although there would be some new duties. Therefore there may be some resource implications.

The Government supports a regime which is equitable, proportionate, clear, insurable, easy to implement, does not damage business competitiveness, and delivers clear environmental benefits. Consequently, assessment of the potential impact of the draft Directive is ongoing to inform the UK position in the negotiations.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's policy towards the draft EU Directive on environmental liability. [70840]

Margaret Beckett: The purpose of the proposed Directive is to establish a framework for the prevention and remediation of environmental damage in accordance with the principle that the polluter pays. This represents an important and significant development in EC environmental law. The Government has therefore conducted a public consultation on the proposals, and the UK position on the detail of the proposal will be finalised in the light of the comments received.

In broad terms, the Government supports a regime which is equitable, proportionate, clear, insurable, easy to implement, does not damage business competitiveness, and delivers clear environmental benefits.

The partial regulatory impact assessment submitted to Parliament (COM (02) 17), indicates that much of the environmental damage covered by the Directive is already the subject of existing domestic regimes, but the proposals go further in some respects. The Directive would set higher standards of remediation and introduce the concepts of equivalent compensation and interim losses. Further benefits would arise from introducing a regime across the European Community which would harmonise the rules and standards for environmental liability across member states. Provided that the right balance between costs and benefits is achieved, this proposal could therefore play a useful part in safeguarding the environment.

Technetium-99 Leakage

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what representations her Department has received regarding (a) leakage levels of technetium-99 into groundwater at Sellafield and (b) the point source origin of such leakage; [69633]

(2) what representations her Department has received regarding the effect on the food chain of technetium-99 leakage into groundwater. [69634]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 17 July 2002]: My Department has not received any representations on these issues.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessement she has made of the possible environmental policy gains that would arise from the implementation of the draft EU Directive on environmental liability. [70834]

Margaret Beckett: The extended partial Regulatory Impact Assessment, submitted to Parliament (COM (02) 17) considers the potential gains that would arise from implementation of the draft Directive. It concludes that much of the environmental damage covered within the scope of the proposed Directive is already subject to a number of domestic regimes.

However, the assessment does establish that there could potentially be positive environmental benefits, resulting in particular from the setting of higher standards of remediation that would require more extensive remediative action. Furthermore, the introduction of equivalent remediation, which would require restorative action to be carried out at an alternative site, and the concept of compensation for interim losses would go further than existing legislation.

Additional benefits could result from an increase in preventative action by those carrying out potentially damaging activities. Consequently, less environmental damage may occur.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will place in the Library copies of responses to the Government's public consultation on the draft EU Directive on environmental liability. [70837]

Margaret Beckett: The public consultation on proposals for a Directive on environmental liability ended on 24 May 2002 and a study has been undertaken of all of the responses received. The responses helped to inform the UK position at the June Environment Council and the extended partial Regulatory Impact Assessment.

Copies of all responses to the Government's public consultation have been placed in the DEFRA library.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects the Council of Ministers next to debate the draft EU Directive on Environmental Liability [70842]

Margaret Beckett: We expect the Council to discuss the draft Directive on environmental liability in October. The indications are that if this occurs, discussion will centre on a progress report.

Sewage

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the Government's policy is on recycling sewage sludge on land as an environmentally sustainable option; when the revised regulations will be available for consultation; and if she will make a statement. [71304]

Mr. Meacher: As stated in its Waste Strategy 2000, the Government considers that recovering value from sewage sludge through spreading on agricultural land is the best practicable environmental option in most circumstances. Agricultural use of sludge brings savings of several million pounds in fertiliser costs and the organic matter improves soil structure, its workability and water holding capacity.

The Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989 (SI 1263) as amended in 1990 (SI 880), impose controls on the application of sludge to agricultural land to prevent the accumulation of heavy metals in the soil and to prevent bacteriological contamination of crops. These controls are supplemented by a non-statutory Code of Practice and the "Safe Sludge Matrix" a voluntary agreement drawn up in 1998 by Water UK (representing the water companies) and the British Retail Consortium.

The Government welcomes the development of the Matrix and has indicated that it will reflect the tighter standards it contains in revised regulations. We plan to issue a consultation document seeking views on the proposed revisions in the very near future.

French Beef Ban

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has made to other member states of the European Union since the refusal of the French Government to lift the ban on the import of UK beef within the 15 day period set down by the European Court. [70632]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 18 July 2002]: None.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she plans to have with French representatives concerning the export of beef from the UK to France. [72440]

Mr. Morley: The Secretary of State regularly raises the French Government's illegal ban on British beef with her French counterpart and will continue to do so until the ban is lifted.

Parrett Catchment Project

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what guidelines have been issued to the Parrett catchment project by the Government; and what its remit is. [71365]

Mr. Morley: The Parrett Catchment project is a local partnership and as such is not subject to Government guidelines. We have welcomed the initiative and continue to encourage the project to analyse proposed options further and to integrate with existing government sponsored initiatives such as the Catchment Flood Management Plan.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she has taken to ensure civic amenity sites will be able to continue accepting end-of-life electrical products if they are reclassified as hazardous waste. [71359]

Mr. Meacher: The Spending Review announced on 15 July that additional money would be available to local authorities via the EPCS block in future years. This will enable local authorities to make any modifications to the licence for a civic amenity site that may be necessary. We are aware that local authorities have some concerns about the implementation domestically of the European Waste Catalogue and we are looking at ways of minimising any impact.

Area-based Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list for each area-based initiative for which her Department is responsible the amount originally budgeted for in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02, stating in each year what funds budgeted for were not spent and if they were carried forward. [71456]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the Answer given by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Christopher Leslie) on 24 July, Official Report, column 1206W.

Exmoor

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she will take under the CAP reforms to ensure Exmoor gets grant aid for environmental projects. [71236]

Mr. Morley: The European Commission's proposals for reform of the Common Agricultural Policy include ideas for the progressive transfer of resources away from production subsidies towards wider social and economic objectives. The proposals will be subject to negotiations in the Council of Ministers.

The Government supports the general direction of the reform proposals, but it is too early to say what the outcome will be in terms of extra grant aid for environmental projects. Exmoor is already designated as an Environmentally Sensitive Area, and is eligible for grants under the ESA scheme which are only available in the 10 per cent. of England that is so designated.

Hydrofluorocarbons

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer of 25 March 2002, Official Report, column 717W, what conclusions have been reached by the Sustainable Procurement Group on enabling Government departments to work more closely with their suppliers with the intention of notifying suppliers more effectively of the Government's view of hydrofluorocarbons as a non-sustainable technology. [71451]

Mr. Meacher: The Secretary of State has established a high level inter-departmental Sustainable Procurement Group to look at how sustainable development can be more fully embedded into central-government procurement. One angle is that we are trying to ensure that procurement practitioners comply fully with Government policy and ensure that Government procurement properly supports sustainable development. That would include Government policy on HCFC/HFC free products wherever possible.

HFCs are not sustainable in the long term—the Government believes that continued technological developments will mean that HFCs may eventually be able to be replaced in the applications where they are used.

Guidance to Departments is provided in the action sheets on "Climate Change" and "Ozone Depleting Substances" in the Green Guide for Buyers, available on www.sustainable-development.gov.uk. This is:

1. No purchase of products or equipment containing ozone depleting substances such as hydrochlorofluorocarbons (HCFCs), halons, carbon tetrachloride, 111 trichloroethane and bromochloromethane, which are banned or being phased out under EC Regulation.

2. Products should be free of gaseous and non-gaseous substances that contribute to climate change where it is safe, cost-effective and technically feasible to do so. Substances with a high global warming potential which should be avoided wherever practicable include HFCs—used in refrigerants and fire extinguishing systems.

Recycling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs for what reason glass, ceramics and metals, recovered after thermal and other industrial processing, cannot be included in recycling targets under the Audit Commission's best-value definition. [71176]

Mr. Meacher: The Government encourages material recovery in all its forms. However in line with the waste hierarchy set out in the Waste Framework Directive and Waste Strategy 2000, the Government particularly wants to see a major increase in the primary recycling and composting of household waste rather than in landfill or incineration. The Government has therefore set local authorities statutory targets for the recycling and composting of household waste that exclude residues from incineration.

Bottlenosed Dolphin

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the future of the bottle-nosed dolphin in British waters. [71716]

Mr. Meacher: Bottlenose dolphins are protected in the Great Britain under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. Section 9 of the 1981 Act makes it an offence to intentionally kill or injure this species. In England and Wales this protection was strengthened by the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 that introduced a new offence of intentional or reckless disturbance.

The bottlenose dolphin is also listed under Annex II of the Council Directive (92/43/EEC) on the Conservation of Natural Habitats and of Wild Fauna and Flora. This requires the designation of protected areas for bottlenose dolphins. Three such areas have been designated as candidate Special Areas of Conservation (SAC) for their local bottlenose dolphin populations. Cardigan Bay and the Lleyn Peninsula and the Sarnau in Wales and the Moray Firth in Scotland.

As part of the UK's biodiversity strategy, the Government has developed action plans for the conservation of certain species and habitats. Small dolphins, which include bottlenose dolphins, have such a plan. This aims to maintain the dolphins' current range and abundance and, in the longer term, to increase the ranges of small dolphin populations where appropriate. The plan's objectives include minimising the incidental capture of dolphins in fishing nets, reducing acoustic disturbance and improving coastal water quality by reducing pollution. A co-ordinated steering group has been set up to take forward cetacean action plans and comprises representatives from non-government organisations, such as the RSPCA, the government, fishermen and other stakeholders.

Business Diversification

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what level of support her Department has given initiatives aimed at encouraging new business diversification in each of the past five years. [71665]

Alun Michael: DEFRA provides grants for farmers in England seeking to pursue good diversification projects under the Rural Enterprise Scheme. The scheme was launched in October 2000 as part of the England Rural Development Programme. Grant expenditure on diversification projects amounted to £5.3 million in 2001. The level of activity in 2001 was affected by the Foot and Mouth Disease outbreak and is expected to rise to about £7.5 million in 2002.

Support for diversification in earlier years was provided via the Objective 5b Scheme, now closed, which was targeted on six disadvantaged rural areas in England. The scheme encompassed support for a range of measures and disaggregated figures for diversification projects are not available. Total scheme expenditure for the past five years is shown in the following table.

1997	5.7
1998	12.5
1999	15.7
2001	28.8

In addition, the Farm Business Advice Service was launched in October 2000 to provide farm businesses with a business health check and identify possible future business options, including whether or not to diversify. Expenditure under this initiative amounted to £0.7 million in 2000 and £6.25 million in 2001. From September 2001 the Department has also offered assistance in the form of free planning consultancy advice to farmers who intend to pursue an eligible diversification project through the Rural Enterprise Scheme.

National Air Quality Strategy

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the target date for achievement of compliance with the National Air Quality Strategy objective is. [71616]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The objectives and compliance dates are set out in the following table.

Air quality objectives for protection of human health

Pollutant *Objective Concentration Date to be measured as achieved by

Overcharging

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Mathew) of 12 July 2002, Official Report, column 1233W, on overcharging, how many cases are being pursued for overcharging; and if she will initiate an investigation following the settlement of accounts to determine the (a) scale and (b) implications of this aspect of the foot and mouth clean-up. [71347]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 July 2002]: Pursuant to the answer I gave to the honourable Member for Carlisle of 12 July, I refer my Hon. Friend to Figure 60 in Chapter 4 of the recent NAO Report The 2001 Outbreak of Foot and Mouth Disease published on 18 June 2002. The Report is available on the NAO's website on http://www.nao.gov.uk/publications/naoreports/01-02/0102939.pdf. Information other than that provided in the NAO report cannot be provided at this time for reasons of legal and commercial confidentiality.

A value for money study and a commercial lessons learned report are being prepared though they cannot be finalised until the forensic examination of the accounts of contractors is completed. The findings and recommendations of the study and report will be shared with the National Audit Office and the Office of Government Commerce. It is the Department's intention to publish these findings and recommendations on the Departmental website subject only to unavoidable obligations in respect of legal and commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy to apply different standstill rules for movements of different species of livestock. [71644]

Margaret Beckett: We wish to consider—and discuss with stakeholders—the relevant recommendations of the Royal Society and Lessons Learned Inquiries before making any decisions about the future of the 20-day standstill.

Fox Population

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations she has received concerning problems created by the urban fox population; and if she will make a statement. [71107]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: We have received a small number of representations concerning problems arising from the presence of urban foxes. The Department recognises that foxes can cause problems in urban areas and publishes advice to householders on managing fox problems. Responsibility for the control of foxes rests with those people who most benefit from such control, that is, individual property owners and occupiers, who may engage private pest control contractors to undertake this work. There is no statutory requirement for local authorities to control foxes in their areas.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her latest estimate is of the total fox population of the United Kingdom, by region; and what the figures were in each of the past five years. [71114]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The latest estimate of the fox population in the United Kingdom is taken from a CSL report published in 1997. In 1995 the total pre-breeding fox population in Britain was estimated to be 240,000, comprising:

	Number
England	195,000
Scotland	23,000
Wales	22,000

No more recent figures are available.

Urban Foxes

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her Department's policy is with regard to the problem of urban foxes, with particular reference to the Borough of Oadby and Wigston, Leicestershire; and if she will make a statement. [73408]

Mr. Meacher: The Department recognises that foxes can cause problems in urban areas and publishes advice to householders on managing fox problems. Responsibility for the control of foxes rests with those people who most benefit from such control, that is, individual property owners and occupiers, who may engage private pest control contractors to undertake this work. There is no statutory requirement for local authorities to control foxes in their areas.

We have received no recent representations from the Borough of Oadby and Wigston, Leicestershire, about urban foxes.

Milk Marketing

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps the Government are undertaking to improve the marketing of milk. [71761]

Mr. Morley: The marketing of food products is a commercial matter for the companies concerned. But we have extended the remit of the Milk Development Council to allow it to undertake generic promotional activities, funded by levy payers.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what figures she collates on the level of the urban fox population; and what the population was in each of the past five years. [71115]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The Department does not routinely collate data on the levels of urban fox populations, but commissions research into the subject from time to time. A report issued in 1997 estimated the UK urban fox population at 33,000. In a survey of 139 councils conducted in 2001, most expressed the opinion that the urban fox population density in their area had risen.

The Department holds no figures on the levels of urban fox populations for each of the past five years.

Rural Economy

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many new enterprises her Department has stimulated in the rural economy in each of the past five years. [71664]

Alun Michael: The former Processing and Marketing Grant Scheme was closed to new applicants in 1996, while payments under both the new strands of expenditure under the England Rural Development Programme started in 2001. The following table shows projects supported by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and its predecessors in each of the past five years under these Schemes to assist the establishment of new rural businesses or new business developments in existing rural enterprises.

Year	*Processing and Marketing Grant Scheme (pre-ERDP)	ERDP Processing and Marketing Grant Scheme	ERDP Rural Enterprise Scheme	Total
1997	28	-	-	28
1998	21	-	-	21
1999	22	-	-	22
2000	4	0	0	4
2001	Closed	27	198	225

* Closed to new applicants in England in 1996. The figures shown reflect final payments made to successful projects in each of the relevant years.
Current indications are that the number of businesses helped under RES and PMG will be significantly higher this year, at around double last year's figures, as applications increase from the foot and mouth affected levels of 2001.

Assistance is also available to rural businesses under other grant schemes but it would not be possible to identify the number of new or expanding businesses resulting from such assistance except at disproportionate cost.

In addition Regional Development Agencies are required to support the creation of new businesses in both rural and non-rural areas using DEFRA as well as other Departments' funding contributions. Information on the number of businesses stimulated is, however, unavailable.

Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if her Department has responsibility for the implementation of the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive into UK law; [72033]

(3) who has represented the UK at the EU Council of Ministers during discussions of the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive; [72041]

(4) who will represent the UK on the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive in the forthcoming EU conciliation meetings. [72034]

Mr. Meacher: The Secretary of State and I represent the UK at the EU Environment Council of Ministers during discussions on the WEEE Directive.

Officials from the UK Permanent Representation to the European Union, led by the UK Deputy Permanent Representative, will represent the UK in the forthcoming EU conciliation committee meetings on the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive.

A decision is yet to be made as to whether DTI or my department will have responsibility for transposing the WEEE Directive into UK law.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to ensure that consumers do not pay twice for the recycling of waste electrical and electronic equipment. [72042]

Mr. Meacher: The proposed EC Directive on Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment is a Producer Responsibility directive which requires producers to provide for the financing of the collection, treatment, recovery and environmentally sound disposal of WEEE from private households deposited at collection facilities, onwards.

The Common Position text of the draft Directive—which is still under negotiation and subject to change—stipulates that consumers must be able to return items of WEEE free of charge. The text does not, however, outline the methods by which producers are to provide for the above financing. Without a final text, it is not possible to provide details of how the Directive will be implemented in the UK.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what mechanisms she is putting into place to prevent companies avoiding their responsibilities for recycling under the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive. [72040]

Mr. Meacher: The Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive is still under negotiation and without a final text it is too early to outline details of how the Directive will be implemented in the UK.

Throughout negotiation of the Directive, the Government has kept industry informed of their likely responsibilities under the Directive and we have reported back on developments in the negotiations in Brussels as they happen.

The Government will be working with the Environment Agency to ensure that the appropriate penalties are in place for use in cases of non-compliance, as required under the Directive.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what she has done to ensure that the views of (a) environmental and consumer organisations and (b) electronics companies are taken into account in the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive. [72038]

Mr. Meacher: The Department and the DTI are in regular contact with industry, including environmental and consumer organizations and electronics companies, about the proposed Directive and its implementation in the UK.

In particular– formal DTI consultation was issued in summer 2000. The results were published by the DTI in December 2000;

DTI and DEFRA officials have presented on WEEE at conferences and seminars totalling 23 times in past 6 months;

The DTI host a series of meetings with retailers focusing on the retailer requirements in the Directive and similar focus groups are planned on permitting and for manufacturers by sector;

DEFRA and the DTI are working together with the Small Business Service to organise twenty events in England to raise awareness of the requirements of the Directive and discuss potential implementation methods. Representatives from all stakeholder groups will be invited to put forward their views. Similar events in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are being planned with the Devolved Administrations.

The Government takes into account the views of industry when drawing up our negotiation lines and will continue to do so throughout implementation in the UK.

Faith Communities

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list projects involving faith communities which are supported by her Department. [71845]

Mr. Morley: The Department is not currently involved in any faith-based projects and does not provide financial support to any faith communities.

Noise Complaints

Mr. Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many and what proportion of noise complaints were caused by acoustic or non-amplified music being played in pubs, bars or nightclubs in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002; and if she will make a statement. [71675]

Mr. Meacher: Data on UK noise complaints are not collected specifically for acoustics or non-amplified music being played in pubs, bars or nightclubs. However, figures are available for the number of noise complaints resulting from commercial and leisure activities that were reported to Environmental Health Officers in England and Wales. This category includes pubs, bars, nightclubs, food premises, retail stores and sporting pursuits.

Year	Commercial and Leisure Noise Complaints per million population	Noise Complaints (all categories) per million population	Commercial and Leisure Noise Complaints as % of Total
2000–01	1,038	7,081	14.7
1999–2000	960	7,091	13.5
1998–99	836	6,111	13.7

The corresponding figures for 2001–02 are expected to be available later this year.

Modulation

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will hold discussions with the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors on its study on The Impact of Modulation; and if she will make a statement. [71269]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 22 July 2002]: I have received a number of representations on modulation policy, in particular following the Policy Commission's recommendation to increase the modulation rate in England from 2004. The varied positions taken include concern about the possible impact on farm incomes and support for the positive effect on rural development funding.

A decision on whether or not to adjust modulation rates has yet to be taken, but will be informed by the views of a wide range of stakeholders, including the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors (RICS). It will also take account of negotiations on the CAP Mid-Term Reviews.

I have no plans to hold discussions with RICS on this issue. However, other DEFRA ministers have met with officials from RICS recently.

Committee Mandates

Mr. John Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, what the mandate of the Standing Committee on agricultural statistics is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if she will list the items currently under its consideration; if she will take steps to increaseits accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [58438]

Mr. Morley: The Standing Committee on Agricultural Statistics was set up by a Council Decision (72/279/EEC) on 31 July 1972. It makes detailed decisions on implementing EU legislation as set out in each case using the delegated authority provided by the EU "Comitology" process.

Together with Member States, the Commission is currently conducting a review to bring existing legislation on the conduct of comitology committees into line with Council Decision 1999/468/EC, to "simplify the requirements for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission". As an obligation to this Decision, the Commission undertook to publish an annual report on the working of committees. The first report was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 26 February 2002 (Com (2001) 783 Final).

The Standing Committee on Agricultural Statistics includes representatives from all member states and is chaired by the Commission. Separate meetings are set up for each subject normally linked to the appropriate working group or meeting of officials. The appropriate statisticians from the UK departments attend.

There have been 2 Standing Committee meetings this year. The forthcoming items for decision will include the definition and deadlines for statistics in the forthcoming 2005 EU Structure Survey; the development initiatives on the "Improving Community Agricultural Statistics Programme"; the 2003 survey of ground points across the EU and the rules of procedure of the Standing Committee.

The work on Agricultural Statistics is subject to the Direction of the European Parliament, Council, the Statistical Programme Committee meeting of heads of each National Statistical Services and the Agricultural Statistics Committee Meeting.

It is not possible to separately identify the specific annual cost of the Committee's work to public funds without incurring disproportionate costs.

New or significant changes to EU legislation are already subject to Parliamentary Scrutiny. We provide information on agricultural statistics work in National Statistics reports and plans, which are published, on the Internet.

Energy

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what powers she has to impose Agenda 21, community renewable energy, and alternative energy strategies on local authorities; and what penalties may be exacted from local authorities which fail to produce such strategies in comformity with her guidance; [72046]

(2) what requirements are placed on (a) local authorities and (b) energy providers with regard to Agenda 21, community renewable energy, and alternative energy strategies. [72047]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Part I of the Local Government Act 2000 placed a duty on English local authorities to prepare a community strategy. The delivery of improved long term economic, social and environmental quality of life, contributing to the achievement of sustainable development in the UK, lies at the heart of community strategies; indeed community strategies are required, by law, to promote sustainable development. The Government believes community strategies will promote the mainstreaming of sustainable development across local authorities' functions. Where they have effective and holistic Local Agenda 21 strategies, there may be good reasons for local authorities to continue to implement LA21. However, the Government feels that, in the long term, LA21 strategies will effectively be subsumed by community strategies. Whilst there are no requirements placed on local authorities to produce specific community renewable energy or alternative energy strategies, energy use, as an important element of sustainable development, can be considered as part of the community strategy process.

For energy providers, the Renewables Obligation under the Utilities Act 2000 requires all licensed electricity suppliers in Great Britain to supply a specified and growing proportion of their supplies from renewable energy in order to meet the Government's target that 10 per cent. of electricity sales will come from renewable sources by 2010.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she plans to take to encourage (a) the sheep farming industry to replace live animal exports with the export of meat and carcasses, (b) the public to purchase domestically produced rather than imported lamb and (c) retailers to market UK-produced light lambs while paying a price to farmers which properly reflects the production costs. [72443]

Mr. Morley: Through its Industry Forum Adaptation Scheme, the Government is helping to fund work being undertaken by the Red Meat Industry Forum to improve the competitiveness of the red meat industry. Over the three financial years ending in 2005, a contribution of £1.52 million has been committed to match industry funding of £1.7 million on benchmarking, analysis of the supply chain and masterclasses. The Forum is also pursuing other initiatives in its ten point action plan, which was launched in March this year. Work of the Forum is being led by the Meat and Livestock Commission, which as part of its remit undertakes promotional support for the benefit of sheep producers. Many marketing issues, including the export of sheep for slaughter, involve commercial decisions in which the Government only has a limited role. In encouraging change the Government welcomes the work of the Forum and other industry initiatives to build partnership and trust in the supply chain.

Climate Change

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what regional climate change scenarios have been modelled by her Department in the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [70533]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 22 July 2002]: In April 2002, the Department launched the 2002 UK Climate Change Scenarios. The Department funded the development of these scenarios to support the UK Climate Impacts Programme, the purpose of which is to help public and private sector organisations assess the impact of climate change on their sectors and plan ways of adapting to its consequences. The new scenarios were produced using a regional climate change model and represent a significant step forward in our understanding of possible consequences of climate change for different parts of the UK. They replace an earlier set of scenarios funded by the Department and published in 1998.

The Department is also funding the application of regional climate change models in developing countries to improve our collective understanding of the effects of climate change, for example through projects with India, China and South Africa.

Additionally, we currently fund (with the Department for International Development) work at the Hadley Centre on a portable Regional Climate Change Model (PRECIS) which will enable developing countries to carry out their own assessments of how climate change will affect them.

Information Campaigns

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much her Department spent on information literature, advertising and campaign material in financial year 2001–02; if she will list the campaigns that spent over £250,000; and if she will make a statement. [70204]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 22 July 2002]: DEFRA was established during the 1st quarter of financial year 2001–02. The Department's centralised publicity expenditure is not recorded in the format requested. Our records show a total expenditure for publicity of £6,640,161.00 as at 31 March 2002.

Due to the effects of the Foot and Mouth Disease outbreak last year, customary publicity and exhibitions activities were deferred or cancelled. DEFRA centralised publicity activities focused on poster campaigns, events, shows and direct information literature mailings.

The "Your Countryside You're Welcome" campaign was the only one for which expenditure exceeded £250,000.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the (a) dates, (b) location and (c) sources were of attributable (i) articles, interviews or contributions for the media, books or other journals and (ii) speeches or presentations made in the public domain, by departmental special advisers since March 2001; who in her Department authorised the activity; and on what date this activity was recorded with the departmental Head of Information. [72250]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend (the Prime Minister), on 24 July, Official Report, column 1373W.

Rare Wildlife Trade

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what penalties are available for someone caught dealing in the rare wildlife trade; and what plans she has to increase penalties. [72529]

Mr. Meacher: People found guilty of trading in wildlife specimens protected by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 can be fined up to £5,000 and/or imprisoned for up to six months. These higher penalties were introduced by the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 and there are no plans to increase them further.

Offences under the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1997 (COTES) are currently punishable by a fine of up to £5,000 and/or up to three months imprisonment if tried in a Magistrates' Court, and an unlimited fine and/or up to two years imprisonment at Crown Court. These penalties are being considered as part of the current review of the COTES Regulations.

Endangered Species

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress has been made with the review on legislation covering the trafficking of endangered species. [72702]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 July 2002]: A pre-consultation paper outlining the Government's initial proposals for the review of the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1997 was sent to all the main stakeholder organisations on 18 July. We have asked for comments by 30 August 2002.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many types of animals in the UK are on the endangered species list; and what measures she is taking to increase their numbers. [72530]

Mr. Meacher: My scientific advisors on wildlife issues, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, have advised that there are approximately 1785 invetebrate, two amphibian, two reptile, six bird and one mammal species which are endangered. In 1995 the UK Biodiversity Action Plan was published and more recently a significant number of specific Action Plans have been finalised. These are targeted at the conservation needs of rare species and habitats and are being implemented through broad partnerships of government, statutory conservation agencies and the voluntary sector. The Biodiversity Action Plans encourage positive actions for rare species at a range of scales, from national to local, and by a range of organisations. Monitoring will provide feedback on the efficacy of the implementation of the plans.

Hendon Sewage Treatment Works

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in publishing the inspectors report on the Hendon Sewage Treatment works; and when she expects to publish it. [72308]

Mr. Meacher: The Inspector's report following the inquiry on the Hendon Sewage Treatment Works (and the Whitburn Storm Sewage Pumping Station) is a comprehensive document containing a large amount of data of both a technical and general nature. Full and detailed consideration has inevitably taken some time, but I expect the Secretary of State's decision to be published together with the Inspector's report very shortly.

Light Pollution

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy to introduce anti-light-pollution legislation; and if she will make a statement. [72095]

Mr. Meacher: Light is excluded from the statutory nuisance regime of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. During the debate of the associated bill in the House of Lords, floodlighting as a statutory nuisance was rejected on the basis of the low incidence of reported problems, and the perceived looseness of the proposed term "floodlighting". However I recognise that intrusion from security lighting has become a growing problem, and in view of this I will consider what measures may be used to address this issue.

Currently where there is a proposal for which a planning application is required, the local planning authority has the power to control many sorts of lighting installation by imposing planning conditions. In this situation, the authority can refuse permission, or grant permission with conditions which could specify in detail what sort of external light installations would be allowed. In any other circumstances, since the courts have ruled that emitting light does not of itself constitute development, the matter is outside planning controls.

I understand that the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to amend planning legislation in this area. Instead, this Government continues to publicise and to recommend the advice given in "Lighting in the Countryside: Towards good practice", which is available on our website at: http://www.planning.odpm.gov.uk/litc/index.htm This publication, which is also relevant to those in towns and cities, indicates a way forward which we believe is preferable to further regulation.

Waste Collection

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to charge individual households for waste collection; and if she will make a statement. [72223]

Mr. Meacher: The Performance and Innovation Unit, now the Strategy Unit, are conducting a wide ranging review of waste strategy which is due to report in the autumn. Variable household charging is an issue which falls within the scope of that work and PIU have invited views on the issue on its website. DEFRA Ministers and the Government as a whole are keen for the review to consider all the possible options for delivering Government objectives on waste.

Johannesburg Summit on Sustainable Development

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the final agenda is for the Johannesburg Summit on Sustainable Development. [72449]

Mr. Meacher: The Agenda is not yet fully agreed. We strongly support the priority areas of poverty eradication and the sectoral themes of water, energy, health, agriculture and biodiversity identified by the UN Secretary-General. The developed world must also take concrete steps towards sustainable development by actions to improve our own use of resources. We are also committed to sustainable development in developing countries as witnessed by the increasing proportion of the UK's gross national income devoted to international aid, which will rise to 0.4 per cent. by 2005–06, and through taking forward the important commitments to fair trade, better market access and phasing out of agricultural subsidies and reduction of trade-distorting domestic support as made at Doha.

Rare Wildlife Trade

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures are in place to ensure that rare wildlife in the UK is protected. [72528]

Mr. Meacher: The UK has a broad framework of measures to ensure that rare wildlife in the UK is protected. This includes legislative protection for certain species, where such protection is necessary to address the causes of population decline, as well as a range of wider environmental policies. Of particular importance is the UK's national response to the Convention on Biological Diversity. The UK Biodiversity Action Plan was published in 1995 and more recently a significant number of specific Action Plans have been finalised, including 436 biodiversity, 391 species and 45 habitat related action plans. These are targeted at the conservation needs of rare species and of habitats and are being implemented through broad partnerships of government, statutory conservation agencies and the voluntary sector. The Biodiversity Action Plans encourage positive actions for rare species at a range of scales, from national to local, and by a range of organisations. Monitoring will provide feedback on the efficacy of the implementation of the plans.

CAP Reform

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent consultations she has had with organisations representing Scottish farmers regarding CAP reform. [72438]

Mr. Morley: DEFRA has put in place mechanisms to consult a wide range of UK and English bodies on the Commission's Communication on the Mid-Term Review of the CAP. Consulting the industry in Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Executive, with whom DEFRA has ongoing discussions on the Mid-Term Review.

Overseas Contracts

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what contracts her Department has recently awarded to (a) TNO (Netherlands), (b) IAV (Germany), (c) AVL (Austria), (d) FEV (Germany) and (e) IKA (Germany). [72197]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 July 2002]: No contracts have recently been awarded by my Department to any of (a) TNO (Netherlands), (b) IAV (Germany), (c) AVL (Austria), (d) FEV (Germany) and (e) IKA (Germany).

Composting

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many in vessel composting sites are licensed in the UK. [72812]

Mr. Meacher: In vessel composting is not at present a term that is defined in statute and so records do not separately identify whether composting sites could or could not be termed as in vessel operations. Environment Agency records indicate that there are 68 licensed composting sites and some 630 smaller sites registered as exempt.

Brownfield Sites

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the regional targets are for local authorities in Yorkshire and the Humber for the construction of new dwellings on brownfield land; and what progress the local authorities are making towards these targets. [72815]

Mr. Tony McNulty: RPG12 published in October 2001 sets a brownfield target for housing development of 60 per cent. for the Yorkshire and Humber region as a whole. RPG12 also sets out provisional brownfield targets for strategic planning areas and requires local planning authorities to review these in the course of preparing their development plans following detailed studies into brownfield opportunities. The provisional targets are highest for urban areas such as Sheffield (80 per cent.) and Leeds (66 per cent.) and lower for more rural areas such as North Yorkshire (53 per cent.).

Statistics published in June by the Government showed that in 2000, 57 per cent. of houses built in Yorkshire and the Humber were on brownfield sites. Up to date Information is not currently available for all local authority area in the region. Information supplied by individual local authorties to the Yorkshire and Humber Assembly shows that Sheffield (82 per cent.) and Leeds (74 per cent.) both exceeded their provisional targets in 2001. In North Yorkshire, Harrogate achieved 69 per cent. whilst the more rural district of Richmondshire achieved 32 per cent.

EU Environmental Liability Directive

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has for a public fund to help public authorities deal with the remedying of damage on orphan sites under the EU Environmental Liability Directive. [72492]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Under the draft Directive, where the party responsible for environmental damage cannot be found, or has insufficient means to pay the costs of remediation, the responsibility for remediative action would fall to the Competent Authority.

The Government's public consultation on the Commission's proposal, which ended on 24 May 2002, covered the provisions relating to orphan sites. Careful consideration is being given to its detailed implications for the UK and no decisions have yet been taken.

Hydrogen Fuel Cell Technology

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what funding her Department is providing for development of hydrogen fuel cell technology. [72199]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 23 July 2002, by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Industry (Mr. Wilson), Official Report, column 950–951W.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment her Department has made of the time horizons for the likely impact of hydrogen fuel cell technology on road vehicles. [72198]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 23 July 2002, by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Industry (Mr. Wilson), Official Report, column 950–951W.

Overseas Contracts

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her Department's policy is on providing collaboration funding for development of fuel reduction technology with British companies; and whether it is the policy of her Department to seek tenders for other European companies before awarding such funding. [72316]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 23 July 2002, by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Industry (Mr. Wilson), Official Report, column 950–951W.

Public Awareness

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer of 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 381W, if she will place copies of the surveys of public awareness and attitudes in the Library. [72829]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 July 2002]: I have arranged for a paper to be placed in the Library of the House, outlining the development of the "Are You Doing Your Bit?" campaign and including evaluations of its effects on public awareness.

Leakage Targets

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many water undertakings have achieved the leakage targets set by the Deputy Prime Minister in 1997. [72868]

Mr. Meacher: Following the Water Summit in 1997, Ofwat has set each water company an annual leakage target to progressively reduce leakage to its economic level by 2003. This is defined as the level at which the costs to make further reductions in leakage are greater than the costs of supplying additional water from its sources. On 25 July, Ofwat published details of company performance against their targets for 2001–02. Of the twenty-one companies set targets, nineteen met them and are now at or on course to reach their Economic Level of Leakage by 2003. Ofwat considers that the two that did not will recover their positions by 2002–03. Thames Water was subject to special measures rather than being set a volumetric target in 2001–02, due to its unsatisfactory performance in managing leakage. The company's performance in this respect continues to be deficient. Ofwat is taking a number of increased measures to ensure that Thames Water brings its leakage under control by 2003–04, including the setting of local leakage targets for 2002–03.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 4 July 2002, Official Report, column 607W, when members of the Scottish Executive have attended meetings of the EU Committee on agricultural structures and rural development; and if she will make a statement. [73167]

Alun Michael: Devolved Administrations attend meetings of the EU Committee on agricultural structures and rural development where they consider the agenda to contain items of sufficient interest. Scottish Executive representatives attended in December to hear of the Commission's revised reporting requirements, in February when its annual modification to the Scottish Rural Development Programme was considered, and in July to look at proposed simplification of the Rural Development Regulation.

Our approach is one of teamwork in which we seek to ensure that there is an agreed UK line on issues covered by the Commission committees, taking into account devolved administration views in accordance with the Memorandum of Understanding between the UK Government and the Devolved Administrations. In particular, where the rural development programmes of the Scottish Executive or the other devolved administrations are being dealt with by the Committee, we would normally expect representatives from the relevant administration to speak on behalf of the UK.

Badger Testing

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps will be taken to compensate land owners for damage done by unidentified people in connection with field trials involving badger testing. [73358]

Mr. Morley: As part of its voluntary agreement with farmers participating in the randomised badger culling trial, DEFRA has a signed commitment to pay reasonable compensation for damage to crops and property directly caused by operations carried out, and measures taken under the agreement. Claims arising out of damage caused by third parties are considered on a case by case basis and any payment is made on an ex-gratia basis.

In practice the principal target of anti-trial protest has been Departmental property, including traps and vehicles, and field staff. Police support for trial operations is extensive and acts as a deterrent against damage to landowners' property.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what precautions badger field trials testers are taking to avoid being followed on to test sites. [73359]

Mr. Morley: All field staff receive instruction on procedures designed to reduce the personal risk associated with carrying out work on the badger culling field trial. This covers the risk of being followed by field trial protestors to field locations, to the office or to their homes.

"Philomena"

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she intends to have with her French counterpart over the recent attack on the British boat "Philomena," carried out in international waters by French fishermen; and if she will make a statement. [73401]

Mr. Morley: Following the incident within French fishery limits involving the Philomena over the weekend of 20/21 July, officials have been in contact with the French authorities and the representative association for the vessel. There has since been a meeting of UK and French fishermen's representatives and arrangements have been made for improved communication between the parties involved.

Farming Support

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what provision

there is to provide an aid package to support UK farmers whose pasture lands have become water-logged or been destroyed by persistent wet weather. [73120]

Mr. Morley: There is no routine provision to compensate farmers for the effects of bad weather. In exceptional circumstances, a Member State may apply to the European Commission to make special payments from national resources.

EU Legislation

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many new pieces of legislation originating in the European Union were implemented by her Department in each of the last three years; and if she will make a statement. [73140]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Buckinghamshire (Mr. John Bercow) on 10 June 2002, Official Report, column 935W.

Species (Population Levels)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent studies have been carried out into the number of (a) rabbits, (b) hares, (c) foxes, (d) grey crows, (e) magpies, (f) otters, (g) feral mink and (h) jays in England; and what trends have been detected in the population levels of each species. [73042]

Mr. Meacher: The Department is aware of a number of studies of the populations of mammals and birds in England. The most recent comprehensive estimates of rabbit, hare, fox, otter and mink populations were published by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee in A Review of British Mammals: population estimates and conservation status of British Mammals other than cetaceans (1995).

Estimates indicate that rabbit populations are increasing at around 1–2 per cent. each year. Brown hare populations are probably in continuing decline. Mountain hare populations are thought to be stable but, as expected, very localised. Fox populations appear to be stable in rural areas and increasing in urban areas. The otter is benefiting from reintroductions to the wild and is continuing to spread and increase. American mink numbers may be declining in some areas as a result of the spread of otters.

The British Trust for Ornithology conducts surveys of bird numbers in Britain. A 1988–91 survey estimated 590,000 magpie territories and 160,000 jay territories in Britain. Magpie numbers are estimated to have increased by a mean rate of 4–5 per cent. a year between 1966 and 1986 and to have stabilised thereafter. Jay populations have tended to increase on farmland and to decrease in woodland since the survey and overall, the population remained relatively stable or increased slightly up to 1995.

Grey or hooded crows are not regular breeders in England, although the picture is complicated by the existence of hybrids with the carrion crow.

Waste Disposal

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what new arrangements there are to deal with the disposal in the United Kingdom of (a) refrigerators and (b) tyres; and if she will make a statement. [73191]

Mr. Meacher: I have already announced special grant funding of an extra £40 million for local authorities for this year. This is in addition to the £6 million already allocated for the last financial year. Additional help for future years was included in the Spending Review announced on 15 July.

The funding will enable local authorities to make full use of treatment facilities now up and running in the UK. Five "fridge eating" sites have been operating for a number of weeks. Two are due to come on line in August, and a further three later this year.

Under a voluntary, industry-led approach, the UK traditionally recovers value from around 70 per cent. of the tyres disposed of each year, although this dipped in 2000 due to the closure of a major tyre reprocessing facility. Since then, significant new tyre reprocessing capacity has been developed.

As well as having sufficient tyre reprocessing capacity, it will be important that the framework supporting the tyre landfill ban promotes responsible tyre disposal and recovery. Earlier this year, DTI issued a discussion document on used tyre issues which examined a possible statutory producer responsibility model. We are currently considering next steps in the light of the responses received.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what assessment she has made of mechanical biological treatment techniques for waste disposal used in other European countries; [73478]

(2) if she will take measures to promote the use of mechanical biological treatment techniques in waste disposal in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement; [73479]

(3) what assessment she has made of the mechanical biological treatment practices of Island Waste Services. [73480]

Mr. Meacher: Mechanical biological treatment is used to manage the residue remaining after the recyclables have been removed from municipal waste. It employs conventional, proven techniques to remove any remaining recyclables and to stabilise the organic content by composting or anaerobic digestion. This material can then be landfilled or used as a fuel for energy recovery. The process is widely used in Germany and Italy and also in Austria and the Netherlands.

MBT is specifically designed to complement waste management strategies that are focussed on material recovery through recycling and composting by providing a flexible way of dealing with the residue. This type of treatment can assist in reaching the targets for the reduction of biodegradable municipal waste disposed of to landfill as set out in the Landfill Directive.

A bid by Shanks that includes mechanical biological treatment recently won preferred bidder status for a 25 year waste disposal contract with East London Waste Authority. Shanks will be using Italian technology under licence.

My understanding is that Island Waste Services produces a fuel from the residual municipal solid waste after material recovery including separate composting of green waste. The treatment of the fuel is solely by mechanical means, to achieve size reduction, without any element of biological treatment.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will take further measures to increase the amount of household waste which is recycled; and if she will make a statement; [73490]

(2) if she will take measures to achieve greater uniformity of waste disposal policy and practices by local authorities; and if she will make a statement. [73491]

Mr. Meacher: The Government already has a number of measures in place that will increase the future amount of household waste which is recycled. These measures include setting statutory performance standards for the percentage of waste that local authorities must recycle by 2003–04 and 2005–06, and additional financial support to help local authorities deliver these standards.

The standards we have set for local authorities take account of the performance that the authorities were reporting at the time. As a result, whilst all authorities are required to improve, there are variations in the percentages that authorities must deliver.

Our ambitions on waste disposal extend well beyond 2005–06 and we will seek continuous improvement in our recycling rates. We will consider longer-term recycling standards for individual local authorities in the light of experience and any technological developments. As a part of that consideration, we will take a view on the demands for improvement we place on those who are currently lower and higher performing authorities.

Generally, we consider local authorities are best placed to decide locally how best to meet existing standards, taking account of the nature of the local waste stream and issues such as the type of housing in their area. We have no plans for centrally imposing greater uniformity in the way local authorities collect and dispose of waste.

In November the Secretary of State announced that the Government's Strategy Unit would be carrying out a study on waste strategy. This study is assessing what extra instruments, changes to targets or regulations, and/or additional funding may be required to ensure that the strategy is effectively delivered and that we are able to develop more sustainable waste management. The Strategy Unit are due to report later in the year and we will make final decisions on future resources, and consider other policy measures, when the conclusions of the study are known.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the method of continuous sampling of dioxin emissions from waste disposal incinerators. [73482]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency is undertaking research into continuous dioxin sampling which includes market and literature searches, laboratory testing, and field trials, comparing "continuous" samplers with discontinuous methods. The research will establish which, if any, of the commercially available equipment can perform reliably and accurately, and inform the preparation of performance standards for these monitoring systems. The Agency anticipates that the research will be completed in Spring 2003.

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what financial resources she has made available to local authorities in 2002–03 to help with the storage and disposal of refrigerators; and how much each local authority has been allocated. [72925]

Mr. Meacher: £6 million was allocated to local authorities for the extra costs they faced from 1 January to end March this year as a result of the disposal of refrigerators regulations. This money was added to local authorities' general grant for the current financial year and distributed using standard spending assessments. It is not possible to provide a meaningful allocation for each authority.

I announced on 18 July special grant funding of an extra £40 million for local authorities for this year. This is in addition to the £6 million already allocated for the last financial year.

Fuel Consumption

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment her Department has made of the effectiveness of the intelligent motor generator technology developed by Ricardo in reducing fuel consumption in road vehicles. [72625]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary to Transport (Mr. Jamieson) on 24 July, Official Report, column 1249W.

Meat Imports

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what controls on meat imports are in place to guard against foot and mouth and other diseases. [73654]

Mr Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, what the level of funding for the Are You Doing Your Bit? campaign was in each year since 1998; what funds have been made available to support this campaign in (a) this and (b) the next three years; and if she will make a statement. [72744]

Are You Doing Your Bit? Campaign

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she is taking to enhance the effectiveness of the Are You Doing Your Bit? campaign; and if she will make a statement. [72743]

Mr. Meacher: Expenditure on the "Are you doing your bit?" campaign, covering both environmental and transport topics, was £3.4 million in 1998–99, £7.0 million in 1999–

2000 and £9.3 million in 2000–01. In 2001–02 most of the campaign's resources were reallocated to rural support, during the outbreak of foot and mouth disease, and expenditure was £0.6 million. The Department is currently reviewing the effectiveness of public awareness activities in this area and in the meantime, in the current financial year, is making only minimal financial commitments on the "Are You Doing You Bit?" campaign. The distribution of budgets for public awareness activities for the following three financial years has yet to be decided, in the light of the overall figures for the Department settled in this year's Spending Review.

Biotechnology Research

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what biotechnology research projects in (a) agriculture and (b) biomedics have been supported by the Department; and what level of public investment has gone into them in each of the last three years. [73241]

Mr. Meacher: The biotechnology research projects funded by the Department in the last 3 years in (a) Agriculture are available in the Library of the House. The total costs over this period are summarised in the table below:

GM and Non-GM biotechnology	23.4	27	27.3	24
Research to underpin safety assessment of GMOs in the environment	1.9	2.4	2.4	2.9
Total spend on Biotechnology	25.3	29.4	29.7	26.9

* Figures include relevant DETR and MAFF programmes.
 Figures exclude food-related risk assessment projects, which were transferred to the Food Standards Agency.
 All figures are provisional.

(b) Biomedics—The Department does not support research in this area.

Biotechnology is defined as the application of biological organisms, systems and processes to manufacturing and service industries. This definition covers genetic modification (GM) research but goes much wider to include, among other techniques, fused cell techniques, protein engineering, fermentation and cell culture techniques, the production of vaccines and monoclonal antibodies.

Plastic Recyling Facilities

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the availability of plastic recyling facilities in (a) the South West and (b) Somerset. [73249]

Mr. Meacher: The Department does not keep a central record of recycling facilities. However, there are a number of internet sites that can search for your nearest recycling facility.

I understand from one of the local authorities in the area that two local authorities in Somerset collect plastic bottles for recycling—Taunton Deane Borough Council and South Somerset District Council. In addition, 4 Household Waste Recycling Centres (HWRC) run by the county also collect plastic bottles.

I also understand that the operating contracts for 13 of the HWRC's are due to be renegotiated shortly. I understand that the new contracts will make a stronger commitment to recycling in Somerset and many sites will introduce plastic collection.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent proposals he has put to European colleagues for the reform of the Common Agricultural Policy. [73210]

Mr. Morley: On 10 July, the European Commission published its proposals for reform of the Common Agricultural Policy. These form a good basis for discussion, and in many ways respond to UK calls that significant reform of the CAP is required. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State set out the UK's initial response to the proposals at the 15 July EU Agriculture Council. As she explained, the Government believes that the general thrust of the proposals of further market reform, decoupling of direct payments from production, and reinforcement of the rural development regulation is the right one. But in a number of key areas we consider that the proposals do not go far enough and do not adequately respond to the challenges ahead. In particular, the Commission's proposals on modulation would simply recycle money within the CAP while we would like to have seen a proposal which reduced subsidies while delivering real budgetary savings.

Departmental Jobs

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many jobs under the remit of her Department in (a) the core department, (b) non-departmental public bodies, (c) executive agencies and (d) independent statutory bodies, organisations and bodies financially sponsored by her Department and other such organisations are located in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, excluding Greater London, (iii) Greater London, (iv) Wales, (v) Northern Ireland and (vi) overseas, broken down by (A) whole-time equivalent jobs and (B) the percentage per individual department, body or organisation. [72730]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The table below shows the number of staff in the former MAFF and its executive agencies located in the regions specified as at 1 April 2001, the latest date for which published data is available. The requested information on non-departmental public bodies and other independent statutory bodies is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EU Agriculture Council

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 17 July 2002, Official Report, column 309W, which Scottish Executive Minister she met on 15 July in Brussels prior to the EU Agriculture Council meeting. [72708]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 24 July 2002]: On this occasion the Scottish Minister for Environment and Rural Affairs was represented by an official.

Pesticides

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent research her Department has carried out to determine the level of pesticide residues in food within the UK; what checks are carried out on imported foods to determine the level of pesticide residues; and what plans she has to introduce statutory targets to reduce the use of pesticides in food production. [73202]

Mr. Morley: The Government conducts a wide-ranging annual surveillance programme for pesticide residues in food including imported food. Some 4,000 samples are analysed annually and the programme generates results for over 100,000 pesticide/commodity food combinations. All the results are published on a website: www.pesticides.gov.uk/committees/PRC/prc.htm

The Maximum Residue Levels regulations apply equally to imports. Additionally, the general provisions of the Food Safety Act 1990 apply at all times. The food safety requirements are that food must not have been rendered injurious to health; be unfit; or be so contaminated—whether by extraneous matter or otherwise—that it would be unreasonable to expect it to be sold in that state. These legislative controls are backed up by the monitoring programme described above. Around half of the samples tested are of imported food.

The Government has no plans to introduce statutory targets to reduce the use of pesticides in food production

Farm Waste

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects to publish her consultation paper on farm waste. [72169]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 July 2002]: We are preparing the Regulations necessary to apply the provisions of the Waste Framework Directive to those types of agricultural waste which are not excluded from control under Article 2. A Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA) is also being prepared. On completion, the draft Regulations and RIA will be issued for consultation with the farming industry and other interested groups. A firm date for publication of the consultation paper has not yet been set but our aim is to publish it in the Autumn. I will ensure that a copy of the consultation paper is sent to the hon. Member when it is issued.

Anglo-Scottish Ministerial Meetings

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many formal and official inter-ministerial meetings her Department has held with the Scottish Executive since May 1999, broken down by (a) Scottish Executive department, (b) subject and (c) date. [72719]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Information is not available in the form requested. Ministers from the Department have frequent meetings with Ministers from the Scottish Executive, both formal and informal, covering a broad range of topics.

Illegal Meat Products

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what outbreaks of disease in animals in Somerset have been linked to the import of illegal meat products in the past five years. [73250]

Mr. Morley: There have been no outbreaks of exotic notifiable disease in Somerset in the last five years other than Foot and Mouth Disease in 2001. It is not possible to determine the exact route by which that virus entered the country.

Trees

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps (a) have been taken and (b) are planned by her Department to increase the number of trees planted in the South West; and if she will make a statement. [73251]

Mr. Morley: With support from the Woodland Grant Scheme and Farm Woodland Premium Scheme, private woodland owners in the South West created some 1,300 hectares of woodland last year. This is nearly double the amount planted five years ago. We have also provided extra support in certain parts of the South West through initiatives such as the Community Forest Premium and Challenge Schemes for new native woodland in National Parks and for reversing fragmentation of woodlands. As to the future, we are currently reviewing our grant schemes with a view to achieving, among other things, improved targeting of support for new woodland in accordance with the priorities in our England Forestry Strategy.

Standstill Rule

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations she has received on the 20-day standstill rule in Somerset. [73252]

Mr. Morley: Representations about the 20-day standstill have been received from industry organisations and individual farmers from many different areas.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the practical implications of the 20-day standstill order on agricultural shows in Somerset. [73253]

Mr. Morley: The current rules already allow animals of all species to move to shows even if there is a standstill in place on their farm of origin, to move from show to show or to return to their farm of origin without triggering a 20-day standstill, provided they are individually identified and kept in approved isolation facilities for 20 days before the first show, between shows and on final return to the farm.

I am also aware that a number of show organisers across the country have taken steps to adjust their schedules so as to work with the standstill rules.

Lundy Island

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will consult (a) hon. Members whose constituencies have fishing interests, (b) fishermen's organisations and (c) other groups before a decision is made to impose a fishing ban in the vicinity of Lundy Island; [72947]

(2) what evidence has been supplied to her by English Nature on the impact of imposing a fishing ban in the vicinity of Lundy Island; and what assessment of such evidence will be carried out by her officials before a decision is made. [72946]

Mr. Morley: The byelaw to implement a "No Take Zone" around Lundy Island has been proposed by Devon Sea Fisheries Committee (SFC) who are responsible for fisheries management in the area concerned. In proposing the byelaw, the SFC has taken advice from English Nature to comply with the statutory requirement in the case of byelaws proposed on marine environmental grounds. Consultation by the SFC has taken place with local fishing interests and formal public consultation will follow. This will be held in line with the statutory requirements of the Sea Fisheries (Byelaws) Regulations 1985 which require the byelaw to be advertised in publications circulating in the local district and any other publication which the Secretary of State may require.

In confirming the byelaw, this Department will look to ensure that all statutory requirements have been met, any objections received from the publication of the byelaw have been dealt with satisfactorily by the SFC and that the byelaw will not operate in a discriminatory or inequitable way. This Department will also need European Commission approval of the byelaw.

Sea Levels

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent evaluation her Department has carried out on the risk posed to seaside communities by rising sea levels; and if she will make a statement. [72945]

Mr. Morley: The updated National Appraisal of Assets at Risk of Flooding and Coastal Erosion in England and Wales, distributed in September 2001 by DEFRA, provided a revised comprehensive estimate of risks from flooding and coastal erosion, including a preliminary assessment of the potential change of impact associated with climate change. The risk to coastal communities was included in this assessment.

Management of coastal risk from flooding and coastal erosion is informed through the development of Shoreline Management Plans (SMPs). The earliest of the first round of SMPs is now due for revision. Research by DEFRA to improve understanding of coastal erosion processes around the coastline of England and Wales will be made available soon to coastal authorities to assist development of the second round of SMPs. This includes guidance on the likely impact of sea level rise on coastal processes. This improved understanding will allow an assessment of the likely change of risk to coastal communities as a result of sea level rise to be made during review of the local SMP.

DEFRA manages the UK Climate Impacts Programme (UKCIP) which reported on regional climate change impact earlier this year. Research carried out under UKCIP does not suggest that the sea level rise allowances used in the design of flood and coastal erosion management solutions needs to be changed for the time being.

Illegal Importation of Meat

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action Customs and Excise are taking in Scotland against the illegal importation of meat from China. [73001]

Mr. Morley: I am advised that the Food Standards Agency has issued a Food Hazard Warning to local authorities and investigations are taking place to establish the source and extent of the illegal importation of meat from China. Any illegally imported meat, and products containing illegally imported meat, are being controlled by local authorities.

Flooding

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Environment Agency will (a) commence and (b) complete the feasibility study into the causes and relief of flooding in Salmon's Brook in the Lea Valley; and if she will make a statement. [73022]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency plans to commence the Salmons Brook Feasibility Study in August this year and it is expected to be complete in 12 months.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer of 10 July 2002, Official Report, column 310W, what evaluation has taken place of the effectiveness of the Environment Agency in identifying the case for investment in flood alleviation measures following the flooding of October 2000; and if she will make a statement. [73012]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency's medium term plans for capital works are produced on an annual basis and in both 2001 and 2002 included proposed improvement works for many conurbations affected by the Autumn 2000 flooding. Works are already in progress at some locations, including Bewdley, Shrewsbury, Malton and Norton, all of which were flooded. The Agency is still investigating the case for other works in areas affected by the 2000 floods. The Department keeps in close touch with the Agency on its plans.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what PSAs have been set for the Environment Agency regarding (a) flood forecasting, (b) flood warning and (c) flood alleviation; and if she will make a statement. [73019]

Mr. Morley: PSAs are only set for Government Departments. However, in 1999 DEFRA's Flood Management Division developed a series of High Level Targets which require the Environment Agency to report on flood and coastal defence issues on a regular basis. A copy of these Targets was placed in the House Libraries on 23 November 1999. Documents reporting on performance against individual High Level Targets were also placed in the House Libraries on 24 May 2002

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what time scale is set for the Environment Agency to complete the investment in flood alleviation measures arising from a flooding incident; and if she will make a statement. [73020]

Mr. Morley: There is no set timescale for taking forward work associated with flood alleviation measures as this depends on the severity, duration and complexity of individual flooding events. The Environment Agency routinely investigates all incidents of flooding to determine any lessons learned, and revises its procedures accordingly as well as bringing forward flood alleviation measures if required and justified.

RSPB

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much money by way of grants and subsidies her Department has paid to the RSPB, broken down by category, in each of the last five years. [71747]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Direct payments made by the department, since its creation in June 2001, have amounted to £25,000 in 2001–02 and £100,000 in 2002–03 to date. The RSPB may further receive EU funding and grants indirectly from other DEFRA funded bodies. Collecting information on indirect funding and payments made prior to 2001–02 would involve disproportionate cost.

Pesticides

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with representatives of the farming industry on reduction of the use of pesticides. [73199]

Mr. Morley: The Government is committed to minimising the adverse effects of pesticides. This includes the development and promotion of ways in which farmers can limit their pesticide use. In spring 2001 we invited the industry to implement the Voluntary Initiative—a package of measures aimed at reducing the environmental impact of pesticides. The Government is keeping the progress of the Voluntary Initiative under review to assess whether it is delivering real environmental benefits. DEFRA Ministers met with farming and other representatives in May to discuss progress.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations she has had from environmental groups on pesticide residues in food. [73201]

Mr. Morley: Officials from the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), an executive agency of the Department, has received correspondence from various environmental groups, including Friends of the Earth (FoE) and Pesticides Action Network UK (PAN UK), on pesticide residues in food.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with (a) representatives of the food retail industry and (b) consumer representatives on pesticide residues in food. [73200]

Mr. Morley: Officials from the Department meet regularly with representatives of the food retail industry and consumer representatives on pesticide residues in food, in various capacities. The Pesticide Residues Committee (PRC), which oversees the Government's pesticide residues surveillance programme, held its first open meeting last year. Various organisations attended, including representatives from both the food retail industry and consumer groups. Details of the attendees are available on the PRC's website:

www.pesticides.gov.uk/committees/PRC/prc.htm

Examples of organisations my officials met with in the last year are the Chilled Food Association and the Infant and Dietetic Food Association.

County and Agricultural Shows

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total cost was to public funds of her Department's exhibition stands at county and agricultural shows held since 1 April. [73174]

Margaret Beckett: Our records show that as at the end of June 2002, current payments made relating to the financial year 2002–03 by DEFRA for exhibition and related stand costs incurred by attendance at county and agricultural shows totalled £695,121.

EU Advisory Committees

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the mandate of the EU Advisory Committee on food stuffs is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the United Kingdom representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if she will list the items under its consideration; if she will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [63636]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

The mandate for the Advisory Committee for Foodstuffs is set out in European Commission Decision 1980/1073/EEC. The Committee may be consulted by the Commission on any matter relating to the harmonisation of foodstuffs legislation.

The Committee, whose term of office is three years, is composed of ten permanent members and twenty experts, and the secretariat is provided by the Commission. It represents socio-economic interest groups concerned about food safety, such as agriculture, commerce, consumers, industry and workers, and is chaired by a permanent member of one of the economic groups. The Committee has not met during the last twelve months.

The Committee is accountable solely to the Commission which pays the travel and subsistence costs of members amounting to approximately € 290,000 for each meeting. There are no additional costs to the United Kingdom's public funds.

Chernobyl

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what regulations remain in force to deal with the impact of Chernobyl radioactive pollution; which geographical areas are affected; and if she will make a statement. [72991]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

The regulations which remain in force to deal with the impact of Chernobyl radioactive pollution, and the geographical areas covered, are as follows:

For England, The Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Radioactivity in Sheep) (England) (Partial Revocation) Order 1996, S.I. 1996 No. 62, covering parts of Cumbria For Scotland, The Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Radioactivity in Sheep) (Scotland) (Partial Revocation) Order 2001, S.S.I—2001 No. 313, covering parts of East Ayrshire, East Renfrewshire and Stirling Council areas.

For Wales, The Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Radioactivity in Sheep) (Wales) (Partial revocation) Order 1998, S.I. 1998 No. 72, covering parts of Conwy, Gwynedd and North Powys.

Each regulation specifies the exact areas to which the controls apply.

All restrictions were removed from Northern Ireland in April 2000.

DEFENCE

Scottish Executive

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many formal and official inter-ministerial meetings his Department has held with the Scottish Executive since May 1999, broken down by (a) Scottish Executive department, (b) subject and (c) date. [72714]

Dr. Lewis Moonie [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Information is not available in the form requested. Defence Ministers have frequent meetings with Ministers from the Scottish Executive, both formal and informal, covering a broad range of topics.

Temporary Staff

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees under contract from temping agencies worked in his Department; and how much was spent on temporary staff (a) as a total and (b) as a percentage of the total staffing budget in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [72648]

Dr. Lewis Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 24 May 2002, Official Report, column 614W by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) dates, (b) location and (c) sources were of attributable (i) articles, interviews or contributions for the media, books or other journals and (ii) speeches or presentations made in the public domain, by departmental special advisers since March 2001; who in his Department authorised the activity; and on what date this activity was recorded with the departmental Head of Information. [72258]

Dr. Lewis Moonie: All Special Advisers' contacts with the media, and speeches and presentations made by them, are conducted in accordance with the requirement of the Code of Conduct for Special Advisers. All Ministry of Defence civil servants, including special advisers, are expected to keep the Department's Director of Corporate Communications or delegated officer informed of contacts with the media. Details of such contacts are for internal purposes only.

Press Office

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) full time equivalents were employed by his press office and (b) secondees were placed in his press office in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [70548]

Dr. Lewis Moonie [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Details of full time personnel who worked in the Ministry of Defence central Press Office in the last five years, together with the number of established posts, is shown in the table below:

Financial Year	Number of full time personnel	Number of established posts
1997–98	20	*
1998–99	18	19
1999–2000	18	18
2000–01	33	19
2001–02	28	24

*information no longer available

The number of full time personnel includes those employed at any time during the Financial Year. Staff changes will cause these figures to be higher than those shown for established posts.

No records are held on the number of secondees to the Press Office.

Code of Practice on Access to Government Information

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if applicants requesting information under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information are sent an acknowledgement by his Department that their request has been received. [72621]

Dr. Moonie: It is Ministry of Defence policy to answer all such requests under the terms of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information whether or not it is mentioned by individual applicants. It is not general practice in the Ministry of Defence to acknowledge requests for information unless a substantive response cannot be given within 20 working days.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to whom in his Department applicants under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information should address their requests for information; and what the address is of this contact point. [72620]

Dr. Moonie: It is Ministry of Defence policy that all requests for information should be handled in accordance with the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Accordingly, there is no specific person to whom such requests need to be addressed. The MOD Internet site gives contact points for some subjects that attract frequent requests for information, an e-mail address for other enquiries and an address for the Ministerial Correspondence Unit. Our Information Leaflet "MOD and Open Government" is currently being revised to update the contact details and other information given there. In the meantime, Appendix 6 to the Lord Chancellor's Monitoring Report for 2001 gives details for the section which has the policy lead in MOD on the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Parliamentary Answers

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether it is his policy to ensure that documents referred to in parliamentary answers are available via his Department's website; [72293]

(2) for how long he retains documents referred to in parliamentary answers on his Department's website. [72264]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence aims to be as helpful as possible in responding to hon Members' questions. Where it is appropriate to refer hon Members to other documents as part of the substantive reply, this may be done by making hard copies available in the Libraries of the House, or by reference to material available on the MOD website at http://www.mod.uk. However, some documents referred to in parliamentary answers are published by organisations outside the Department and these will not necessarily be appropriate for inclusion on the Department's website. Additionally, not all documents produced by the Department are available electronically.

If a document on the Department's website has been referred to in a parliamentary answer it will generally continue to be available there. Some information of a transitory nature—for example the operational low flying timetable—will be updated periodically, but most reports and policy papers are retained permanently without amendment. Because the structure of the Department's website changes over time, document addresses given in parliamentary answers may also change, but significant documents will almost certainly continue to be available elsewhere on the website.

Departmental Report

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost was of publishing his Department's annual report for each of the past five years. [70475]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence meets the requirement to report past performance and future spending plans to Parliament by producing two separate documents—the Government's Expenditure Plans (published in the spring), and the Departmental Performance Report (published in the autumn).

The costs of printing and publishing these reports are largely borne by The Stationery Office, with whom the contract for producing Command Papers is held. The Stationery Office recoups these costs on a commercial basis through sales of the Reports, including those copies purchased by the MOD for its own use. The MOD also pays for any additional printing or publication costs not covered by the contract with The Stationery Office. Where these costs are readily identifiable they are shown in the following table. The remaining data are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Year	Government's Expenditure Plans (£)	Departmental Performance Report (£)
1998	-	3,700
1999	-	7,100
2000	-	6,803
2001	4,768	12,610
2002	2,020	To be published in October

MOD staff costs associated with producing these reports cannot be accurately assessed, and are not therefore included in the above figures.

Entertainment Costs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for 1997–98 and each subsequent financial year the amount spent by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies in respect of hotel and other similar privately provided accommodation (i) in the UK and (ii) abroad for (A) Ministers, (B) staff and (C) other persons; if he will list the proportion of this cost incurred in respect of (x) food and (y) alcohol in each case; and if he will list the average cost per hotel room or similar unit of accommodation provided in each case. [34433]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on 14 February, Official Report, columns 559–560W.

Departmental Policies (Bristol, East)

Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Bristol, East constituency, the effects on Bristol of his Department's policies and actions (a) from 5 May 1994 to 2 May 1997, (b) from 2 May 1997 to 7 May 1998, and (c) since 7 May 1998. [35603]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer provided by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on 4 March 2002, Official Report, column 80W. Detailed information is not held centrally within the Ministry of Defence and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

I can say though that the Bristol, East constituency contains no MOD sites. However, it does form part of the Bristol Travel To Work Area where there is a number of MOD establishments including the headquarters for the Defence Procurement Agency and the Warship Support Agency that are both based at Abbey Wood in Bristol North-West. Abbey Wood opened in 1995 with the relocation of the then Procurement Executive. Over 500 staff were recruited locally in 1995–96. Now over 5,800 people work at the site; this will rise to over 6,800 in late 2002 with the further co-location of Warship Support Agency staff. In April 1994 there were 294 Full Time Equivalent civilian posts in the Bristol Travel To Work Area, which had increased to 4,039 Full Time Equivalent civilian posts by July 2001 largely as a result of the creation of the Abbey Wood headquarters.

Service posts are not counted by Travel To Work Area. But in July 2000 there were 87 Service posts in the Bristol Unitary Authority Area; this does not include Abbey Wood, which is in South Gloucestershire.

Professional Indemnity Insurance

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts his Department has with consultants; what level of professional indemnity insurance is standard in contracts with small consultants; whether he can make exceptions to the level of professional indemnity insurance; and what recent discussions he has had with other Government departments about the level of professional indemnity insurance. [50824]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 18 April 2002]: This information is not held centrally and can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

The Ministry of Defence does not routinely impose a requirement for a standard level of professional indemnity insurance in contracts with small consultants. Most consultants will take out professional indemnity insurance with a policy value consistent with the risks associated with their business. Unless there are compelling business reasons to the contrary, MOD would not wish to interfere in this decision.

As MOD does not routinely impose a requirement for a standard level of professional indemnity insurance, then the question of exceptions to a standard level does not usually arise. However, MOD would not wish to allow any variations in the levels of professional indemnity insurance which could distort competition or could in any other way be seen as discriminatory. Inevitably, some contracts do carry special risks and, in these cases, it may be beneficial on value for money grounds for the MOD to exclude or limit the contractor's liability. Finally, as with previous Administrations, it is not this Government's practice to provide details of discussions that form part of the process of policy development and analysis.

Munitions (Dean Hill)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the estimated monthly maintenance costs to Defence Estates are from October 2003 in respect of Dean Hill Munitions Depot. [68915]

Mr. Ingram: The Depot is expected to be passed to Defence Estates for disposal in April 2004. An assessment of the monthly maintenance costs to cover responsibilities under the Occupiers of Premises Act will be made nearer to this time.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether homes at DM Dean Hill will be offered to tenants at the 2000 price; and if surplus housing will be offered for sale at this price. [72641]

Mr. Ingram: No decision has yet been made as to the value of the tenanted properties or the price at which they would be offered under the Ministry of Defence Discounted Sales to Sitting Tenants Scheme. Any surplus housing would be sold on the open market by competition.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the relative advantages of (a) natural temperature and humidity controlled storage of munitions and (b) above ground storage units in the case of terrorist or other hostile attack. [72638]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence carries out a continuous assessment of the likelihood and nature of threats to the security of its establishments and other assets. Existing security measures are regularly reviewed and updated to ensure that they match the results of these assessments.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for the existing sports and social club if the closure of DM Dean Hill proceeds. [72640]

Mr. Ingram: No decision has yet been made about future plans for the sports and social club.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what weight was given to the opinions of the customer base when deciding the future of DM Dean Hill; and which customers made representations. [72642]

Mr. Ingram: In the course of conduct of the Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study (DMrs. 2) the study team consulted with all major stakeholders in the munitions business, those both internal and external to the Ministry of Defence. This included all of the MOD DLO/DPA

Munitions Integrated Project Teams (i.e. the authorities with ownership responsibility for MOD munitions), RAF Strike Command and those non MOD external customers of Defence Munitions with whom Defence Munitions has partnering/contractual arrangements (BAe Systems and MBDA (Matra BAe Dynamics Alena)). No representations on the closure of the depot were made by the bodies consulted.

Air Sea Rescue

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on air sea rescue in the UK in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2001–01, and (c) 2001–02. [69697]

Mr. Ingram: Air and sea rescue is undertaken by a large number of organisations in the UK and is conducted from a wide variety of locations utilising many different assets. The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

FYR Macedonia

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service personnel are serving in FYR Macedonia. [70691]

Mr. Ingram: There are 35 United Kingdom service personnel presently deployed to Macedonia.

Three UK service personnel are seconded to the Macedonian Ministry of Defence; two as Defence Advisors and one as a Training Advisor. Three UK service personnel are deployed to Macedonia as part of the British Military Advisory and Training Team supplying low-level counter-insurgency training. The remaining 29 are deployed to Macedonia to provide support to NATO and UK forces in the Balkans.

Sustainable Development

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the interdepartmental discussions on Criterion 8 of the Consolidated Criteria relating to sustainable development. [71539]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's policy on Criterion Eight of the Consolidated EU and National Arms Export Licensing Criteria remains as stated in the criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Neath on 26 October 2000, Official Report, column 199W. However, as stated by my noble Friend, Lord Sainsbury of Turville on 4 March 2002, Official Report, column 73,

"the Government have recognised the need to consider how criterion eight . . . can most effectively be applied in assessing relevant export licence applications. The Government agree that there is a need for clearer procedures within Whitehall for reaching decisions where sustainable development is an issue."

The Government have agreed a two-stage process for assessing the impact of relevant proposed exports on sustainable development as defined in Criterion 8. First a non-exhaustive list of countries identifies those where sustainable development is most likely to be an issue. Second, in cases involving exports to those countries, the Government will look in more detail at the possible impact of relevant proposed exports on the economy or the sustainable development of the recipient country. All Departments involved in the export licensing process have agreed guidance for officials to assist with this process. This guidance is not on the interpretation of policy, which remains as set out in the Criteria, but in the procedures developed to assist in compiling the data necessary for the Government to make decisions.

The list of countries will reflect those destinations where the prevailing macro-economic and development conditions mean that an export is most likely to trigger concern about economic impact or sustainable development as defined in Criterion 8. Those countries eligible for concessional loans from the World Bank's International Development Association (IDA) have been chosen for these purposes as representing the world's poorest. Because the economic and development situation in these countries differs, this part of the process will identify, on a country by country basis, which ELAs the Department of Trade and Industry will pass to the Department for International Development, as well as to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and the Ministry of Defence, for more detailed assessment and advice. The Government will keep the list of countries under constant review to take account of changing circumstances. The list will be published on the DTI website. Additionally, at the request of any Government Department involved in the licensing process, any ELA may be examined for its impact on the economy or sustainable development of the recipient country as defined in Criterion 8 should that Government Department consider this appropriate in the light of the individual circumstances of that application.

To assist in carrying out the assessment required under Criterion 8 where an ELA has been identified as requiring this further detailed assessment, the Government have devised a series of indicators. In the interests of transparency, consistency and predictability, I will outline the nature of these indicators.

The indicators take account of both the conditions prevailing in the importing country and the potential impact of the export. They are designed to help assess whether the proposed export would seriously undermine the economy of the recipient country and whether it would seriously hamper its sustainable development as defined in Criterion 8. The indicators are: relative levels of military and social expenditure and level of military spending as a percentage of GNP; aid dependency compared with the regional average; state of public finances; balance of payments; external debt sustainability; economic and social development, i.e. GNP/capita and Human Development Index; the status of any IMF or World Bank-sponsored economic reform programme. The assessment will take into account the impact of the proposed export on the above indicators.

Criterion 8 refers to

"the compatibility of the arms exports with the technical and economic capacity of the recipient country, taking into account the desirability that states should achieve their legitimate needs of security and defence with the least diversion for armaments of human and economic resources".

The Department for International Development will raise any concerns about "least diversion" by reference to the other agreed indicators.

The cumulative impact of all arms imports to the destination country, not just exports from the UK, would be captured by the Criteria as a whole and by the above indicators.

Sources of information will include the IMF Government Financial Statistics Yearbook, IMF Country Reports and Surveys, IMF/World Bank Annual Progress Reports on the Poverty Reduction Growth Facility and, where appropriate, completion point documents from the Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. Information in the IMF's periodic publication, Recent Economic Developments and the World Bank's World Development Indicators as well as OECD statistics, data and country summaries may also be drawn on.

Export licensing decisions rest with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, taking account of both advice from other Departments, and whether to issue or refuse a licence would be consistent with the Consolidated Criteria as a whole. The Department for International Development as the lead Department for advice on sustainable development issues, will invariably provide advice, although other Departments may also provide advice.

The F680 process, through which the Government provide advice to industry on proposals for marketing or promoting products overseas, does not constitute an export licence. Neither is the existence or otherwise of an F680 approval a factor which is taken into account in the licensing decision. However, the Government have also decided to make procedural changes to the F680 process. Rather than as previously, commenting through FCO, the Department for International Development will be invited formally to comment directly on F680 applications.

Arms Transfers

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to establish a register of UK and EU arms brokers; and if he will oblige UK arms brokering and shipping agents to obtain licences for arms transfers even when the arms do not touch UK or EU territory. [73297]

Nigel Griffiths: I have been asked to reply.

The Export Control Act 2002 will give the Government new powers allowing for controls to be imposed on arms trafficking and brokering.

The Government have proposed to set these powers to establish controls on the supply and delivery, and on acts calculated to promote the supply or delivery, of controlled goods from any overseas country to any arms-embargoed destination, and of long-range missiles and equipment whose export the Government [illegible] already banned because of evidence of its use in torture fr[illegible] overseas country to any other country. These controls [illegible] apply where any part of the activities takes place in the United Kingdom and to activities by United Kingdom persons anywhere.

The Government have also proposed to use the new powers in the Export Control Act to establish controls on various activities connected to trade in military equipment whose export is already subject to control. The activities that will be subject to control include acquisition or disposal of goods. They also include arranging a contract for the acquisition or disposal of goods, or doing any act calculated to promote the arranging of such a contract in return for a fee. The controls will apply where any part of the activities takes place in the United Kingdom. The controls will not apply to a person whose sole involvement in the movement of goods is to provide transportation, finance, insurance or general advertising or promotional services.

The Government propose to establish a register of information on all those applying for licences under the Export Control Act, regardless of nationality, both for exports and for the activities described above, thus creating a database available to be used for licensing and enforcement purposes.

Spare Military Equipment

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to sell reserve spare military equipment; and what measures are in place to monitor the availability of equipment for UK forces. [72542]

Dr. Moonie: When the Ministry of Defence updates its equipment, surplus and obsolete items are sold on a Government-to-Government basis, by competitive tender, public auction or through an incentivised marketing partnership with industry in order to achieve the best return for the taxpayer. When declared as surplus, the disposal by sale of defence assets rests solely with the Ministry of Defence's Disposal Services Agency (DSA). I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 12 June Official Report, column 1260W to my hon. Friend for Reading, East (Ms Griffiths) that recorded the DSA's Key Targets for financial year 2002–03. I also refer to the DSA's Annual Report and Accounts that was laid before the House on 19 July and a copy will be placed in the Library of the House upon publication.

The Ministry of Defence has a comprehensive set of procedures in place to ensure the availability of equipment to the front line and ensure that timely action is taken in the event that problems are identified. The Defence Logistics Organisation (DLO) has Customer Supplier Agreements (CSAs) with front line commands that set out logistic support requirements all of which are monitored regularly in terms of performance. The Disposal Services Agency has a Customer Supplier Agreement with the Defence Logistics Organisation to ensure that clear disposal targets are set and monitored.

Military Exports

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 July 2002, Official Report, column 491W, if he will list companies and individuals who in each of the last five years exported military supplies and who were based in (a) mainland UK, (b) the Channel Islands and (c) the Isle of Man. [72786]

Dr. Moonie: Information held by the United Kingdom Government on companies and individuals involved in the export of military supplies is commercial in confidence and is withheld under Sections 13 and 14 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man operate their own systems of export control closely modelled on that of the UK. Any export licence applications forwarded to the UK Government for advice by their authorities are also commercial in confidence and are also withheld under Sections 13 and 14 of the Code of Practice.

Fairford Tattoo

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what air traffic control restrictions on movements into and out of RAF Brize Norton are necessitated by the air tattoo at RAF Fairford; for what reason the C-17s are training out of RAF Lyneham during the Fairford Tattoo; what consideration his study of RAF Brize Norton, RAF Lyneham and RAF St Mowgan is giving to air traffic control issues; and if he will make a statement. [72863]

Mr. Ingram: There were no air traffic control restrictions on movements into and out of RAF Brize Norton necessitated by the air tattoo at RAF Fairford. A Temporary Restriction on Airspace was implemented, which increased the size of the Station's standard Control Zone.

On 18 July, the "arrival day" of the RAF Fairford Air Tattoo, the C17 that was to attend the event completed a number of training circuits at RAF Lyneham. This training could have been undertaken at any location where suitable support and infrastructure facilities exist. It is not unusual for aircrew to undertake training away from their station as this increases the variety and thus value of their training.

Appropriate consultation and assessment is being undertaken on the air traffic control aspects of the basing options being considered as part of the Strategic Review. It would not be appropriate to comment on specific details of the Strategic Review until the report is complete.

12 Mechanised Brigade

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to bring the 12 Mechanised Infantry Brigade at Aldershot up to full manpower strength. [72937]

Mr. Ingram: 12 Mechanised Brigade is a grouping of Infantry, Cavalry and Artillery regiments and supporting units, together with many supporting cap badges that are based throughout the country. The major units are stationed at Aldershot, Pirbright and Tidworth.

The Brigade is an integral part of the Formation Readiness Cycle (FRC). As such, it spends one year providing troops for standing operations, one year in intensive training for war fighting, and on year as the Army's High Readiness Mechanised Brigade. During the High Readiness Year, the Brigade is liable for short-notice deployments in response to emerging crisis throughout the world. Under the FRC, elements of 12 Mechanised Brigade are already deployed: the Welsh Guards are in the Balkans, and Brigade Headquarters and 228 Signal Squadron, as well as 1 Battalion the Staffordshire Regiment (Armoured Infantry Battalion) will deploy to Kosovo (Operation AGRICOLA) between November 2002 and May 2003. The Brigade routinely requires augmentation from individuals or formed sub-units to meet the particular requirements of the roles it performs.

Currently, 12 Mechanised Brigade's strength is 2,773 personnel; 98 per cent of its required liability of 2,824 personnel. There are no specific recruitment drives aimed at manning 12 Mechanised Brigade, however, action is being taken in a wide range of areas with the aim of increasing Army recruiting, both for officers and soldiers, co-ordinated by the Army Training and Recruiting Agency's Recruiting Group. Indeed, from 1 April 2002, 93 Regimental Recruiting Teams (RRTs), encompassing existing RRTs and the former Mobile Display Teams, staffed by Field Army personnel have been in operation.

Army Infantry Units

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on allowing regular Army infantry units some special forces training in order to upgrade skills and make them more versatile. [72934]

Mr. Ingram: Regular infantry units do not require Special Forces training. The infantry has available to it the training appropriate to its role.

Manoeuvre Brigades

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the shortfall in manpower is in each of the six manoeuvre brigades. [72938]

Mr. Ingram: The liability and actual strength of each of the six manoeuvre brigades is detailed in the table below:

	Establishment requirement	Actual strength	As a percentage
1 UK Armoured Division
4 Armoured Brigade	4,579	4,239	93
7 Armoured Brigade	4,903	4,587	94
20 Armoured Brigade	3,945	3,706	94
3 (UK) Division
1 Mechanised Brigade	2,234	2,171	97
12 Mechanised Brigade	2,824	2,773	98
19 Mechanised Brigade	2,234	2,071	92

Pay as you Dine

Sandra Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the MoD will begin pilot projects on the selected sites to trial Pay as you Dine for military sites. [71800]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 24 July 2002]: Pay As You Dine (PAYD) trials are to be progressively launched at 10 military sites within Great Britain over the next eight months. The first two trials will begin at Hyde Park Barracks, London (target start early September 2002) and HMS Seahawk, Helston, Cornwall (target start by the end of September 2002). A start date for the third trial at RAF Henlow, Bedfordshire has not yet been finalised, but is expected to be towards the end of October 2002.

The remaining seven trial sites will be:

Norton Manor Camp, Taunton; Marchwood Military Port; Cawdor Barracks, Haverfordwest; Battlesbury Barracks, Warminster; Wattisham Airfield, Ipswich; Fort George, Inverness and RAF Leuchars, North East Fife.

Negotiations with industry about launching trials at these remaining sites will not begin until the first two trials are successfully underway, so it is not possible to be precise about start dates, but the aim is to have all ten trials running by April 2003.

Military Sites (Somerset)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list active military sites in Somerset. [73261]

Dr. Moonie: The following sites belonging to the Ministry of Defence are active in Somerset:

ACIO and satellite—35 East Street, Taunton
Hydrographic Office, Taunton
Mount House, Taunton
Norton Manor Camp, Taunton
Bombing Range, Bridgwater Bay
RNAS Yeovilton
Maltravers House, Yeovil
Yoxter Range, Priddy
Langport Range
Merryfield Airfield, Ilchester

MOD Sites in Bristol, Bath and the former county of Avon have been excluded.

Land Ownership (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sites in his Department's ownership in Hampshire are under review with regard to their continuing use by his Department; when a decision is expected on each of these sites; and if he will make a statement. [70756]

Dr. Moonie: All Ministry of Defence sites in Great Britain are currently under review by the MOD Core Sites team to achieve the objective set out in the MOD Estate Strategy, of identifying Core Sites by the end of 2002. This list will be used to inform future decisions regarding the utilisation of the estate.

Housing

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much military service personnel housing is owned by his Department in (a) the UK and (b) overseas, [54643]

Dr. Moonie: Most of the Families Quarters estate in England and Wales was sold to Annington Homes Ltd (AHL) in November 1996. The Defence Housing Executive (DHE) leases back from AHL the properties it needs to house Service families (some 45,000).

However, a number of Service Family Quarters in England and Wales continue to be directly owned by the Ministry of Defence, as do all those in Scotland.

So far as overseas locations are concerned, many of the properties used are not owned by MOD but are hirings or form part of an MOU or agreement with the country concerned. In Germany, for example, Service Families Accommodation (some 8,456 units) is owned by the Federal Government, although the MOD has stewardship of it.

The most recent figures available are:

Area	Number of Quarters
England Scotland and Wales	52,600 in total (of which only some 7,000 are owned by MOD or leased under PFI arrangements)
England Scotland and Wales—identified for disposal	2,500 (mainly AHL but figure cannot be split further)
England Scotland and Wales—managed empty	6,300 (mainly AHL but will include some owned properties)
Northern Ireland	3,200
Overseas	10,787

The figures for housing in England, Wales and Northern Ireland are as at 2 April 2002. The figures for housing overseas are drawn from the Stewardship Report on the Defence Estate published in January 2002 and represents the latest available figures. All figures exclude Single Living Accommodation (SLA).

Annington Homes Ltd.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate has been made of the (a) capital and (b) revenue loss to public funds of the sale of the Defence Service families accommodation to Annington Homes Ltd. in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [73685]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested is not available. The sale of the Married Quarters Estate to Annington Homes Ltd took place in November 1996, under the previous Administration and raised £1.662 billion for the Exchequer. Since then the Sale Agreement has been the subject of parliamentary and financial scrutiny and I would refer my hon. Friend to the House of Commons Defence Committee Report of the Sale of the Married Quarters Estate (HC94) dated 19 February 1997 and the Report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on The Sale of the Married Quarters Estate dated 31 July 1997.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 11 July 2002, Official Report, column 1138W, how much has been received by the Exchequer under the Sale of Agreement profit share scheme with Annington Homes Limited in respect of former service families' accommodation in (a) Colchester and (b) England and Wales; and what the average share from sales of dwellings was in (i) Colchester and (ii) England and Wales; [73023]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 11 July 2002, Official Report, column 1138W, how many service families' accommodation units in England and Wales were sold to Annington Homes Limited; and what the average price per dwelling was; [73025]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 11 July 2002, Official Report, column 1138W, how much has been paid to Annington Homes Limited for family quarters in (a) England and Wales, (b) Colchester, (c) Scotland and

(d) Northern Ireland since the sale of service families' accommodation and the commencement of the leaseback agreement. [73024]

Dr. Moonie: No receipts from the profit share arrangements have so far been received for properties released at Colchester. 46 properties passed to Annington at the time of the sale in 1996 did not trigger a profit share payment when sold. A further release of 36 properties is expected to result in a receipt. But this has yet to be finalised.

More than 12,000 properties have been released to Annington to date. 8,716 properties have subsequently been sold by Annington. A proportion of these have triggered profit share payments totalling £44.92 million. The average profit share payment is thus £5,154.

The sale to Anningtons of 57,428 properties in England and Wales raised £1.662 billion for the Exchequer. The average price per dwelling was approximately £29,000.

Service families' accommodation in Scotland and Northern Ireland was not included in the sale to Annington. Since the sale in November 1996, Annington has received £665 million in rent for properties in England and Wales, including £16.5 million for family quarters in Colchester. The rent paid to Annington is discounted by 58 per cent. from the market value inter alia, to reflect the Ministry of Defence's continuing maintenance responsibility.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the (a) Defence Housing Executive and (b) Addington Housing Association are permitted to raise funds on the private market based on the rental income of his Department's properties. [73028]

Dr. Moonie: In 1996 most Service families' accommodation in England and Wales was sold to Annington Homes Limited (AHL). Under the Sale Agreement, the Ministry of Defence underleases properties from Annington Homes to meet Service requirements. The Defence Housing Executive (DHE), an Agency of the MOD, manages and maintains the underleased properties but does not receive any private sector funding so to do. Annington Homes Ltd is a commercial organisation, and I would suggest that my hon Friend contacts them directly for information about their financial arrangements. DHE also acquires a proportion of its new housing stock through Public Private Partnership arrangements for which its partners do raise funds on the commercial market.

Army Deaths

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many soldiers from Scotland are included in the injury-related deaths in Great Britain, Northern Ireland and Germany between 1990 and 2002 involving serving members of the Army at army bases; [72707]

(2) how many of the injury-related deaths involving serving members of the Army at army bases in Great Britain between 1990 and 2002 occurred at army bases in Scotland; [72703]

(3) how many of the injury-related deaths involving serving members of the Army at army bases in Great Britain, Northern Ireland and Germany between 1990 and 2002 were linked to an army-issued weapon. [72704]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 24 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 9 July 2002 Official Report, column 848W) to my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara). The specific information requested concerning the origin of soldiers suffering injury-related deaths and the precise location of these deaths is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. However, between 1 January 1990 and 23 July 2002 there have been 188 reported deaths of Army personnel due to the discharge of firearms. Again, information on the weapon involved in each case is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Retired Disabled Officers

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many retired disabled officers in receipt of a pension granted on account of medical unfitness attributable to military service have been assessed by the War Pensions Agency as having a 0 per cent. level of disability. [72852]

Dr. Moonie: Attributable disablement pensions may be awarded to officers and other ranks under either the War Pension Scheme (WPS) or the Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS). Under the WPS, War Disablement Pensions or Gratuities would not be awarded in cases where the level of disability is assessed at 0 per cent. Under the AFPS, a Service Attributable Pension would similarly not be paid for conditions where the level of disability is assessed at 0 per cent. Service Invaliding Pensions may be in payment for attributable conditions at 0 per cent. but we could only establish the numbers involved by a review of individual files. The costs of such an exercise would be disproportionate.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many retired disabled officers in receipt of a pension granted on account of medical unfitness attributable to military service who have been identified as potentially entitled to a refund of wrongly deducted income tax (a) have received a full refund, (b) have been declined a refund and (c) have their cases subject to review. [72851]

Dr. Moonie: Of the 1,028 pensioners who have received a full refund of income tax from the Inland Revenue, 46 are retired officers.

Details of the number of retired officers found not to be eligible to receive a refund of tax, or whose cases remain subject to review, are not held, although the total numbers, comprising both retired officers and other ranks, are available. These indicate that to date, the records of 53,503 personnel have been examined and a refund of tax found not to be due, and that 1,466 cases remain subject to review.

Medical Treatment

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which private sector providers were selected in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002 to date for the treatment of armed forces personnel, stating in each case (i) the number of personnel treated in that year and (ii) the cost to his Department; and if he will make a statement. [54133]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 7 May 2002]: The information requested, covering the Financial Years 2000–01, 2001–02 and 2002–03 to date, is shown below.

Financial Year	Number of Referrals	Private Healthcare Providers	Cost (£M)
2000–01	1,634	BUPA, Nuffield Hospitals Group, BMI, Priory, Cygnet, Foxleigh Grove, The Retreat, Caprio, Independent, NHS	0.769
2001–02	2,419	BUPA, Nuffield Hospitals Group, BMI, Priory, Cygnet, Trees Park, Caprio, Independent, NHS	4.095
2002–03 to date	467	BUPA, Nuffield Hospitals Group, BMI, Caprio, Independent, NHS	0.837

Notes:
1. The details provided cover central initiatives managed by the Defence Secondary Care Agency (DSCA), the use of private psychiatric facilities by the DSCA, initiatives run by the Royal Navy and the Army Training and Recruiting Agency (ATRA), plus local RAF referrals. The ATRA arrangements for the referral of potential recruits to private healthcare providers for pre-entry screening are not included, as they are not members of the Armed Forces.
2. Figures are shown for the numbers of referrals. Patients may have had more than one referral. Numbers of patients could only be identified at disproportionate effort.
3. Cost figures represent invoices paid in each financial year. The number of referrals does not correlate precisely with the cost figure for each financial year since some invoices may not be presented/paid until a subsequent financial year.
4. Referrals in 2000–01 include 41 in 2000 for which no associated costs are available and 12, at a cost of £2500, covering 2000–01 and 2001–02 which cannot be apportioned separately to each financial year.
5. Cost figure for 2001–02 is estimated as the final figure is not yet available.
6. Cost figure for 2002–03 represents expenditure to date.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to the answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 597W, on medical treatment, on what date the Rapid Treatment Initiative commenced and with what budget; by what criteria personnel are treated under the scheme; how many personnel in (a) the Army, (b) the Navy and (c) the RAF have been treated under the initiative and at what cost to his Department in each month since commencement; which health care providers have been used under the scheme; and if he will make a statement; [65237]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 597W, on medical treatment, on what date the Waiting List Initiative commenced and with what budget; by what criteria personnel are treated under the scheme; how many personnel in (a) the Army, (b) the Navy and (c) the RAF have been treated under the initiative and at what cost to his Department in each month since commencement; which health care providers have been used under the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [65236]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 3 July 2002]: Following competition, contracts were placed in 2000 with the Nuffield Hospitals Group and BUPA to provide treatment for a Ministry of Defence Waiting List Initiative (WLI). The WLI accepted referrals from 17 November 2000 to 31 March 2001. Treatments were undertaken up to 30 June 2001 and only exceptionally beyond that date. The budget for the initiative was £2.5 million.

Service patients were referred from shortage occupations on the basis that they were expected to be fit for military operational deployment within six to nine months of treatment. The total number of referrals into the scheme by Service was:

Service	Referrals
Royal Navy	168
Army	805
Royal Air Force	435
Total	1,408

Because of the number of hospitals participating in the scheme nation-wide and the number of patients treated, invoices submitted covered variable time periods with some information being provided months after treatments. Consequently, neither the invoice values nor payments made relate directly to individual months and it is not possible to provide a breakdown of the number of patients treated and the associated costs on such a basis. The total amount paid to the contractors for the WLI was some £2.2 million.

Further contracts were placed with the same independent sector healthcare providers for the MOD Rapid Treatment Initiative (RTI). Referrals were accepted during a four-week period in January 2002. Most treatments were completed by 31 March 2002 with a number remaining to be undertaken in June and July. The budget for the Initiative was £1.1 million.

The Initiative was open to Service patients requiring simple acute procedures, who were expected to be fit for normal duties within six months of treatment and who had at least 18 months left to serve in the Armed Forces. The total number of referrals into the scheme by Service was:

Service	Referrals
Royal Navy	51
Army	327
Royal Air Force	201
Total	579

As with the WLI, records held do not allow for the information on patients treated or costs to be readily supplied by month. As at 3 July this year, the amount paid for treatment under the RTI, for patients treated up to 31 March 2002, was some £664,000.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Gulf War veterans in the Portsmouth South constituency have been diagnosed with symptoms connected to Gulf War Syndrome; and if he will make a statement. [64481]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence does not recognise "Gulf War Syndrome" as a medical condition. It accepts that some veterans of the 1990–91 Gulf conflict have become ill and that many believe this ill health is unusual and related to their Gulf experience. A large number of multi-system, multi-organ, non-specific, medically unexplained symptoms have been reported by some Gulf veterans as well as recognised medical conditions. The overwhelming consensus of the scientific and medical community is that there is insufficient evidence to enable this ill-health to be characterised as a unique illness, condition or "syndrome". With the exception of certain infectious diseases that are notifiable by statute, primary care doctors in England and Wales do not report centrally illnesses experienced by their patients. Therefore, the MOD is not able to assess the number of Gulf veterans in the Portsmouth, South constituency who have reported illnesses to their doctors. MOD is advised of cancer registrations in England, Wales and Scotland. We have published data on the incidence of cancer-related deaths in Gulf veterans as compared to a comparable group of Service personnel who did not deploy to the Gulf. Gulf veterans who wish to be examined by a physician expert in Gulf veterans' illnesses can be referred by their doctors to the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (GVMAP) which is funded by the MOD. As of 18 July 2002, 16 Gulf veterans had been seen at the GVMAP who were recorded as living in the Portsmouth, South constituency. Of these 12 were assessed as well at the time of their consultation.

Nuclear Safety

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to test the level of UK compliance with the new REPPIR nuclear safety regulations; what requirements are set down by the Health and Safety Executive in respect of the new nuclear safety regulations; and whether his Department has provided the HSE with information to calculate safety zone distances in respect of a nuclear accident. [73187]

Mr. Ingram: The Radiation (Emergency Preparedness and Public Information) Regulations 2001 sets down the requirements and responsibilities of operators, carriers and local authorities in responding to a reasonably foreseeable radiation emergency.

The Ministry of Defence has undertaken assessments to identify the hazards and evaluate the risks from the Defence Nuclear Programme and has provided to the Health and Safety Executive reports of these assessments including, where appropriate, the area which is likely to be affected by the dispersal of any radioactive substance.

The MOD maintains contingency plans to deal with accidents involving defence nuclear materials and conducts regular nuclear accident response exercises designed to test these plans.

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what nuclear weapons accident exercises his Department plans to hold in the next 12 months. [73186]

Mr. Ingram: The following table gives the current date, name and location of the nuclear weapon accident response exercises that are scheduled to take place during the remainder of 2002. The nuclear weapon exercise programme for 2003 is not yet finalised.

Month	Name	Location
August	Convoy NAR team Standardisation	Leicestershire
September	RAF Station NAR team Standardisation*	Northamptonshire
October	UK/US Table Top Exercise	Norfolk
October	RAF Station NAR team Standardisation*	Suffolk

*RAF Station Nuclear Accident Response (NAR) teams provide immediate response forces for the air transportation of nuclear weapons.

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what lessons were learnt from the nuclear weapons accident exercises in East Anglia conducted on 24 May. [73185]

Mr. Ingram: There were no formal nuclear weapon accident response exercises held in East Anglia on 24 May 2002.

The Nuclear Weapon Convoy Group were however conducting training in East Anglia at this time as part of an ongoing training programme to ensure that the highest standards of safety and security are maintained. The details of this operational training are classified and I am therefore withholding the information requested under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the transfer of activities at Rolls Royce Nuclear, Derby, qualifies for its appraisal under REPPIR. [73188]

Mr. Ingram: It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the commercial activities of Rolls Royce at Derby and the application of Radiation (Emergency Preparedness and Public Information) Regulations (REPPIR). They are a matter for the company and the Health and Safety Executive as the regulatory authority for REPPIR.

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for bringing the non-legislative LAESI guidelines into line with the new REPPIR requirements in respect of the transport of nuclear materials. [73300]

Mr. Ingram: LAESI neither provides safety guidelines or regulations, but provides the Local Authorities and Emergency Services with information on contingency arrangements for accidents during the transport of nuclear weapons, special nuclear material and new and used submarine reactor fuel (known collectively as Defence Nuclear Materials). Our arrangements, as detailed in LAESI, have regard to all current statutory requirements, including Radiation (Emergency Preparedness and Public Information) Regulations (REPPIR), and are kept under regular review.

Afghanistan

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the latest estimate is of expenditure by his Department on operations in Afghanistan. [36936]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 26 February Official Report, column 1133–34W to my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) as part of our presentation of Spring Supplementary Estimates to the House, we estimate the total cost of operations in Afghanistan in financial year 2001–02 to be some £261 million. This figure includes the cost of munitions consumed and represents the additional cost of operations over and above the cost of planned activities.

Procurement

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what equipment in use with the armed forces has been procured from abroad. [72933]

Dr. Moonie: The internationalisation of high technology industries, including defence, means that almost all equipment will be sourced from a range of companies and locations.

The Ministry of Defence's first responsibility as a customer is to ensure it gets value for money for the equipment required by the Armed Forces, principally by means of competition. We do not place constraints upon the nationality of equipment suppliers except for reasons of national security. However, when taking procurement decisions we do take into account wider issues such as security of supply, economic factors, industrial issues and foreign policy.

Details of the ownership of all the contractors from whom we have procured in-service defence equipment, some of which was procured more than thirty years ago, are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Two Operations Commitment

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the two operations commitment. [72939]

Mr. Ingram: The White Paper on the Strategic Defence Review: A New Chapter, Cm5566, addressed this issue (paragraphs 31–32 and 91). Since the Strategic Defence Review (SDR) was published in 1998 the risk of large scale conflict in Europe has further reduced, and relations with Russia have seen a step change improvement. But we have also routinely deployed our Armed Forces on more operations concurrently than we envisaged in the SDR, though the scale of these deployments has been in some respects smaller than we envisaged at the time of the SDR. That has created the risk of overburdening key enabling units, who are essential for all expeditionary deployments (for example, communicators, engineers and movements personnel).

We now need to factor these evolutions in the strategic and operational environment more fully into our planning.

Defence Manufacturing

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place with European colleagues on increasing defence manufacturing co-operation in Europe; and if he will make a statement on progress made since 1997. [72914]

Dr. Moonie: Discussions on this broad ranging topic take place routinely both bilaterally and in multilateral fora. We recognise the importance of such co-operation, and are engaged in a number of initiatives in Europe aimed at paving the way for more effective defence industrial co-operation, improving the management of co-operative equipment projects, as well as identifying further opportunities to co-operate where it makes military, industrial and economic sense to do so. Specifically in the defence manufacturing co-operation field, along with our colleagues in France, Germany, Italy, Spain and Sweden, we signed the Letter of Intent Framework Agreement in July 2000 related to measures to facilitate the restructuring and operation of the European defence industry. This Agreement represents a commitment by the six nations to remove obstacles to industrial restructuring and co-operation. All six nations, in conjunction with industry, continue to implement the Agreement.

Technology Centres

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many defence technology centres will be created; what the cost will be; and if he will make a statement on their use in securing more (a) foreign and (b) domestic contracts. [72913]

Dr. Moonie: The expectation is of six centres being launched, in two tranches of three each, with the Ministry of Defence funding of up to £5 million per centre per year. The supplier consortia are also expected to contribute funding. This investment will result in centres of expertise, focused in industry and academia, in technologies of importance to Defence. MOD will ensure that the centres' outputs can be transitioned effectively into equipment programmes for the United Kingdom Armed Forces. Beyond that, the consortia will own the intellectual property and be encouraged to exploit it in wider markets.

Future Strategic Tanker AirCraft Programme

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future strategic tanker aircraft programme; when the aircraft will come into service; and when the (a) VC-10 and (b) Tri-Star tankers will be retired. [72917]

Mr. Ingram: The Future Strategic Tanker Aircraft (FSTA) is planned to replace our VC10 and TriStar air-to-air refuelling aircraft. An Invitation to Negotiate for this potential PFI contract was issued to industry in December 2000. Bids were received from two consortia in July 2001 and we are currently in negotiations with both bidders. FSTA is planned to enter service in 2008 and is expected to be fully operational by 2012. The existing RAF refuelling fleet is made up of two aircraft types comprising 19 VC10s and 6 TriStars. On current plans, the VC10s are due to go out of service by the end of the decade with the TriStars leaving service shortly afterwards. Precise dates can be amended, as necessary, to ensure a smooth transition to the new planned FSTA fleet.

Hospital Ships

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the proposed timetable and specification are for the construction of the proposed two hospital ships. [72396]

Dr. Moonie: Hospital ships are subject to a number of constraints under the Geneva conventions which limit their military utility severely. I assume therefore that the hon Member is referring to our requirement for an afloat primary casualty receiving capability. This project entered its Assessment Phase last year, and the project team is currently investigating a number of possible solutions to the requirement, including purpose-built or converted shipping, and modular solutions based on other hulls as required. It is therefore too early to suggest a particular specification or timetable for the chosen solution's construction, but the capability is expected to enter service later this decade.

Submarines

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent developments have been made in submarine air independent propulsion; what the implications of this are for diesel submarines; and if he will make a statement on the future of diesel submarines in the Royal Navy. [72537]

Dr. Moonie: We are monitoring the developments in submarine air independent propulsion technologies. Our Maritime Underwater Future Capability programme is looking into the range of future capabilities required by the United Kingdom for the control and denial of the underwater battlespace into the third and fourth decades of the century. We will be considering a wide range of concepts, including innovative solutions combining unmanned underwater vehicles, ships, airborne and land assets, as well as submarines. Our studies will assess the alternative future power source technologies for submarines and unmanned underwater vehicles, but it is too early to make any decisions.

SA80

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent in modifying the SA80; and what plans he has to (a) modify and (b) replace the rifle. [72534]

Mr. Hoon: The approved cost limit of the SA80 modification programme is £92 million and to date £15.5 million has been spent. On current plans the SA80 A2 is due to remain in service until 2020 but will be replaced from 2015 onwards.

In common with all weapon systems, refinements may be made during its service life.

A400M

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the German commitment to the A400M project; what problems have been encountered with compatibility with the C-130; and what the capability of the aircraft is. [72535]

Dr. Moonie: We have been assured by the German Government of their continued commitment to the A400M project. We hope very much that Germany will secure all outstanding parliamentary approvals at the earliest opportunity so that we may press ahead with this important collaborative project.

Our C-130J and A400M aircraft will fulfil complementary roles; we do not anticipate any compatibility issues. The A400M will be a strategic transport asset, capable of carrying a maximum payload of 32 tonnes for a nominal distance of 2,300 nautical miles non-stop. This capability exceeds significantly that provided by the C-130K aircraft it will replace.

The A400M will have advanced avionics and mission systems, allowing the aircraft to be operated by a three man crew.

Armoured Vehicles

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures have been taken to increase the reliability of the Challenger and Warrior armoured vehicles; and what the future replacement of these vehicles will be. [72536]

Dr. Moonie: There are no specific reliability problems with either the Challenger 2 Main Battle Tank (MBT) or the Warrior Infantry Fighting Vehicle. We are, however, always looking for opportunities to improve.

For Challenger 2 specific measures include work to prolong the life of the gearbox, the engine and the track. Trials are also planned to take place in the Autumn to look for ways to reduce dust ingestion. Warrior reliability and safety has already been improved through ammunition feed and transmission modifications and measures are being taken to improve the life of the engine, gearbox and track. Warrior is also due to receive a major upgrade in 2010 which will result in a new turret, an improved cannon and a more sophisticated gun control system.

Challenger 2 and Warrior are due to remain in service until around 2025 and as such the future replacement of these vehicles is only at the very early concept stage.

FIST

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what developments are to be undertaken with FIST; and if he will make a statement. [72541]

Dr. Moonie: The Future Integrated Soldier Technology (FIST) programme will bring the benefits of enhanced technology to the soldier by providing an integrated suite of equipment. The programme will enhance the mission effectiveness of those soldiers committed to dismounted close combat.

A competition is underway to choose a prime contractor for the Assessment Phase. The Defence Procurement Agency is currently assessing bids from BAe Systems Ltd, Marconi Mobile Ltd, Raytheon Systems Ltd and Thales Optronics Ltd. Down selection from four to two companies is scheduled for next month. The selection of the single Prime Contractor for the Assessment Phase programme is planned for early 2003.

C103J

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional expenditure there has been to provide load masters on RAF C103Js with protective headgear; and if he will make a statement. [71714]

Dr. Moonie: When deployed on operational duties, load masters on the RAF C103J aircraft are issued with either the Mk 4A/4 or Mk 4B/4L flying helmet. For head protection, these helmets are standard inventory items and have not resulted in additional expenditure for the C103J.

Unmanned Aerial Vehicles

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which unmanned aerial vehicles are being assessed by his Department; and with what countries these systems are in service. [71640]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The Watchkeeper programme is the only programme in which unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs) are being assessed. Under this programme, an initial assessment is being made of unmanned aerial vehicles developed from the following: Hermes 450, Predator, Eagle, Firescout, Shadow 200, Hermes 180, Ranger and Spectre 3. A number of these vehicles will shortly be selected for a more extensive assessment. We are aware that the Predator vehicle is used by US forces, the Hermes 450 is in service in Israel, and Ranger is in service in Switzerland.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been done into unmanned and uninhabited aerial vehicles; how many of these vehicles the armed forces possess; and what plans there are to extend their use. [72918]

Dr. Moonie: Research into UAVs has been conducted in a range of areas. For example, the Observer technical demonstrator, completed in 2001, examined a small UAV system assessing aerial vehicles, sensors and operator interfaces. The lessons identified fed directly into the Watchkeeper programme. Other research has looked at, and continues to examine, areas such as the potential for man portable UAVs and the potential contribution of UAVs in providing mobile communication platforms to extend the battlespace information infrastructure.

Phoenix is the only UAV system currently in service with the Armed Forces, for which 198 aerial vehicles were purchased.

In addition to the Watchkeeper programme (which will provide a surveillance and target acquisition capability principally in support of land commanders), UAVs are also being considered as potential solutions to elements of the Maritime Airborne Surveillance and Control programme and as a possible contribution to the Future Offensive Air System.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to conduct an impact assessment study of the influence of the Watchkeeper contract on future procurement decisions; and if he will make a statement. [70765]

Dr. Moonie: None.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Watchkeeper programme; what funding has been allocated to it; and what its capability is intended to be. [72916]

Dr. Moonie: Watchkeeper is being acquired to increase the capability of the Armed Forces to undertake Intelligence, Surveillance, Target Acquisition and Reconnaissance tasks. Watchkeeper will principally support land commanders from Battlegroup to Divisional level and will meet a significant proportion of their intelligence and information requirements. The Watchkeeper system will comprise UAVs, sensor packages and associated facilities on the ground to collate, exploit and disseminate the information gathered. The numbers and types of UAVs and the architecture of the overall system are currently being examined in the assessment phase where operational and technical risks are being identified and minimised. We would expect to spend around £860 million acquiring the Watchkeeper system.

Air Defence

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what air defence will be provided for the Royal Navy between 2007 and 2012. [72936]

Mr. Ingram: United Kingdom maritime forces normally operate as part of a Task Group, which protects itself against air attack through a series of "layered" defences. Task Groups typically include Type 42 Anti-Air Warfare Destroyers and Type 22 and 23 Frigates equipped with air defence capability. Many other Task Group warships will also include air defence assets for self protection and decoy systems against air and surface launched anti-ship missiles. The Type 42 Destroyers will be replaced by the Type 45 Destroyers, fitted with the highly capable Principle Anti-Air Missile System (PAAMS). The First of Class Type 45 Destroyer is planned to enter service from late 2007. The first upgraded AEW Sea King Flight will go to sea later this year and will provide a marked improvement in capability to detect airborne threats to the Task Group over both sea and land.

Military Aircraft Manufacturing

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of UK military aircraft manufacturing in Britain; and what measures are being taken to maintain and expand the industry. [72935]

Dr. Moonie: The United Kingdom military aircraft sector is efficient, innovative and highly competitive, and with these qualities it has very strong potential for success in the future. Given the importance of the industry for the supply of equipment to our Armed Forces, not to mention its role as a significant employer, the Government has of course a close interest in its success. The industry already benefits from a large programme of Ministry of Defence work on projects including JSF, Eurofighter, Nimrod, A400M and Apache. Future programmes such as the Future Strategic Transport Aircraft project are also likely to result in a significant programme of work for UK companies. And we will continue to take industrial factors into account within the medium of our competitive procurement policy.

The Government is committed to investing in defence research and technology in partnership with industry, which is crucial in sustaining a viable and competitive industrial base long-term, while focusing more effectively on areas where we achieve best return and where UK industry can be world class. We have also recently extended the tax breaks that are available to companies investing in research and technology.

We will also continue to pursue vigorously the importance of liberalising defence trade and technology flows between our allies. We give strong support to the industry's bids for export orders, and we also welcome inward investment bringing high-value skills and technologies into the UK industrial base.

Battlefield Target Identification

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will introduce ground-to-ground battlefield target identification device equipment; and if he will make a statement. [71914]

Dr. Lewis Moonie: Since February 1999 the Ministry of Defence has conducted research into the feasibility of introducing a ground-to-ground target identification system. As a result we have successfully demonstrated a Battlefield Target Identification Device (BTID): We are now fully engaged with our NATO allies as part of the US-led Advanced Concept Technology Demonstrator programme, which aims to develop a joint coalition concept of operations and to demonstrate interoperability amongst national BTID prototype solutions. A decision on whether to introduce a ground-to-ground target identification system has yet to be made.

Tracer/Watchkeeper Programmes

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost has been to date of the (a) Tracer and (b) Watchkeeper programmes. [70667]

Dr. Lewis Moonie [holding answer 17 July 2002]: The cost of the Tracer programme to the United Kingdom to the end of June was some £120 million. By the time the assessment phase contract is concluded at the end of July 2002 we expect to have spent a further £11 million. Although in October 2001 the Ministry of Defence agreed with the United States DoD not to proceed beyond the assessment phase with this collaborative programme, we expect to apply directly the technical maturity and military utility of a number of key armoured vehicle technologies to the Future Rapid Effect System programme.

Expenditure to date on the Watchkeeper programme is some £26 million.

Galileo Satellite Navigation System

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what strategic military implications he estimates the proposed Galileo satellite navigation system is likely to have. [70699]

Dr. Moonie: The EU Transport Council has called for interoperability between the civil Galileo programme and the United States Global Positioning System, which is used by NATO for military purposes, to be guaranteed by an EU/US agreement. Accordingly, I do not anticipate that Galileo will have strategic military implications for the United Kingdom or for our allies and partners.

ScanEagle

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to use the ScanEagle system for British reconnaissance missions; and if he will make a statement. [70428]

Dr. Moonie: ScanEagle is part of a wider system of UAVs currently being considered, along with a number of other approaches, as a possible contender for the Maritime Airborne Surveillance and Control (MASC) capability. MASC is due to enter service in 2012 and no decision will be taken on the preferred solution prior to the Main Gate approval currently scheduled for 2006.

HEALTH

Lactose Intolerance

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many lactose-intolerant children between the ages of (a) 0 to 5, (b) 5 to 11 and (c) 11 to 18 there were in each of the last 15 years. [72656]

Jacqui Smith: Data from the Department's Hospital Episode Statistics show the number of children between the ages 0–5, 6–11 and 12–18 years admitted for lactose intolerance in National Health Service Hospitals in England during the period 1989–90 to 2000–01 is shown in the table. Data from 1986 to 1988 are not available.

Temporary Staff

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees under contract from temping agencies worked within his Department; and how much was spent on temporary staff (a) as a total and (b) as a percentage of the total staffing budget in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [72650]

Mr. Lammy: The Department does not hold information on the number of employees under contract from temping agencies.

The amount spent on staff from temping agencies for the period requested is shown in the table.

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
(a) As a total[2]	see note[1]	£6,699,209	£8,776,817	£7,339,730	£7,589,927

Looked-after Children (Portsmouth, South)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have looked-after status in the Portsmouth, South constituency; and if he will make a statement. [72672]

Jacqui Smith: There were 250 looked-after children in the unitary authority Portsmouth at 31 March 2001. This excludes children looked after in an agreed series of short-term placements.

Waiting Times

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will rank NHS trusts in England in order of the highest waiting times for hospital operations, according to the numbers waiting (a) over six months and (b) over 12 months for in-patient treatments, at the latest date for which figures are available. [72668]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of patients waiting over six months and over 12 months for elective admission at National Health Service trusts in England as at 31 May 2002 has been placed in the Library. The trusts are ranked, with the trust with the highest number of six month waits at the top.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when information on waiting times data from primary care trusts will be published. [72669]

Mr. Hutton: Waiting times data about primary care trusts that provide consultant inpatient and consultant outpatient services have been published since April 2001.

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been waiting over one year for inpatient treatment in West Surrey. [71910]

Ms Blears: Figures for Quarter 4 of 2001–02, March 2002, show that 558 patients in the former West Surrey Health Authority area had waited over twelve months for inpatient treatment.

Chronic Respiratory Diseases

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to improve services for pulmonary rehabilitation for those suffering from chronic respiratory diseases. [72928]

Ms Blears: We are aware that provision of pulmonary rehabilitation is a service increasingly offered by local departments of respiratory medicine.

It is a decision for primary care trusts, in partnership with other local stakeholders, to assess the health needs of their populations, including those needing pulmonary rehabilitation, and to commission services to meet those needs.

We have also commissioned the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to prepare clinical guidelines for the National Health Service in England and Wales for the prevention, diagnosis, management and treatment of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease. It is expected that the guidelines should be issued around February 2004.

Hospital Appointments

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the practice of hospital appointments officers deferring putting patients on waiting lists until a time nearer an available appointment, with particular reference to the case of Mr. William Wood of Solihull. [73449]

Mr. Hutton: Patients referred for a first outpatient appointment with a consultant should be placed on the outpatient waiting list from the date the referral was received by the Trust. Inpatients should be placed on the inpatient list from the date a consultant makes a decision to admit.

Unfortunately, Birmingham Heartlands and Solihull National Health Service trust have been unable to identify the individual patient referred to. Mr. Woods may wish to contact the trust, who would be happy to look into his circumstances. Alternatively, if the hon. Member would like to write to me giving further details and Mr. Wood's written consent to investigate, I will instruct my officials to look into the matter further.

Golden Hellos

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many golden hello awards of £10,000 have been paid to qualifying medical practitioners, broken down by (a) month and (b) health authority, since April 2001; [73500]

(2) how many golden hello awards have been refused to medical practitioners, broken down by (a) month and (b) health authority, since April 2001; for what reasons; and if he will make a statement. [73501]

Mr. Hutton: Information relating to when health authorities make payments in respect of this scheme is not held centrally. Application forms forwarded to the Department by health authorities for monitoring purposes indicate that at least 630 general practitioners (GPs) have received a payment of £10,000. Information broken down by health authority is shown in the table.

Information on applications that have been refused by health authorities or primary care trusts is not held centrally.

It is for health authorities/primary care trusts to determine whether a GP is eligible to receive payment, in accordance with the guidance issued by the Department.

Elderly Care (Birmingham)

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional (a) capital and (b) revenue will be made available to Birmingham Social Services Department to pay for services for elderly people as a result of the measures announced in his statement on 23 July. [73546]

Jacqui Smith: All local councils will benefit from the extra resources announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer when personal social services resources are set to increase by on average 6 per cent. per annum in real terms over the next three years, 2003–04, 2004–05 and 2005–06. Details of how the increases for next year's social services resources will be allocated to individual local councils will be announced later this year at the time of the local government settlement.

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. Luke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will consult medical experts and interested organisations with a view to conducting a review of his Department's decision not to include cystic fibrosis on the list of readily identifiable conditions; [73634]

(2) for what reasons cystic fibrosis is not included on the list of readily identifiable conditions; [73635]

(3) what plans he has to include in the near future cystic fibrosis on the list of readily identifiable conditions in order to exempt sufferers from prescription charges. [73636]

Mr. Lammy: Our policy is to give priority to helping people who may have difficulty in paying charges, rather than extending the exemption arrangements to people with other medical conditions such as cystic fibrosis.

When we reviewed the prescription charging arrangements as part of the 1998 Comprehensive Spending Review, we noted that there was no consensus on what additional conditions might be included in any revised list of medical exemptions, or how distinctions could be drawn between one condition and another. We concluded that it would not be right to consider one group in isolation.

Design Champion

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 13 March 2002, Official Report, column 1140W, on the Design Champion, if he will make a statement on the Design Champion's input into (a) Walsall Design Examplar and (b) South Manchester Primary Care Trust Development. [73640]

Mr. Lammy: In his capacity as ministerial design champion for the Department, my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State, Lord Hunt of Kings Heath, is personally mentoring four schemes. Walsall and South Manchester were on the original list but the final list includes the following four:

Central Manchester Teaching Hospitals National Health Service Trust

University Hospitals Birmingham National Health Service Trust/South Birmingham Mental Health Trust

Braunstone Integrated Health and Social Care Leicester City West Primary Care Trust

Walsall Hospitals National Health Service Trust Design Exemplar

My noble Friend has visited and had meetings with the trust project teams at Central Manchester and University Hospitals Birmingham.

He has met the Braunstone project team, trust Chief Executive and Chair. Visits to Braunstone and Walsall are being arranged.

Silverlands, Chertsey

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's plans are for the future use of the property Silverlands, near Chertsey. [73648]

Mr. Lammy: The Department is undertaking a review of possible usage for the National Health Service.

Sleep Apnoea

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to encourage good practice in (a) the treatment at primary care level and (b) the self-management of sleep apnoea. [72927]

Ms Blears: Awareness about this condition has developed relatively recently nevertheless, there are already some specialised National Health Service sleep disorder services being developed. Examples are St Thomas's Hospital, London and at hospitals in Cambridge and Leicester. This should form the basis for building expertise within the NHS, and developing uniform service provision.

Primary care trusts, in partnership with local stakeholders, have the responsibility for deciding what services to provide for their populations including those with sleep apnoea. They are best placed to understand local health needs and commission services to meet them.

Roaccutane

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Medical Control Agency will report on the effects of the drug Roaccutane; and if he will make a statement. [73141]

Mr. Lammy: Roaccutane (isotretinoin) is licensed for the treatment of conglobate and cystic acne and severe acne which has failed to respond to antibiotics.

The Medicines Control Agency (MCA) is currently leading a European-wide review of the safety of Roaccutane, which will consider the balance of risks and benefits and will aim to ensure that up to date and consistent information is provided to health professionals and patients to optimise its safe use. This is likely to take several months.

The safety and side effects of all medicines on the United Kingdom market are continuously monitored by the MCA with independent expert advice from the committee on safety of medicines. The side effects known or suspected to be caused by Roaccutane are listed in the product information which is produced by the manufacturer and authorised by the licensing authority. The product information consists of a summary of product characteristics for healthcare professionals and a patient information leaflet.

Early Pregnancy Unit

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost is per pregnancy of an early pregnancy unit. [72994]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not available centrally.

Ectopic Pregnancy

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average cost is to the NHS of an ectopic pregnancy. [72993]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not available centrally.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ectopic pregnancies have occurred in each of the last 10 years; and how many women have (a) been hospitalised and (b) died as a result of ectopic pregnancies in each of the last 10 years. [72995]

Jacqui Smith: The information available on ectopic pregnancy is shown in the table.

Hospital Episode Statistics

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the percentage of ectopic pregnancies caused by chlamydia infections. [72996]

Jacqui Smith: We are not aware of any research undertaken in this country on the percentage of ectopic pregnancies caused by genital chlamydial infection. However, results of a French study published in 1991 indicated that 43 per cent. of ectopic pregnancies were associated with genital chlamydial infection.

The rise in the rates of genital chlamydia infections is of concern and the national strategy for sexual health and HIV commits to beginning a programme of screening for chlamydia for targeted groups in 2002.

IVF

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will take steps to change the HFEA's (a) code of practice and (b) operating procedures to prevent the pre-selection of physical or mental characteristics other than to find a match for those of the prospective father's characteristics or to provide a healthy embryo; [73037]

(2) if he will list the IVF clinics at which prospective parents seeking IVF treatment, may select by donor, (a) eye colour, (b) height, (c) build, (d) hair colour, (e) profession, (f) IQ, (g) sporting ability, (h) career achievement and (i) educational or professional qualification achievement, irrespective of their consistency with the father's characteristics; [73038]

(3) which donor sperm characteristics cannot be requested by potential parents seeking IVF treatment; [73035]

(4) if he will ask the HFEA to suspend the licence of IVF clinics that offer choice of donor sperm characteristics that are not consistent with those of the prospective father or necessary for the creation of a healthy baby. [73034]

Ms. Blears Where donated sperm, eggs or embryos are used in assisted conception treatment, the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's (HFEA) code of practice and the authority's operating procedures put the utmost importance on the welfare of the child to be conceived. A treating clinic must comply with this requirement when choosing the donor to be used. If it does not do so, the HFEA will consider the appropriate action to take, including placing conditions on, or suspending or revoking, the clinic's licence.

The code of practice is currently being revised, and consideration will be given to the need for this message to be reinforced.

The HFEA is aware of recent media reports that some clinics may not be following these procedures. It is currently investigating to ascertain if a breach of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 or the code of practice has occurred.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what controls are in place to prevent the importation of donor sperm to meet desired genetic physical or mental characteristics other than those necessary to produce a healthy child with characteristics consistent with those of that child's prospective parents. [73036]

Ms Blears: The importation of donor sperm is subject to special directions issued by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) in each case. The reasons for the importation must be clearly stated, and the use of the sperm must comply with the requirements that the HFEA places on all treatment involving donated gametes.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what safeguards there are to prevent (a) clinics and (b) prospective parents intervening in IVF treatment to manipulate the physical or mental characteristics of an embryo, other than those necessary to ensure the health and well-being of the baby; and if he will make a statement. [73033]

Ms Blears: Schedule 2 paragraph 4 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 prohibits the alteration of the genetic structure of a cell while it forms part of an embryo. If a clinic did so, the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority would take appropriate action, including placing conditions on, or suspending or revoking, the clinic's licence.

Growth Hormones

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the prescribing of growth hormones for adults on the NHS. [73111]

Ms Blears: Human growth hormone treatment for adults is currently available on the National Health Service subject to a patient's clinician deciding there is a need for such treatment.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence is currently appraising the clinical effectiveness and cost effectiveness of human growth hormone in adults. We expect that they will announce their decision in October.

Departmental Vehicles

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vehicles he and his Ministers have access to, broken down by vehicle type; what the annual operating costs were in each of the last three financial years; how much it costs to convert a car so it is suitable for a Government Minister; and if he will make a statement. [72497]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The Department's Ministers currently have access to six cars:

1 Vauxhall Omega

1 Nissan Primera

2 Rover 45s

2 Ford Mondeos

The total operating costs for Ministerial cars in the last three financial years were:

2001–2002: £318,000

2000–2001: £315,000

1999–2000: £306,000

To make cars suitable for Government Ministers, the only modification required is to fit additional reading lights at a cost of £245 per vehicle.

Commission for Health Improvement

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he anticipates the Commission for Health Improvement being incorporated into the Commission for Healthcare Audit and Inspection. [72480]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Legislation to establish the Commission for Healthcare Audit and Inspection will be introduced as soon as Parliamentary time allows.

Substance Abuse

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding is available through the NHS for education and prevention of volatile substance abuse. [73373]

Ms Blears: The Department has issued drug education and prevention funding, £5 million in 2001–02 and £9 million in 2002–03, to primary care trusts (PCTs). This money is for PCTs, along with local agencies, to support the requirement to reduce the proportion of people under the age of 25 reporting the use of class A drugs by 25 per cent. by 2005. All PCTs and social services departments, in partnership with their local drug action team, will use this funding to commission, primary prevention activity for the general population and primary and secondary prevention activity for all young people identified as at risk, in accordance with the Department's guidelines. This includes education and prevention on solvents and volatile substances.

Heroin Addicts

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many known heroin addicts there are in (a) Britain, (b) Nottinghamshire and (c) Bassetlaw. [71392]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: This information is not available centrally.

The estimate of the number of drug misusers in the United Kingdom is between 200,000 and 220,000. The figure for Nottinghamshire and Bassetlaw is not calculated either centrally or locally at present.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what range of treatments are available for heroin addicts in (a) England and (b) Bassetlaw. [71393]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The types of structured treatment available in England are inpatient detoxification, specialist prescribing, general practitioner prescribing, counselling, day care and residential rehabilitation.

All of these are available to the residents of Bassetlaw, and are delivered by the local community drug team, the young peoples criminal justice team, FaceIT, SORTED, the needle and syringe exchange, Hettys (Families and Carers group) and WAM, as well as out of area residential providers.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many heroin addicts are undergoing treatment in (a) England, (b) Nottinghamshire and (c) Bassetlaw. [71390]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: This information is not available in the form requested.

We can provide data on the number of users presenting to drug misuse agencies (including both doctors and other agencies), with heroin as their main drug of misuse during the six month period ending 31 March 2001. These figures are shown in the table.

Number of persons presenting for treatment at drug agencies, with heroin reported as the main drug of misuse, during the six month period ending 31 March 2001

Area	Number
England	22,431
North Nottinghamshire HA	190
Nottingham HA	109

Note:
This data is derived from the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin "Statistics from the Regional Drug Misuse Databases for six months ending March 2001".

The Office of National Statistics published the results of a special exercise that was carried out to estimate the number of drug users in treatment in England in 2000–01 ("Statistics from the Regional Drug Misuse Databases on drug misusers in treatment in England, 2000–2001" (2001). These are summarised in the table below.

Number of drug misusers in treatment

Area	Number
England	118,522
North Nottinghamshire HA	398
Nottingham HA	900

Note:
These figures are derived from the ONS analysis of data from the Regional Drug Misuse Databases for the six months ending March 2001 together with a census for April to September 2000.

The majority of misusers above were attending community drug services. Sixty-seven per cent. of those drug misusers entering treatment in England for the six months ending March 2001 reported heroin as the main drug of misuse. The percentage of those "in treatment" with heroin as the main drug of misuse is not available

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what method his Department uses to quantify the proportion of young people using heroin in Nottinghamshire. [71394]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The local regional centre for the national drug treatment monitoring system collects information on people presenting for treatment and the drugs misused. Information is also collected at 31 March each year for clients in contact during the year (starting at 31 March 2002); this includes whether they are still in treatment.

The national treatment agency for substance misuse (NTA) report that there is an estimate of the number of known young individuals with heroin addiction produced by the local drug action team (DAT). In 2001–02, the local DAT were aware of about 200 under 19s with a heroin addiction through reporting to them from the young peoples services in Mansfield and from COMPASS.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time for treatment for heroin addiction was in the last 12 months. [71391]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Information provided to the national treatment agency (NTA) for substance misuse on waiting times (the number of weeks from when a drug user presents for treatment, to when appropriate services commence) in December 2001 is broken down by type of treatment rather than main drug of misuse. However the majority of all individuals entering treatment report heroin as their main drug of misuse. The waiting time information from the drug action team templates is shown in the table below.

Average Waiting Time by Modality of Treatment for England in December 2001

Treatment modality	Average waiting time
Inpatient detoxification	12 weeks
Specialist prescribing	14.1 weeks
GP prescribing	5.7 weeks
Counselling	7.6 weeks
Day care	6 weeks
Residential rehabilitation	9.1 weeks

Notes:
From drug action team template returns based on a "snapshot" taken in December 2001.

Drug Action Teams

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis funds are distributed between the drug action teams in England. [71396]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: £191.2 million for drugs misuse treatment services has been allocated to health authorities (HAs) in 2002–03, this represents an increase of £51.5 million or 36.9 per cent. over 2001–02, through the pooled treatment budget.

Allocations to HAs in 2002–03 for drugs misuse treatment services through the pooled treatment budget were informed by a new weighted capitation formula. This formula weights populations of 15–44 year olds for utilisation rates by age and sex, additional need and the market forces factor. All HAs received an increase of at least 30 per cent. over their allocation for 2001–02. The Department provided indicative allocations to drug action team level, but the final decision on allocations lies with the HA.

It should also be noted that additional funding from mainstream health budgets, social services community care budgets and the treatment element of the arrest referral scheme budget are allocated for drug treatment services at local level.

Asthma

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether primary care trusts will be required to audit the number of asthma deaths; and if he will make a statement. [71398]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: There are currently no plans to require primary care trusts to audit the number of asthma deaths.

The number of deaths from asthma is gradually declining. The Department's hospital episode statistics show in-hospital deaths, where the patient's main diagnosis was asthma, falling from 301 in 1998–99 to 213 in 2000–01.

The Office for National Statistics report that the international classification of disease, ICD9 493 (Asthma) recorded for England and Wales that in 1998 there were 1,366 deaths caused by asthma and by 2000 that had fallen to 1,272 deaths.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with the Medical Research Council to give further priority to research into asthma; and if he will make a statement. [72096]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Asthma is a priority area for the Medical Research Council (MRC) and it supports a wide range of research projects looking at asthma ranging from basic research to applied clinical studies. The MRC spend in the area in 2000–01 was approximately £3 million. Under the terms of the Concordat, the Health Departments will be meeting with the MRC later this year. Respiratory disease will be a major item for discussion at this meeting.

Epilepsy

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he plans to address the information and support needs of bereaved families affected by SUDEP and other epilepsy deaths following the evidence of the National Sentinel Audit of Epilepsy-Related Death; [72664]

(2) what steps the Government are taking to ensure epilepsy sufferers receive regular checks on health and medication; [72661]

(3) whether steps are being taken to set a national target for reduction of epilepsy deaths; [72665]

(4) if implementation of the action plan addressing findings of the National Audit of Epilepsy-Related Death will include specific action by primary care trusts; [72667]

(5) what steps his Department is taking to promote awareness of epilepsy and the medical risks associated with it; [72658]

(6) whether the Home Office is being consulted on the action plan to address the finding in the National Audit of Epilepsy-related Death on the adequacy of post-mortem investigations; [72663]

(7) what plans there are for implementation of the action plan addressing the findings of the National Audit of Epilepsy-Related Death; and what funding will be made available for this purpose; [72666]

(8) what plans he has to address the findings of the epilepsy deaths report on the adequacy of post-mortem investigations; [72662]

(9) what measures his Department is taking to improve information and medical training for epilepsy sufferers and carers of people with epilepsy. [72657]

Jacqui Smith: In May 2002, we welcomed the publication of the Government funded national sentinel audit of epilepsy-related death. The audit looked at investigations into epilepsy deaths, care provided prior to death and contact with bereaved families. We have given a commitment to consider in full the recommendations of the audit and to develop an action plan later this year to address the key issues. It will need to take account of and feed into a range of other initiatives including the national service framework for long term conditions (NSF), which will have a focus on neurological conditions such as epilepsy. We expect to meet with the epilepsy voluntary organisations shortly, and will consult with others as appropriate.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) published a summary report of the audit. The publication draws the attention of local National Health Service clinicians and organisations to the need to establish or review policies and practices regarding the management of epilepsy and epilepsy related deaths.

The Department is also undertaking a range of other initiatives to improve services for the care and management of people with epilepsy. For example, we have:

Asked NICE to develop a clinical guideline, due in summer 2004, for the diagnosis, management and treatment of epilepsy to help address widespread variations in clinical practice and contribute to the improvement of services. This will be supported by a technology appraisal, due autumn 2003, of the clinical and cost effectiveness of new anti-epileptic drugs in children and adults, to help promote appropriate uptake and equitable access.

Announced that the NSF for long term conditions is expected to develop standards of care for specific neurological conditions, including epilepsy. The NSF is currently planned for publication in 2004 and implementation is expected to start from 2005.

Developed the expert patients programme, which aims to provide training in self-management skills for people with long term chronic conditions. The first pilot phase will include people with epilepsy.

Provided funding to the Joint Epilepsy Council (JEC) to develop its National Statement of Good Practice for the Treatment and Care of People who have Epilepsy, which was published in May 2002. The statement makes a series of recommendations for good quality epilepsy services. It is intended to facilitate commissioning and will be of use to NHS purchasers, providers and service users.

Provided funding to the National Society for Epilepsy for its Living Well Project. The project aims to promote independent living by providing locally based short-term courses for people with epilepsy to develop self-help and self-management techniques.

Local health and social care organisations are responsible for planning and providing services for people with epilepsy, including the frequency of contact. The recently announced budget settlements for the NHS, representing an annual average increase of 7.5 per cent. above inflation over the five years 2003–04 to 2007–08, and personal social services (PSS), representing an annual average increase of 6.0 per cent. above inflation over the three years 2003–04 to 2005–06, will provide the investment needed to support the services which best meet patients' and users' needs.

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to train and promote (a) neurologists and (b) nurses with specialism in epilepsy. [72660]

Jacqui Smith: In the 2002 budget the Government set a target of recruiting 35,000 nurses, 15,000 doctors and 35,000 scientists and therapists. They will become part of the continuing drive to recruit more health professionals for the National Health Service.

The Department fully supports the need for an increase in the number of neurologists. Recommendations by the medical workforce review team are for the numbers of consultants in neurology to grow by some 50 per cent. by 2010, from 326 in 2001 to 496 in 2010, and some of those consultants may choose to specialise in epilepsy.

There are already about 100 epilepsy specialist nursing posts which have been developed in both hospital and community settings. Primary care trusts will be able to decide about the level of future demand in this area. They are best placed to understand local health needs and commission services to meet them.

Autism

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of recent research into the measles virus and the spinal fluid of autistic children; if he will commission further research into this issue; and if he will make a statement. [72183]

Ms Blears: All scientists who feel they have some important research findings should publish their work in a peer-review journal and subject it to scrutiny by fellow scientists. The Government are not aware that this study has been published and therefore are unable to make any assessment or commission any further research.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on research into autism since 1997; and what plans he has to increase money into research. [72532]

Jacqui Smith: The Medical Research Council (MRC) (which is a non-departmental public body which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Trade and Industry via the Office of Science and Technology) is the main public sector body which funds research into autism. The MRC spend on autism since 1997 has been:

1997–98	£905,000
1998–99	£1,041,000
1999–2000	£1,114,000
2000–01	£1,182,000
2001–02	£1,372,000

I announced on 14 February the allocation of a further £2.5 million to the MRC for autism research. This will complement and add to the MRC's current support for research in this field. The MRC welcomes high quality applications for support in any scientific area which will further our understanding of autism, and especially those areas which were highlighted in their review.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was spent in the NHS on the treatment of autism in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what plans he has to increase the level of services available. [72531]

Jacqui Smith: National Health Service expenditure on the treatment of autism is not separately identified. Our increased investment in health, education and personal social services in England will benefit people with autism. It is for health authorities, in partnership with primary care trusts and other local stakeholders, to determine how best to use their funds to meet national and local priorities for improving health, tackling health inequalities and modernising services.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance his Department has given to (a) the Scottish Society for Autism and (b) other organisations helping people with autism in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [72533]

Jacqui Smith: Under the Section 64 General Scheme of Grants to Voluntary Organisations, the Department issues funds to further its objectives in the health and social care fields in England. We have not funded the Scottish Society for Autism. Three national autistic society projects have received funding in the last 12 months:

Project	Amount
Independence and Autism: Good Practice for Service Providers	£49,000
Help—Parental Training	£46,000
Asperger's Syndrome Project	£40,000

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of recent research into the impact on autistic children of a second dose of MMR. [72184]

Ms Blears: We are not aware of any systematic study looking at whether a second dose of MMR has an impact on the rate of autism in children. However, in a recent paper by Farrington et al (2001) (full reference below) they looked at regression in children with autism and found no relationship to either the first or second dose of MMR. This paper was published in a peer review journal.

Sport

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement about funding that his Department makes available for sports projects which improve public health; [72237]

(2) if he will make a statement on the role of sport and physical recreation within plans to improve public health; [72238]

(3) what guidance is available to primary care trusts on developing partnerships with sport and recreation bodies; and if he will encourage the formation of such partnerships. [72236]

Ms Blears: Increasing participation in sport and physical recreation has an important role to play in raising the rates of physical activity and improving public health. The importance of physical activity is recognised in the NHS Plan and national service frameworks. The national service framework (NSF) for coronary heart disease (CHD) requires the National Health Service, working closely with local authorities, to develop local programmes of effective policies on increasing physical activity.

The Health Development Agency has issued guidance to support the preventive aspects of the NSF for CHD. The document contained examples of effective interventions and set out who should be involved in the development of these programmes, including sport and leisure partners. Last year, we also published a national quality assurance framework for exercise referral systems. These schemes rely on close liaison and partnership working between health and leisure professionals.

We recently announced the launch of a new £2.5 million programme on exercise, which is being developed with Sport England and the Countryside Agency. The work forms part of a partnership between the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, the Department of Education and Skills and the Department of Health. The money will be used to set up nine pilots, based in neighbourhood renewal areas, which will test out different community approaches, including sports and active recreation projects, to increasing physical activity.

Mount Vernon Hospital

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to improve the provision of services at Mount Vernon Hospital. [48906]

Mr. Hutton: The Hillingdon Hospital National Health Service Trust has invested £200,000 in ward staff since assuming responsibility for services at Mount Vernon in 1999.

The Trust has employed additional registered medical officers to ensure 24-hour cover. Additional nursing staff have been recruited. A dedicated urology staff grade nurse works at Mount Vernon holding additional clinics and operating lists weekly. The trust has appointed an additional orthopaedic surgeon and a general surgeon during the last year to work mainly on the Mount Vernon site. All Hillingdon surgical and orthopaedic consultants have an outpatient session and at least one operating session at Mount Vernon.

The trust has invested £120,000 in a laminar air-flow system for the orthopaedic theatre to minimise the risk of infection and has invested £100,000 in new instrumentation.

Two additional linacs are to be commissioned at Mount Vernon Cancer Centre in July 2002, and one replacement and two additional linacs are planned over the next two to three years. Two linacs commissioned this year will cost in the region of £1.67 million, excluding accommodation costs. The three further linacs will cost approximately £3 million again excluding accommodation costs. Further investment is planned to maintain the fabric of the building and for equipment replacement as it reaches the end of useful life.

Rehabilitation

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what rehabilitation services are offered to former coalminers and steelworkers in South Yorkshire. [56936]

Jacqui Smith: Due to the prevalence of respiratory and other industrial related diseases in the South Yorkshire population, local health services have increased contact with such diseases. Practitioners therefore have a heightened awareness of the symptoms of such diseases and are able to treat and refer to specialist care where appropriate.

Committee Mandates

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the mandate of the Committee on the action programme on rare diseases in the framework of the action plan for public health is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the United Kingdom representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [57472]

Ms Blears: The Programme of Community Action on Rare Diseases was set up in accordance with Article 5(2) of Decision 1295–1299/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 1999.

The aim of the programme is to contribute, in coordination with other community measures, towards ensuring a high level of health protection in relation to rare diseases by improving knowledge, for example by promoting the setting-up of a coherent and complementary European information network on rare diseases, and facilitating access to information about these diseases, in particular for health professionals, researchers and those affected directly or indirectly by these diseases, by encouraging and strengthening transnational cooperation between voluntary and professional support groups for those concerned, and by ensuring optimimum handling of clusters and by promoting the surveillance of rare diseases.

The Committee consists of two representatives from each Member State, although both do not always attend. The Committee is chaired by the Commission. The Committee is required to deliver its opinion on draft measures submitted to it by the Commission.

The Committee has met twice in the last 12 months.

Costs to public funds were minimal, meetings last one day, the commission pay the travel costs of nominated representatives, UK Departments are required to pay subsistence and UK travel costs.

Details about the Committee, the programme and funded projects can be found on Europa, the EU on-line website: http://europa.eu.int/comm/health/index en.html

Together with Member States, the Commission is currently conducting a review to bring existing legislation on the conduct of comitology committees into line with Council Decision 1999/468/EC, to

"simplify the requirements for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission".

As an obligation to this Decision, the Commission undertook to publish an annual report on the working of committees. The first report was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 26 February 2002 (Com (2001) 783 Final).

As part of the review process, the UK Government have encouraged the Commission to produce and maintain an electronic database of every comitology committee, its agendas and recent actions, to be accessible through its website.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the mandate of the Committee for the implementation of the Decision to set up a network for the epidemiological surveillance and control of communicable diseases is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the United Kingdom representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [57473]

Ms Blears: The Committee for the European Network for the Epidemiological Surveillance and Control of Communicable Diseases was set up in accordance with Article 7 of Decision 2119/98/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council setting up the Network, for the purposes of implementing the Decision.

The Committee consists of two representatives from each Member State: one representing the competent public health authority and the other the national body with responsibility for surveillance of communicable diseases. For the UK, this comprises representatives from the Department of Health and the Public Health Laboratory Service Communicable Diseases Surveillance Centre. The Committee is chaired by the Commission. The Committee is required to deliver its opinion on draft measures submitted to it by the Commission.

The Committee has met four times in the last 12 months.

Costs to public funds were minimal, meetings last one day, the commission pay the travel costs of nominated representatives, UK Departments are required to pay subsistence and UK travel costs.

Together with Member States, the Commission is currently conducting a review to bring existing legislation on the conduct of comitology committees into line with Council Decision 1999/468/EC, to

"simplify the requirements for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission".

As an obligation to this Decision, the Commission undertook to publish an annual report on the working of committees. The first report was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 26 February 2002 (Com (2001) 783 Final).

As part of the review process, the UK Government have encouraged the Commission to produce and maintain an electronic database of every comitology committee, its agendas and recent actions, to be accessible through its website.

Products of Animal Origin

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had concerning the European Commission's draft regulation on official controls on Products of Animal Origin; and if he will make a statement. [62097]

Ms Blears [holding answer 17 June 2002]: The European Commission's proposal for a Regulation on official controls on products of animal origin is currently under discussion. The first meeting in Council Working Group took place between 23 and 24 July 2002. The Food Standards Agency (FSA) is leading negotiations on behalf of the UK. The FSA will be writing to stakeholders to advise them of the issues arising following this meeting and a copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

Correspondence

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for North Norfolk will receive a reply to his letter to the Chairman of the Food Standards Agency dated 30 January. [62087]

Ms Blears [holding answer 17 June 2002]: I replied to the hon. Member on 24 June 2002.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 3 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. A. Starkie. [66208]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 3 July at column 451W.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Turner) dated 4 February and 22 April to the Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Salford (Ms Blears); and what the reason is for the delay in replying. [69458]

Mr. Lammy: Replies were sent on 16 July and 6 August. The issues raised in the hon. Member's correspondence were of a complex nature and required liasing with third parties to provide information.

Frictional Discharge

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, when he expects only frictional levels of delayed discharge to be achieved; [64523]

(2) how many people he estimates have experienced frictional discharge for each quarter of the last year; and how many he expects to experience frictional discharge in the next year. [64668]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 27 June 2002]: The Government's target is to end widespread delayed discharges by 2004.

The Government are determined to continue to make reducing delayed discharge a priority area. This is the key to getting the right care, in the right place, at the right time for all patients. Under this year's budget, overall social services funding will increase by six per cent. and we intend to bring forward legislation to ensure that good partnership working between the National Health Service and local authority social services reduces the number of delays even further.

Wanless Report

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to implement the recommendations of the Wanless report. [64548]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget statement on 17 April 2002 announced unprecedented annual average increases for the National Health Service in England of 7.3 per cent. per annum over five years from 2003–04 to 2007–08, on the basis of stage 1 resource budgeting. This is the level of increase recommended by the Wanless report under its "fully engaged" scenario. We are currently considering how best to take forward the other recommendations of the Wanless report.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to undertake further work as part of a whole systems approach to analysing and modelling health and social care as set out in the Wanless report, paragraph 1.12. [65144]

Jacqui Smith: Further requirements for analysis will be considered as part of the normal process of policy development.

Diagnostic and Treatment Centres

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if a hospital previously scheduled to be built under a PFI scheme will be eligible to apply for partial funding under the diagnostic and treatment centre funding programme. [66826]

Mr. Hutton: We are committed to an ambitious programme of new Diagnosis and Treatment Centres (DTCs). Some are on course to be developed as part of PFI projects, others through the use of public capital. We expect local National Health Service authorities to develop proposals based on sources of funding which offer the best value for money and speed of implementation. The ability to provide public funding for a part of a PFI scheme will depend on the degree of separability (and inter-dependence) of the DTC elements from the rest of the scheme.

Smallpox Vaccine

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the smallpox contract awarded to Powderject and supplied by Bavarian Nordic is to be subcontracted to IDT. [67557]

Mr. Hutton: The contract has been awarded to PowderJect. Therefore, PowderJect is responsible for the supply of properly manufactured vaccine that meets our specific requirements.

Under the terms of this contract, the smallpox vaccine will be manufactured in Germany by Impfstoffwerke Dessau Tornav GmbH (IDT).

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long he estimates it would have taken to complete the tendering process for the smallpox vaccine order if the usual tendering process had been used. [67548]

Mr. Hutton: If the usual open tendering processes had been used for the procurement of smallpox vaccine, the complete process is likely to have taken as long as four to five months to complete. Potential suppliers must first submit an expression of interest in response to the 37-day advertisement in the Official Journal of European Communities and must accompany that expression with evidence requested by the contracting organisation. From those who satisfy this first stage, tenders would be invited from some or all, and a period of 40 days is usually allowed for potential bidders to submit bids. There then follows a period during which the tenders are evaluated, terms agreed and a contract is prepared.

Public Consultations

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the public consultations undertaken by his Department since 1997, indicating for each consultation (a) if copies were available online, (b) if copies were available in print, (c) the date the time period given for responses opened and (d) the date the time period given for responses closed. [69801]

Mr. Lammy: Data are only available from 2001 onwards. All consultation material is available ion printed form by request to the Department and all consultations are posted on the Department's website. Details of the consultations undertaken since 2001 were provided in the answer give to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Turner) on Tuesday 23 July 2002, Official Report, column 1096W.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the public consultations undertaken by his Department since 8 June 2001, indicating the (a) length and (b) number of responses received in each case. [68706]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the response given to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Turner) on Tuesday 23 July 2002, Official Report, column 1096W.

Finished Consultant Episodes

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the underlying reasons are for the change in the number of finished consultant episodes between 1997 and 2001 for the treatment of (a) malignant neoplasm of lip, (b) Kaposi's sarcoma, (c) leukaemias of specified and unspecified cell types, (d) carcinoma in situ of cervix uteri, (e) benign neoplasm of mouth and pharynx and (f) benign neoplasm of bone and articular cartilage; and if he will make a statement. [67868]

Ms Blears: The figures for finished consultant episodes in 1996–97 and 2000–01 are shown in the table. The hospital episode statistics database does not hold any information on underlying reasons for the change in figures.

Finished consultant episodes (FCEs) by main diagnosis NHS Hospitals, England 1996–97 and 2000–01

	1996–97	2000–2001
Malignant neoplasm of lip	448	399
Kaposi's sarcoma	172	81
Leukaemias of specified and unspecified cell types	1,421	1,109
Carcinoma in situ of cervix uteri	13,955	10,835
Benign neoplasm of mouth and pharynx	2,531	2,429
Benign neoplasm of bone and articular cartridge	2,134	2,054

Notes:

An FCE is defined as a period of patient care under one consultant in one health care provider. The figures do not represent the number of patients, as one person may have several episodes within the year.

The primary diagnosis is the first of seven diagnosis fields in the HES data set, and provides the main reason why the patient was in hospital.

Data for 1996–97 are adjusted for both coverage and unknown/invalid clinical data; 2000–01 figures are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

UK Clinical Products Reference Source

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to put out to tender the maintenance of the UK Clinical Products Reference Source. [67993]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The UK Standard Clinical Products Reference Source will comprise four distinct elements. Of these, two are already in production: The SNOMED CT drug core, under the terms of the contract between the Department and the College of American Pathologists, and the primary care drug dictionary, on behalf of the Department by the prescription pricing authority.

The remaining two elements are the secondary care drug dictionary and the medical devices dictionary. I can confirm that the maintenance of both these dictionaries will be undertaken in accordance with public procurement European Union and Official Journal of the European Communities regulations and with the National Health Service information authority's procedures for the letting of contracts.

NHS IT Procurement

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is towards using open source software; and what percentage is used in his Department. [69307]

Ms Blears: The Department does not deploy open source software on its information technology network and the current policy is not to use open source software.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to require NHS trusts in the Eastern region to follow the south-west NHS IT procurement model. [73126]

Mr. Lammy: The organisations in the former eastern region will be expected to follow the procurement process agreed as part of the national implementation programme for information technology in the National Health Service, announced in June 2002.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to introduce a single procurement process for electronic patient record systems for the Thames Valley, Kent and Birmingham area NHS trusts. [73127]

Mr. Lammy: The organisations in Thames Valley, Kent and Birmingham will be expected to follow the procurement process agreed as part of the national implementation programme for information technology in the National Health Service, announced by Ministers in June 2002.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS Executive officials directly involved in the establishment of single procurement arrangements for NHS trusts in the south-west were previously involved in (a) development and (b) management of the Hospital Information Support Systems initiative. [73129]

Mr. Lammy: One Departmental official, previously involved with the hospital information support systems initiative, was involved in the initiation of the south west regional procurement process. This official played no part in the project team, and left the project at the time the Official Journal of the European Commission was published. The south west regional procurement process has been run by National Health Service staff, with a project support office hosted by a health authority.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he will take to ensure the fairness and transparency of the procurement processes to be used in implementation of the new NHS ICT strategy; [67998]

(2) whose responsibility it will be to (a) choose and (b) enter into contracts with specific application suppliers from the accredited lists of the new NHS ICT programme; and if he will make a statement as to his Department's involvement in such decisions; [67991]

(3) by what process NHS ICT suppliers will be shortlisted nationally for accreditation; [67984]

(4) what progress has been made concerning the short list of prime contractors to implement the new NHS ICT programme; [67988]

(5) what procurement processes will be used for the implementation of the new NHS ICT strategy; [67985]

(6) what role value for money will play in choosing ICT preferred suppliers to implement the new NHS ICT strategy. [67989]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 8 July 2002]: We are currently developing with colleagues in the National Health Service Purchasing and Supply Agency a procurement strategy to facilitate the acquisition of the necessary goods and services to support "Delivering 21 Century IT" for the NHS. We will publish outline details of the new procurement strategy in the near future.

Procurements are underway in many parts of the country to deliver electronic patient records and other systems and these procurements need to proceed. All public sector procurements have to follow the principle of best value, rather than cheapest price.

Strict rules govern the procurement of goods and services for the public services, including rules published in European Union Directives, by Her Majesty's Treasury and the Department. These will be adhered to adhered to in all cases.

Sausage Casings

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the impact on costs to the sausage industry of a ban on the use of natural sausage casings; [68494]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on the cost base of British abattoirs of a ban on the use of natural sausage casings. [68493]

Ms Blears [holding answer 9 July 2002]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency (FSA) that the basis of their recommendation to the European Commission that sheep intestine be banned as specified risk material is outlined in a report compiled by a group of stakeholders endorsed by the board of the FSA on 13 June 2002. The report considers the potential risk reduction, costs and practicability of a range of further precautionary measures against the theoretical risk of BSE in sheep. Estimates provided by the Meat and Livestock Commission, one of the stakeholders on the group, indicate that the turnover of the sheep sausage casings sector is £24 million per annum, and that the loss of income to licensed abattoirs from the sales of sheep intestine to the sausage casings industry would be approximately £6.5 million per annum. No analysis has been made of the compensating increase in turnover for other suppliers that could arise if other sausage casings were to be substituted for those made from sheep intestines.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on the traceability of natural sausage casings imported into the EU from third countries. [68496]

Ms Blears [holding answer 9 July]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that all imports of meat and meat products from third countries must come from establishments which are approved or authorised by the European Commission and which satisfy the health conditions set out in the relevant EC legislation.

Third country imports must enter the European Union through a designated border inspection post, where they are subject to documentary and physical checks. Consignments must be accompanied by commercial documentation indicating the nature of the product, and the name and identification number of the originating plant. EU establishments receiving consignments of products such as natural animal casings are required to keep the accompanying commercial documents for at least one year after receipt and make them available on request to the enforcement authority.

These arrangements provide traceability of a consignment of natural animal casings back to the plant of origin.

In addition, meat and meat products containing sheep material imported from third countries must be accompanied by a veterinary declaration certifying that the product does not contain, nor is it derived from, specified risk material.

Fat Content (Menus)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for issuing regulations on guidance on fat content on menus in restaurants in the UK in a similar way to that on food bought in supermarkets. [71568]

Ms Blears [holding answer 22 July 2002]: I have no such plans. The Food Standards Agency (FSA) is exploring practical ways to help those who wish to choose a healthy diet to select appropriate options when eating out. The FSA has commissioned the British Nutrition Foundation to examine practice in other countries and relevant research, and to identify actions it might take. The FSA plans to publish the report of this study and discuss the recommendations it makes in detail with interested parties later this year.

Food

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to improve access to fresh and affordable food and produce in the most socially deprived communities. [68343]

Ms Blears: We have in place major programmes to tackle the inequalities that exist in access to healthy food. This includes a Welfare Food Scheme that provides milk for low-income families and a Five-a-Day Programme to increase access to, and availability of fruit and vegetables. Following a successful pilots stage, the new opportunities fund is providing £10 million to set up sixty-six Five-a-day community programmes led by primary care trusts based in deprived areas. A further £42 million is being invested to extend the National School Fruit Scheme to cover over 1 million children from 2002 to 2004.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research he has carried out on the effects of (a) salt and (b) fat in the diet of (i) pre-school and (ii) school age children. [71122]

Ms Blears: The Department has not funded research specifically on the effects of salt and fat in the diet of pre-school and school aged children. However a range of projects has been funded looking at the influence of children's eating habits and other childhood factors impacting on health in later life, such as in the development of adult obesity. The Government have also commissioned national diet and nutrition surveys (NDNS) which provide information on the diet, individual nutrient intakes and nutritional status of the population including pre-school and school aged children. The NDNS for children aged one and a half to four and a half years was published in 1995 and the survey on young people aged four to eighteen years in 2000. Copies are available in the Library.

We are committed in the NHS Plan to working with the Food Standards Agency and the food industry to improve the overall balance of the diet including reductions in the salt, fat and sugar content of processed foods.

Food Safety

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the advice of the Deputy Chief Medical Officer, issued in MAFF News Release 83/97 and in MAFF Food Safety Information Bulletin December 1998, on preparation of fruit and vegetables for small children, has been revoked; and what his Department's policy is on the advice of the Food Standards Agency that fruit and vegetables do not need to be peeled before being given to young children in order to reduce pesticide residues. [71494]

Ms Blears: The Food Standards Agency (FSA) has advised that washing or peeling fruit and vegetables is not required as a protection against pesticide residues (issued on the FSA's website, www.food.gov.uk, on 26 March 2002). However, the FSA continues to advise that it is sensible to wash fruit and vegetables before eating for reasons of general food hygiene.

This follows the FSA's request to the Advisory Committee on Pesticides (ACP) to reconsider the then Deputy Chief Medical Officer's (CMO) advice to consumers about washing and peeling fruit and vegetables in relation to pesticide residues. The ACP assured the Agency and the Department that there are no active substances currently in use where an assumption about the need for washing and peeling was made as part of their approval. The ACP concluded that washing or peeling fruit and vegetables is not required as a protection against pesticide residues and this effectively supersedes the old advice.

The FSA's advice is that when pesticide residues are found in fruit and vegetables, in the vast majority of cases they do not give rise to any health concerns. Where, very occasionally a residue is found which could lead to the acceptable daily intake for the pesticide concerned being exceeded the FSA demands immediate action to remove that risk.

Obesity

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he plans to reduce levels of childhood obesity. [72044]

Ms Blears: Both physical activity and eating habits play a role in overweight and obesity. We have put in place major cross-government programmes of work to ensure that children have access to a healthy diet, and have opportunities to be physically active. This includes £581 million from the new opportunities fund for a new physical education (PE) and sports programme and £42 million to extend the National School Fruit Scheme.

The national healthy school standard, part of the healthy school programme, contains a set of criteria relating to physical activity, and also supports the two hours PE entitlement announced in January 2001. £120 million will support the school sport co-ordinator programme, setting up a network of 1,000 co-ordinators.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are in place to raise awareness about the problem of obesity; what recent representations he has received about obesity; and if he will make a statement. [68995]

Ms Blears: There are a variety of programmes on promoting healthy eating and physical activity, and reducing overweight and obesity which are being developed as part of the national service framework for coronary heart disease. This includes local Five-a-Day community initiatives, based in deprived areas, which provide education about the health benefits of fruit and vegetables, as well as improved access and availability. To increase awareness of the importance of diet and exercise among children, we have a healthy schools programme that aims to promote better health for all children and young people through education on a range of issues.

The Government also acknowledge the setting up of the All Party Parliamentary Group on Obesity, which will increase political and wider public attention to the issue. There are other organisations and charities such as the British dietetic association, the obesity awareness and solutions trust and weight concern who are raising awareness about the problem of obesity and are supported through the Department's Section 64 Grant Scheme.

Traumatic Brain Injury

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the accuracy of using ICD 10 codes to record traumatic brain injury in hospital accident and emergency departments; and if he will make a statement. [68874]

Mr. Lammy: The accident and emergency departments rarely use ICD-10 to record patients. The ICD-10 codes are generally used for admitted patients (either in-patients or day cases) The codes within ICD-10 for traumatic brain injury would be: an unspecified brain injury is S06.9 Intracranial injury, unspecified.

However there are other codes encompassing brain injuries:

S06.—Intracranial injury

S09.7 Multiple injuries of head

T06.0 Injuries of brain and cranial nerves with injuries of nerves and spinal cord at neck level

Newborn Hearing Screening Programme

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which sites have been selected for the second phase of the newborn hearing screening programme; and how he intends to publicise them. [68929]

Jacqui Smith: The final detail for the second phase of the newborn hearing screening programme is near to agreement. Once this has been agreed the sites will be informed. Full details of the sites will be available on the National Screening Committee's website.

Child Protection

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider proposals from the NSPCC for the creation of a child safeguarding board and the establishment of multi-agency child safeguarding teams to increase the effectiveness of professionals working together. [72908]

Jacqui Smith: Evidence and submissions relating to issues raised by the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children campaign have been heard by the Victoria Climbié Inquiry. The Government expect to receive the Inquiry's report later this year. The Inquiry's recommendations, will be given full and proper consideration by the Government.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding has been given to the child protection system in each year since 1997. [72910]

Jacqui Smith: It is for individual councils with social services responsibilities and National Health Service bodies to decide, in the light of their priorities, how much to spend on child protection services. Other statutory agencies, such as the police and education services, also commit resources to meeting their child protection responsibilities, while a number of voluntary organisations also provide child protection services.

However between 1996–97 and 2002–03 the Government increased social services funding by more than 20 per cent. in real terms and will make further annual average real terms increases available of 6 per cent. between 2003–04 and 2005–06.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the Government have taken (a) to make it easier for children to report abuse and neglect and (b) to raise public awareness of child abuse. [72911]

Jacqui Smith: The Government have revised and widely distributed their child protection guidance Working Together to Safeguard Children. This document sets out how all agencies and professionals should work together to promote children's welfare and protect them from abuse and neglect. It is addressed to those who work in the health and education services, the police, social services, the probation service, and others whose work brings them into contact with children and families. All those who work with children and families are expected to retain a clear focus on the welfare of the child and be alert to, and know how to respond quickly and decisively to, potential indicators of abuse and neglect. This greater awareness should make it easier for children to be heard when they report abuse and neglect.

In addition, a range of new mechanisms have been introduced that make it easier for children to report abuse and neglect. These include:

the appointment of the first ever Children's Rights Director for England—Roger Morgan—to act as a powerful champion for some of the most vulnerable children in our country, and to monitor and review the effectiveness of the arrangements in relation to dealing with complaints and representations made by, or on behalf of, children about regulated children's services.

the Education Act 2002, which places a statutory requirement on Local Education Authorities and the governing bodies of schools and further education institutions to have arrangements to ensure that their functions are exercised with a view to safeguarding and promoting the welfare of children, and to have regard to guidance issued by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State when drawing up those arrangements. These new duties will reinforce schools' responsibility to have effective arrangements for identifying and responding to signs of neglect and abuse.

the participation of children and young people in day to day decision making as a key principle underpinning the Government's Quality Protects Programme. Objective 8 of the Government's objectives for children's social services says that local authorities should enhance the involvement of young people in the planning and delivery of services, and in decisions which affect their daily lives, including giving children and young people access to independent advocacy services and mechanisms for speeding up the complaints procedure.

The Government are also providing funding to ChildLine, which was established to listen to children and young people and to offer them counselling, information, support and protection.

Area child protection committees are responsible for deciding what child protection information and advice to make available to members of their local community. However, leaflets advising adults what to do when they have concerns about the welfare of a child or that a child may be suffering, or at risk of suffering, abuse or neglect have also been produced on a national basis by a number of voluntary organisations. These include the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children's Handle with Care (about the dangers of shaking babies) and Partners in Protecting Children. In addition, there are a number of leaflets which provide advice to children, such as Kidscape's Stop Bullying and You Can Beat Bullying.

Care Standards Act

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions of the Care Stadards Act 2000 have come into force; and when the other parts will come into force. [69421]

Jacqui Smith: The majority of the Care Standards Act has already come into force. The details are set out in The Care Standards Act 2000 (Commencement No. 15 (England) and Transitional Provisions) (Amendment) Order 2002 (SI 2002 No. 1790 (C.55)).

The main provisions which have yet to come into force are those in Part VII of the Act which place a duty on my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to keep a list of individuals who are considered to be unsuitable to work with vulnerable adults. This is due to be brought into force in January 2003.

Certain provisions in Part IV of the Act concerning the registration and training of social workers have yet to come into force. They are due to come into force before 1 April 2003.

There are also provisions in the Act to extend certain provisions to other services and establishments. These will only be activated when it is considered to be appropriate and there is no fixed timescale for bringing them into force.

Housing Tsar

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many low-cost housing units for nurses in London have been found by the Department's housing tsar; and how many are now occupied by nurses. [68160]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The National Health Service housing co-ordinator was appointed by NHS Estates in April 2000. He has a target of facilitating access to an additional 2,000 units of affordable accommodation for nurses in London by July 2003 either by directly contracting or assisting NHS trusts in negotiations. The current position is that agreements have been reached for 1997 additional units. Of this figure, 1051 are available but 389 units have only recently been opened and occupancy is being built up.

The Department's housing co-ordinator has also been directly involved in negotiating 50 per cent. of the total starter home initiative budget allocation. This should enable approximately 5,000 staff NHS staff to gain a foothold on the property ladder by 2004. Assistance is in the form of equity loans, interest free loans and shared ownership.

[This information is correct as at Friday 2 August 2002]

Primary Care Trusts

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are issued to primary care trusts about the employment of officers responsible for establishing PFI initiatives. [70049]

Mr. Hutton: The Department issued guidance in 1999 under "Public Private Partnerships in the National Health Service: The Private Finance Initiative—Good Practice". This contains specific instructions for all National Health Service trusts for appointing a project director, his team and their roles and responsibilities.

Pesticides

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is the aim of his Department to encourage ways of improving the use of pesticides to minimise residues to the extent that they are not detectable at the point of sale. [70141]

Ms Blears: The Department have consulted the Food Standards Agency which has provided the following response.

The Agency acknowledges that consumers want food which contains a minimum of pesticide residues even though the authorisation system sets limits for residues in food which protect human health. The Agency is currently drawing up an action plan with the aim of encouraging ways of improving the use of pesticides to minimise residues.

Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answers of 25 April 2002 and 4 July 2002, Official Report, columns 461W and 571W, if he will reconcile the statement that his Department does not collect statistics on the incidence of individual conditions with the statement that his Department collects and uses a wide range of data on morbidity according to the condition of interest and the context of the question to be answered; and if he will collect statistics on Duchenne muscular dystrophy. [70396]

Jacqui Smith: As the response to my hon. Friend on 4 July, Official Report, column 571W states, we do have information on a wide range of conditions, in particular for deaths and hospital admissions which are coded accorded to the international classification of diseases in line with practice in other countries. These can answer many questions, but where there is not a specific code for the condition this is not possible. In the case of Duchenne muscular dystrophy this is included within an overall code for muscular dystrophy and is therefore not separately identifiable. We have no plans for collecting separate data in this area.

Devolution

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the EU Committee for the implementation of the Community action programme on pollution-related diseases in the framework of the action plan for public health is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [70603]

Ms Blears: The European Commission has not yet notified members of the European Union Committee for the implementation of the Community action programme on pollution-related diseases of the date of the next meeting.

It is the role of Departmental officials to represent the whole of the United Kingdom at this committee. In framing of all EU policy, the Department consults fully with all the devolved authorities, including the Scottish Executive, to ensure that such representation reflects all parts of the UK.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the EU Committee for the implementation of the Community action plan to combat cancer is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [70566]

Ms Blears: The extended Europe against cancer (EAC) programme will come to an end on 31 December 2002. The programme has a management committee made up of representatives from each Member State and it is for the United Kingdom to decide on who to delegate to represent the UK. The Scottish Executive are regularly consulted on, and is involved in discussions, at official and Ministerial level, with the Department on the formulation of European Union policy which touch on matters which fall within its the responsibilities. Following the successful outcome of the recent conciliation exercise, a new EU public health action programme will start in 2003.

0870 Numbers

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 11 July 2002, Official Report, column 1205W, for what types of purposes 0870 numbers are used; and what level of payment is judged to be suitable. [71128]

Mr. Lammy: The Department manages one 0870 line, this being the NHS Responseline. This line was introduced by the NHS Executive in April 1997 to provide a service to the National Health Service to call and place orders for delivery of Departmental publications within 48 hours.

This line is charged at the national standard call rates set by Cable and Wireless.

Ambulance Services

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which ambulance trusts train their ambulance staff in obstetrics and gynaecological care. [70729]

Mr. Lammy: Qualified emergency ambulance staff in every ambulance trust are trained to a national curriculum and operate to national clinical guidelines that include the management of obstetric and gynaecological care.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to introduce the provision of stab- and bullet-proof vests to ambulance services outside London. [71080]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 July 2002]: There are no national plans to introduce the provision of light-weight anti-stab vests or bullet-proof vests for frontline ambulance personnel. The use of anti-stab vests or bullet-proof vests is something local managers in ambulance trusts need to consider after undertaking a thorough assessment of the risk faced by their staff, and the need for this type of protective wear.

The London Ambulance National Health Service Trust has recently piloted the use of anti-stab vests at two ambulance stations. The evaluation of the pilots was positive, and this information is being shared with all other NHS ambulance trusts.

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths resulted from the failure of ambulances to arrive at their destinations on 17 and 18 July (a) this year and (b) 2001. [73026]

Mr. Lammy: This information is not collected.

All ambulance services will always reach the scene of an emergency call, although different traffic conditions will have an impact on the response time.

Priority Setting

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 July 2002, ref. 68313, how many priorities were set in the 2002–03 planning and priorities framework; and how many were set in 2001–02. [71594]

Mr. Lammy: There were three major priorities set for the National Health Service in the 2002–03 Planning and Priorities Framework. They were:

delivering emergency services when and where they are needed;

reducing waiting times and delays throughout the system; and improving quality of service and outcomes in clinical priority areas of cancer, heart disease, mental health and services for older people.

These priorities were underpinned by 32 actions, compared with 108 issued in the previous year.

Post Mortems

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many post mortems took place in each of the last five years. [71154]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 July 2002]: The number of post mortems carried out in England and Wales in the last five years is shown in the table.

(000s)	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
Hospital post mortems[1]	3.1	3.5	3.5	N/A	N/A
Coroner's post mortems[2]	123.0	124.4	124.8	124.5	121.1
Total	126.1	127.9	128.3

[1] Series DH1: Mortality Statistics general. Review of the Registrar General on deaths in England and Wales.
[2] Home Office Statistical Bulletin (annual): Deaths reported to Coroners, copies of which are in the Library.

Statutory Instruments

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by his Department since 1 January. [71043]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 July 2002]: Information relating to the number of statutory instruments made by the Department since 1 January 2002 has been placed in the Library.

Community Hospital (Malvern)

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of the proposed community hospital at Seaford Court in Malvern. [70791]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 July 2002]: The South Worcestershire Primary Care Trust is currently considering the business plan for the development of the proposed new unit at Seaford Court. These will be reviewed over the coming weeks, culminating in a discussion at the joint professional executive committee board meeting on 4 September.

[This information is correct as at Friday, 2 August 2002]

Cancer

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to investigate cancer rates at Burnham-on-Sea. [71553]

Ms Blears: The Department is aware of the recent survey by green audit of cancer in Burnham-on Sea, however, it has not been provided with details of the results of the survey. Government are advised on cancer clusters near to nuclear installations by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) which was set up in 1985. This committee is carrying out a very large study of childhood cancer in Great Britain which includes all cases registered since the 1960's (some 33,000 cases). This study is expected to report in 2003 and will include areas around all nuclear installations in Great Britain including Burnham-on Sea. The Government are considering a feasibility study by the small area health statistics unit (SAHSU) of all adult cancers in the areas around nuclear power installations in Great Britain.

Social Workers

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the vacancy rates are for social workers in each local authority in England at the latest date for which figures are available. [71106]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 18 July 2002]: Information on vacancy rates for social workers is not available centrally.

Diarrhetic Shellfish Poisoning

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which coastal shellfisheries the Food Standards Agency has divided the area into zones for the purpose of testing for diarrhetic shellfish poisoning. [71810]

Ms Blears: The Food Standards Agency having considered expert advice has divided four shellfish production areas, the Solent, the Wash, West Mersea, and the Thames estuary, into zones as a result of presence of diarrhetic shellfish poisoning.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Food Standards Agency will divide the Burry Inlet Shellfishery into zones to permit cockle gathering in the parts of the estuary testing free of diarrhetic shellfish poisoning. [71811]

Ms Blears: The Food Standards Agency (FSA) has recently reviewed whether it would be possible to divide the Burry Inlet into zones in order to permit cockles to be gathered in parts of the estuary. Taking expert advice into account, the FSA does not currently consider the Burry Inlet to be suitable for dividing into zones at this time due a number of issues but primarily due to the erratic pattern of the results for the toxin detection on both sides of the Inlet. The FSA is keeping the situation in the Burry Inlet under review and will continue to liase with the local enforcement agencies and industry.

Wage Costs

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the difference in wage costs between Surrey and Durham. [71913]

Mr. Hutton: The weighted capitation formula used to calculate health authority target shares of National Health Service revenue allocations includes a staff market forces factor (MFF) that reflects geographical variations in staff costs. The staff MFF is based on the new earnings survey data set produced by the Office for National Statistics.

In the 2002–03 allocations formula the weighting factor used for Surrey was 1.15 and the weighting factor for Co. Durham was 1.00.

Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate his Department has made of the shortfall of (a) nurses, (b) general practitioners, (c) cancer specialists and (d) consultants in (i) the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority, (ii) Hampshire and (iii) the South East; and if he will make a statement; [72032]

(2) how many (a) mental health nurses and (b) doctors specialising in mental health care there were and what was the estimated shortfall in (i) mental health nurses and (ii) doctors specialising in mental health care in (A) the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority, (B) Hampshire and (C) the South East in each year since 1996; what the projected figures are for (1) 2002 and (2) 2003; and if he will make a statement. [72029]

Ms Blears: Information on vacancy rates has been collected in the National Health Service Vacancy Survey since 1999. Information, taken from the surveys for 1999 to 2002, has been placed in the Library. Details of shortfalls and projected vacancy rates are held at trust level and, therefore, are not available centrally.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much expenditure there was on mental health services in (a) the Isle of Wight, (b) Hampshire and (c) the South East in each year since 1996; what the projected expenditure is for (i) 2002 and (ii) 2003; and if he will make a statement. [72031]

Ms Blears: The information on expenditure on mental illness, not including primary care services for those with mental illness, for the years 1996–97 to 2000–01 is shown in the table.

	Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority	Hampshire	South East
	£000	£000	£000
1996–97	36,312	89,118	412,979
1997–98	39,161	92,295	438,880
1998–99	39,084	96,686	463,522
1999–2000	44,276	113,129	524,989
2000–01	51,866	122,780	615,425

Information for 2001–02 is not held centrally nor is a projection on mental health spending for 2002–03.

Food Imports

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many tests have been carried out by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise on imported foods and ingredients in each of the last five years, broken down by category; and what proportion of those tests identified unauthorised GMO samples. [71252]

Ms Blears [holding answer 19 July 2002]: Responsibility for tests on food imported direct to the United Kingdom from third countries rests with the port health authorities and local authorities which have responsibilities for port health work. Information on tests carried out on imported foods is not held centrally.

Cardiac Services

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's support for heart failure patients. [71657]

Ms Blears: Increased investment and sustained efforts from National Health Service staff in recent years means the NHS is delivering life saving treatment to more people more quickly. A greater number of lives are being saved from premature death through heart attacks. This means more people are surviving with weakened hearts which, with an ageing population, has resulted in a growing number of people living with heart failure.

The national service framework (NSF) for coronary heart disease recognised that there was more to be done to improve the care and quality of life that patients with heart failure experience, and to reduce the number of avoidable hospital admissions. As the early priorities for the NSF are now being delivered, heart failure is now a top priority for the next phase of delivery of the NSF.

The Department will be working in partnership with the British Heart Foundation, the NHS and other key players to ensure high quality care for these patients.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many heart failure patients there were in the UK in each of the last three years. [71658]

Ms Blears: The information requested is shown in the table.

Hospital admissions for Heart Failure (ICD-10 code 150), England, 1998–99 to 2000–01

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
Hospital admissions for heart failure	82,382	80,055	74,441

Note:
The data shown represent the number of episodes that were the first in the spell of hospital in-patient treatment rather than a "count" of the number of patients.

These figures are for England only. Information for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the devolved administrations.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with (a) patient groups, (b) doctors and (c) pharmarceutical company representatives on heart failure. [71659]

Ms Blears: Ministers recently met with the British Heart Foundation to discuss services for heart failure, and Departmental officials have been in discussion with a range of clinicians and pharmaceutical companies. In addition, an expert sub-group of the coronary heart disease taskforce which includes patient representatives has met to inform the development of policy and practice to implement the national service framework chapter on heart failure.

NICE

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he proposes to take to implement the Wanless report's recommendation that NICE, in conjunction with similar bodies in the devolved administrations, has a major role to play in examining older technologies and practices which may no longer be appropriate or cost effective. [71920]

Ms Blears: Proposals for achieving a broader selection of topics for guidance from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, including older technologies which may no longer be appropriate or cost effective, were included in a consultation paper on timing and selection of topics for appraisal which we issued in March. We are now considering the response to this consultation and will announce our decisions later in the year.

European Medical Devices Directive

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 July 2002, Official Report, column 1275W, on the European Medical Devices Directive, ref. 67637, when a response is expected; and if he will place a copy of the response in the Library. [71734]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 22 July 2002]: The European Commission have indicated that they are not yet able to indicate when they will be in a position to send a formal reply to the Medical Devices Agency's letter but I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Drug Treatment Programmes

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the baseline is from which the target on increasing the participation of drug users in drug treatment programmes by 55 per cent. in the 2002 Public Service Agreement targets will be judged. [72262]

Ms Blears: The 2002 public services agreement targets were announced on the 15 July; the baseline from which the target on increasing the participation of problem drug users in drug treatment programmes by 55 per cent. by 2004 will be judged, will be fully outlined in the technical notes which are due to be published shortly.

Diabetes National Service Framework

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce how much extra funding from the health budget over the next five years will be allocated to funding the Diabetes National Service Framework. [72781]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for West Lancashire (Mr. Pickthall) on 10 July 2002, Official Report, column 1049W.

Lung Disease (Sussex)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability of pulmonary rehabilitation services for lung disease sufferers in Sussex. [72481]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Information on the type and location of pulmonary rehabilitation services is not held centrally. It is for health authorities, in partnership with primary care trusts and National Health Service trusts, to ensure that patients have access to health services appropriate to their condition.

Abortion

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when questions on conscientious objection to abortion referral and contraceptive provision to under 16s were included in local audits of general practice; whom his Department consulted beforehand; and if he will make a statement. [72231]

Ms Blears: Best Practice Guidance on the Provision of Effective Contraceptive and Advice Services for Young People was issued to local teenage pregnancy co-ordinators in 2000. The Guidance is a specific action point of the Government's teenage pregnancy strategy and sets out the criteria by which contraceptive advice services should be commissioned and provided. This includes the provision of confidential contraceptive advice to under 16s within the established legal framework, the provision of early pregnancy testing and non-judgmental advice and, where abortion is the agreed course, quick referral to National Health Service funded abortion services in line with the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists evidence based guideline The Care of Women Requesting Induced Abortion (2000).

In 2001 the teenage pregnancy unit provided an audit questionnaire for local areas to review community contraceptive services and general practice against the Best Practice Guidance, in order to identify gaps in provision and plan improvements. The majority of areas completed their general practice audits by March 2002.

The guidance and the audit questionnaire were developed in consultation with health professionals, including those representing general practice on the Government's independent advisory group on teenage pregnancy.

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if it is his policy to respect the conscientious objections of (a) doctors and (b) nurses to taking part in abortion operations; and if he will make a statement; [72241]

(2) what research his Department is undertaking into the conscientious objections of doctors taking part in abortion operations; and if he will make a statement. [72240]

Ms Blears: As part of work to improve access to sexual health services for young people, the teenage pregnancy unit has carried out an audit of services currently provided by general practice. This audit will provide an indication of the proportion of general practitioners, nationally and regionally, who have a conscientious objection to abortion, but does not extend to doctors working in hospitals. An analysis of the information provided by the audit will be made available on the teenage pregnancy unit website by the end of this year.

If medical or nursing staff have strong ethical or moral objections to treatment for termination of pregnancy, it is right that they should not be obliged to participate in this treatment. Their conscientious objection should not be detrimental to their careers and appointments. The exemption for conscientious objection under the Abortion Act 1967, as amended, does not extend to performing the preparatory steps to arrange an abortion, including referral to another doctor if appropriate, where the request meets legal requirements.

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to enable a person born live but who was damaged during an abortion prior to 24 weeks gestation to secure compensation; and if he will make a statement. [72281]

Ms Blears: The Government have no plans to legislate on this issue.

The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists' guideline Termination of pregnancy for fetal abnormality in England, Wales and Scotland (1996) and letter Further issues relating to late abortion, fetal viability and registration of births and deaths (April 2001) state that for all terminations at gestational age of more than twenty-one weeks and six days, which is the threshold of viability, the method chosen should ensure that the fetus is born dead.

All methods of first trimester abortion carry a low risk of failure to terminate the pregnancy, thus necessitating a further procedure. The Department is aware that a small number of women do decide to proceed with the pregnancy, after receiving advice on the possible effects of the treatment on the growing fetus. These women normally go on to deliver healthy babies.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out to test possible harm to the (a) physical and (b) psychological health of women which may be caused by the RU486 pill. [71478]

Ms Blears: All relevant evidence within the published literature has been reviewed in the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists' evidence-based guideline The Care of Women Requesting Induced Abortion (2000) and is referenced in the guideline. In general terms, the research shows no increased risk to the physical and psychological health of women having medical abortion compared to those having surgical abortion. Indeed, there appears to be a reduction in certain physical sequelae including infective sequelae.

Teenage Pregnancy

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of local audits of general practice, referred to in paragraph 5.33 of the Government response to the First Annual report of the Independent Advisory Group on Teenage Pregnancy. [72242]

Ms Blears: We have commissioned from the teenage pregnancy strategy evaluation team a national and regional analysis of the local general practice audit returns.

The analysis is due to be completed by the end of the year and will be placed on the teenage pregnancy unit website and I will place a copy in the Library.

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who his Department consulted before responding to the First Annual report on the Independent Advisory Group on Teenage Pregnancy; and if he will make a statement. [72243]

Ms Blears: The independent advisory group on teenage pregnancy was established to provide advice to Government and monitor the success of the national teenage pregnancy strategy. The group includes a membership drawn from a wide range of individuals and organisations with experience of working with young people and teenage parents. The first annual report of the group set out forty-nine recommendations to Government on the further delivery of the national strategy. The Government response addresses these recommendations to set out a forward action plan for the next phase of delivery.

In addition to the independent advisory group, the teenage pregnancy unit has put in place arrangements to consult and involve the non-statutory sector, faith groups, relevant professional organisations, regional and local teenage pregnancy co-ordinators, young people and parents in tackling teenage pregnancy. The views of these organisations and individuals were taken into account in developing the Government response.

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the analysis of local audits of general practice referred to in paragraph 5.33 of the Government response to the First Annual report of the Independent Advisory Group on Teenage Pregnancy indicates a change of their policy in respect to the right of conscientious objection by general practitioners to taking part in abortion operations; and if he will make a statement. [72233]

Ms Blears: The Government's position on conscientious objection to abortion remains unchanged. Section 4 of the Abortion Act 1967, as amended, provides that, except where treatment is necessary to save the life of or prevent grave permanent injury to the pregnant woman,

"no person shall be under any duty, whether by contract or by any statutory or other legal requirement, to participate in any treatment authorised by this Act to which he has a conscientious objection."

This exemption does not extend to giving advice, performing the preparatory steps to arrange an abortion where the request meets legal requirements and undertaking administration connected with abortion procedures. Doctors with a conscientious objection to abortion should make their views known to the patient and enable the patient to see another doctor without delay if that is the patient's wish.

The General Medical Council (GMC) booklet "Good Medical Practice" states that general practitioners' views about a patient's lifestyle or beliefs must not prejudice the treatment they provide or arrange. If they feel their beliefs might affect the treatment, this must be explained to the patient who should be told of their right to see another doctor. Breach of this guidance may expose a doctor to a charge of serious professional misconduct and disciplinary action by the GMC.

National PAP Screening Programme

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of UK women participated in the National PAP Screening Programme, broken down by age groups (a) under 30, (b) 31 to 49, (c) 50 to 59 and (d) 60 to 64 years, in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [72501]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The national computerised call/recall system for cervical screening was introduced in 1988. Women aged 20 to 64 are invited for a free cervical screening test every three to five years. Women over 65 are invited if their previous two tests were not clear or if they have never been screened.

The coverage of the screening programme is defined as the proportion of women aged 25–64, excluding those "recall ceased" for clinical reasons, who have had a test with a result at least once in the previous five years. The national target across the age range is 80 per cent.

The information requested is shown in the table.

Women screened by the NHS Cervical Screening Programme 1997–2001, England

England					percentage
Age at 31 March	1997[1]	1998[2]	1999[2]	2000[2]	2001[2]

HPV Pilot Scheme

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people took part in the limited implementation HPV pilot scheme in (a) Newcastle, (b) North Bristol and (c) Norfolk and Norwich in (i) 2001–02 and (ii) 2002–03; what the percentage was of women with a borderline/mild abnormality; how much the pilot study has cost since its commencement; and if he will make a statement. [72498]

Ms. Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The human papilloma virus (HPV) pilots have been set up to assess the role that HPV testing may play in the triage of women with borderline and low-grade abnormalities.

Number of HPV tests: 2001–02

	Norfolk/Norwich	Bristol	Newcastle
Human Papilloma Virus (HPV)	2,700	2,200	3,248

The number of HPV tests will reduce in 2002–03 as HPV recruitment has ended. The outcome of the HPV pilots will be available to the Department in autumn 2003. The pilot study cost £1.1 million in 2001–02. Planned expenditure for 2002–03 is £1 million. It is estimated that the overall pilot will cost approximately £2.1 million. External quality assessment, laboratory and primary care training and central co-ordination will cost approximately £200,000–£250,000 for the duration of the pilot.

Smear Tests

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of smear tests in England and Wales resulted in women being recalled as a result of inadequate smears in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002; and if he will make a statement. [72500]

Ms. Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Three and a half million women aged 20–64 were tested for cervical cancer in 2000–01. 9.7 per cent. of smears were inadequate. Approximately 6.3 per cent. of women were recalled as a result of a previous inadequate smear.

Inadequate smears are tests that are not suitable for reporting for clinical or technical reasons. A proportion of inadequate smears is therefore unavoidable.

CT Scanners

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many business plans have been submitted from north-west based hospital trusts in respect of securing additional CT scanning equipment; when the criteria to determine the distribution of additional CT scanners will be decided; and when decisions on new scanner distributions will be made. [72601]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Some individual National Health Service trusts have submitted "cases of need" in relation to the national allocation of 50 additional computed tomography (CT) and magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scanners as outlined in the NHS Cancer Plan. However it is the responsibility of individual cancer networks in partnership with their health authorities to determine the degree of need for their respective populations with regard to access to CT and MRI scanners. There are three cancer networks in the north west, all whom are fully engaged in discussions with the Department and Directorate of Health and Social Care North in assessing the need for CT and MRI scanners.

One of the factors in establishing criteria for the allocation of additional equipment will be the relative provision of CT and MRI services to the population served, together with the efficient use of existing scanners.

We expect the criteria to be published during the summer, following consultation with the new health authorities.

Prompt Payment

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's record on the payment of bills on time over the last two years. [72229]

Mr. Lammy: The payment record of the Department of Health and its agencies is shown in the table.

	No of bills paid	per cent. paid within 30 days or contract terms
April 2000–March 2001	358,523	95.97
April 2001–March 2002	387,119	94.97

Newborn Screening

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department requires primary care trusts in areas where newborn screening has been or is being implemented to allocate necessary funding to enable the screening to continue after the central funding to set up the programme runs out. [72538]

Jacqui Smith: We would expect primary care trusts as part of their priority setting to maintain and improve their services from their overall allocations for 2003–04 and future years.

Second Opinion Appointed Doctors

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role of second opinion appointed doctors under the Mental Health Act 1983. [72135]

Jacqui Smith: The role of the second opinion appointed doctor (SOAD) is to provide an additional safeguard to patient's rights. The Mental Health Act 1983 under Section 58 provides that certain forms of medical treatment for mental disorder[1] require either the patient's consent or a second opinion. In the absence of the patient's consent, and if the treatment falls within the provisions of Section 58, the doctor in charge of the patient's treatment will request a second opinion to certify the treatment proposed.

The SOAD must decide whether the patient is in fact refusing the treatment or incapable of making a decision on it and whether the treatment should be given. The SOAD acts as an individual and must come to his or her own independent opinion as to whether or not the treatment is a reasonable one.

In order to form his or her own opinion the SOAD is statutorily obliged to consult with a nurse and another non-nursing/medical professional, both of whom have been professionally concerned with the patient's medical treatment. The SOAD should also interview the patient in private and the doctor in charge of the treatment as well as considering the medical notes and statutory detention documents.

[1]Section 58 relates to the administration of the following forms of treatment in the absence of consent: Electro-Convulsive Therapy at any time; and Medication for mental disorder if three months or more have elapsed since the first administration of medication.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what fees and allowances are paid to second opinion appointed doctors under the Mental Health Act 1983 in April of each year since 1990. [72132]

Jacqui Smith: The table indicates the fee, subsistence and mileage rates in April of each year. Blank entries are where information is not known at present.

Year	Fees	Subsistence 5–10 Hours	10–12 Hours	Over 12 Hours	Mileage Rate
1991
1992
1993		£4.75	£10.00	£14.75	£0.30
1994		£4.75	£10.00	£14.75	£0.30

Year	Fees	Subsistence 5–10 Hours	Subsistence 10–12 Hours	Subsistence Over 12 Hours	Mileage Rate
1995	£95.50	£4.75	£10.00	£14.75	£0.30
1996	£96.60	£4.75	£10.00	£14.75	£0.30
1997	£96.60	£4.75	£10.00	£14.75	£0.30
1998	£99.25	£4.75	£10.00	£14.75	£0.30
1999	£99.25	£4.75	£10.00	£14.75	£0.30
2000	£102.50	£5.00	£10.00	£15.00	£0.30
2001	£102.50	£5.00	£10.00	£15.00	£0.30
2002	£102.50	£5.00	£10.00	£15.00	£0.30

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors are required by the Mental Health Act Commission to act as second opinion appointed doctors under the Mental Health Act 1983; and how many are in such posts. [72133]

Jacqui Smith: At present the Commission arranges approximately 9,000 second opinions per year and aims to offer second opinion appointed doctors (SOADs) approximately 50 opinions each per year. This equates to a panel size of 180.

At present there are 156 SOADs, compared to 172 at this time last year. The panel size is expected to increase as a result of a forthcoming recruitment exercise. The Commission is also planning to undertake an exercise to consider its current establishment against the number of second opinions requested from each hospital and unit. This will enable the Commission to "weight" each hospital and recruit accordingly.

Doctors (Suspensions)

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 11 July 2002, Official Report, column 846W, on doctors (suspensions), what data is available for the four years preceding 1 January 2000; what conclusions he has drawn as to the reasons for the increase in costs between the first quarter of 2000 and the first quarter of 2002; and what the total cumulative costs of suspensions lasting over six months was for each quarter of (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002 in (i) England and (ii) each region. [70725]

Mr. Hutton: The data collected prior to January 2000 is not considered comparable or reliable. The way in which information was collected regionally varied and often the data was incomplete or inaccurate. Following the publication of the document Supporting Doctors, Protecting Patients in 1999 we have improved the accuracy and reliability of information on suspensions.

The quarterly figures include the cumulative costs of individual cases that may span a number of quarters. When a doctor is no longer suspended, the next quarterly report will cease to reflect the cost of that case. Where the suspension was prolonged, the reduction from one quarter to the next may be quite substantial.

The reported cumulative costs, per region, of suspensions lasting over six months in England for each quarter of 2000, 2001 and 2002 are as follows:

N West	Northern and Yorks	W. Mids	Eastern	Trent	S. East	S. West	London	England	20

The Department is supporting the managers who are dealing with individual cases. It has seconded a former NHS Trust Human Resources Director to assist employers find ways to ending suspensions as quickly as possible.

Podiatric Surgery

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the waiting lists for podiatric surgery. [70376]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 July 2002]: The number of patients waiting for podiatric surgery are not collected centrally.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the total cost to the NHS of suspended doctors in the last year for which figures are available. [68658]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The Department routinely collects information on hospital doctors and community dentists who have been suspended for over six months.

The estimated total cost of hospital medical and community dental staff suspended for more than six months for the year 2001 is £5 million. This is based on costs reported as part of the Department's quarterly data collection exercise. The figure includes some legal and locum fees as well as salary costs.

GPs

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners were connected to NHSnet as at the end of March. [65057]

Mr. Lammy: At the end of March 2002 there were 8,584, 98 per cent., of general practitioners' practices in England were connected to NHSnet out of a total of 8,725.

Jim Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to encourage recruitment of general practitioners to serve in the London Borough of Lewisham. [73237]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are committed to increasing the National Health Service workforce, getting more doctors and nurses into the areas that need them most. We are providing financial and other incentives to support this. These include Golden Hello payments of up to £10,000 to general practitioners (GPs) new to the NHS in under-doctored areas, more flexible employment arrangements through personal medicial services (PMS) and a £55 million package to improve primary care premises in deprived parts of the country.

In London we have established the pan London action group involving all the key stakeholders with regard to the recruitment and retention of GPs in London. This group is overseeing and monitoring the plans which the workforce development confederations have developed in order to recruit and retain the additional GPs we need.

These plans comprise of a number of actions including;

Increasing the number of GPs through dynamic PMS proposals

Additional GPs as a result of more training places

Additional GPs from an increased conversion rate

GPs returning through the retainers scheme and extending GPs working lives

International recruitment including recruiting from refugee and asylum seekers.

The south east workforce development confederation's plan, which incorporates the London Borough of Lewisham, incorporates all of the above and builds on particular successes in terms of international recruitment and PMS pilots.

Hospital Doctors

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes in hospital doctor productivity he anticipates over the next three years. [72902]

Mr. Hutton: We announced the framework for the new consultant contract on 12 June. The new contract will help contribute to increases in National Health Service productivity. It will increase the proportion of time consultants spend on direct clinical care, make job planning an integral part of the relationship between managers and consultants and give greater rewards to those consultants who contribute most to the NHS.

Health Professionals (Vacancies)

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are for (a) nurses and (b) doctors ranked according to health authority (i) at the most recent date and (ii) 12 months ago. [72414]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 4 July 2002, Official Report, column 516W, on health professionals, what information is collected on the number of applications to train as (a) GPs, (b) social workers, (c) physiotherapists and (d) special therapists in each of the last five years. [71944]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Information on the number of applicants for general practitioner (GP) register training places has only been collected from 2001. In 2001 the number of applications for GP register training was 2,239.

Information on applications for social worker training is not collected centrally. However, a recent social care recruitment campaign is hoping to raise the number of people applying for social work training by 5,000 by 2004. The courses will start in autumn this year and the social work admissions service will publish figures in December.

The university and colleges admissions service collect data on the number of training applications for the whole of the United Kingdom for physiotherapists.

Year	Number of applicants
1997	28,534
1998	27,985
1999	26,316
2000	25,025

NHS Dentists/GPs

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for reform in the NHS regarding (a) dentists and (b) general practitioners. [72391]

Mr. Lammy: We intend to publish the Options for Change report on National Health Service dentistry shortly.

Options for Change will propose that new approaches are tested, assessed and fine tuned at a local level through demonstration sites to provide a better deal for patients, dentists and the NHS before any national decision are made. Demonstration sites will be run through the Modernisation Agency who will be inviting formal expressions of interests following the publication of the Options for Change report.

Plans to reform general practice are set out in the new general medical service contract framework, which has been negotiated by the NHS Confederation and the British Medical Association, and accepted by the profession. The Government are committed to investment in return for reform that delivers higher quality and a wider range of primary care services.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of (a) dentists and (b) general practitioners were registered with the NHS in each region in each of the last five years. [72385]

Mr. Hutton: Dentists practising in the United Kingdom must be registered with the General Dental Council (GDC).

The total number of registrations on the GDC register is shown in the table together with the number of dentists working in the National Health Service, in the UK for the five years 1997–98 to 2001–02. The table gives NHS dentists as a percentage of GDC registrations.

The GDC register information is not available by region.

Some of the dentists on the GDC register may not be currently practising in the UK. This includes retired dentists, dentists taking career breaks and dentists currently working overseas.

The total number of dentists working in the NHS includes dentists working in the General Dental Service, Personal Dental Service, Community and Hospital Dental Services and salaried dentists.

Notes:
1. Dentists registered at 31 December each year.
2. Number of dentists at 30 September each year.
3. Data includes all dentists in the General Dental Service, Personal Dental Service, Community and Hospital Dental Services and salaried dentists.

Equivalent information about general practitioners is not available. All doctors working in the UK must be registered with the General Medical Council (GMC). Their names then appear on the GMC's Medical Register. However the Medical Register does not differentiate between NHS general practitioners and any other doctors. The Register may also include retired doctors, doctors taking career breaks and doctors currently working overseas. The GMC Register is not compiled on a regional basis.

The total number of registered general practitioners working for the NHS in England for each of the last five years for which figures are available, by NHS region, is as follows:

Dentists

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists (a) left the NHS and (b) joined the NHS in each of the last five years; what percentage of the total number of dentists (i) left and (ii) joined the NHS in 2002; and if he will make a statement. [72460]

Mr. Lammy: The available information is for the number and percentage of dentists leaving and joining the general dental service (GDS) in England and is shown in the table for the years 1997–98 to 2001–02. Later data is not yet available.

About 90 per cent. of National Health Service dental services are provided by the GDS. Information on dentists leaving and joining other dental services, including the personal dental service (PDS), community and hospital dental services is not collected centrally.

The number of leavers covers all reasons for leaving the GDS including final retirement from dental work and dentists taking career breaks as well as those who left to practice solely privately. Figures from 1998–99 onwards are inflated by the transfer of some dentists from the GDS to some PDS pilots. The total number of dentists includes principals on a health authority list, assistants and vocational dental practitioners.

Since 1997–98 more dentists have joined than left. The number of GDS dentists has increased from 16,387 at March 1997 to 18,254 in March 2002, an increase of 1,867. Dentists are able to vary the amount of work they do in the GDS.

General Dental Service (GDS): Number and percentage[2] of dentists who left and joined the GDS from 1997–98 to 2001–02

2000–01[1]	1,192	7	1,459	8
2001–02[1]	1,216	7	1,366	8

Notes:

1. Figures affected by the transfer of some dentists from the GDS to the PDS.
2. Percentages of dentists leaving and joining are based on the number of dentists working at the start of the year.

NHS Professionals

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the Code of Practice for NHS Professionals. [66844]

Mr. Hutton: The Code of Practice for the Supply of Temporary Staffing was published on 15 July 2002 on the Department of Health website www.doh.gov.uk/international-recruitment/code. Hard copies of the Code will be available shortly, and will be placed in the Library.

Nursing

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government take to promote nursing as a profession. [72444]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are implementing a range of measures to promote careers in the National Health Service, including nurses. These include increasing pay, encouraging the NHS to become a better employer through the Improving Working Lives and Positively Diverse programmes, increasing training commissions, reducing student attrition, running national and local recruitment and return to practice campaigns, and supporting international recruitment where appropriate. Further information on improving working lives is available at www.doh.gov.uk/iwl.

The NHS Careers service was established in April 1999 by the Department to provide accurate and up-to-date information on careers throughout the NHS and to promote nursing as a profession. It has a website www.nhs.uk/careers through which publications can be ordered.

This year's national recruitment campaign ran from 13 February for six weeks and was aimed primarily at raising the profile and the recruitment, retention and return of nurses. Over 51,000 contacts, primarily interested in nursing careers were received at NHS Careers.

Since 1997, the nursing workforce has grown by 31,520. Between September 1999 and September 2001 there was a net increase in nurses working in the NHS of 20,740—the NHS Plan target has been reached two years early. The number of applicants to nurse training has also increased with 40,908 being received in the academic year 2000–01 as opposed to 18,732 in 1997–98.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken by NHS trusts to reduce assaults on nurses. [61447]

Mr. Hutton: Significant action has been taken at both national and local levels to tackle the problem of violence as part of the cross-Government National Health Service zero tolerance zone campaign. Many NHS trusts have taken the opportunity to launch local campaigns with a focus on specific areas of concern.

Recent surveys conducted in the NHS indicate that almost all NHS trusts have now published policies for reducing the incidence of violence, and also provide evidence that a wide range of measures are being introduced by employers to tackle this problem. These include the installation or upgrading of hospital CCTV systems, other changes to the physical environment and the provision of safety awareness training to staff. Many trusts have also reviewed the support available to staff when violent incidents do occur.

For the first time ever, new money has been allocated specifically to support the efforts of managers and staff in tackling violence in the NHS. The new funding is expected to be matched by employers, which means that over the three years over £3 million will be invested in new initiatives to protect staff. The money is supporting a range of initiatives from making improvements to risk assessment process to the purchase of personal alarms. In 2001–02, over £791,110 central funding has been invested to support 173 new local measures to protect staff.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will collate statistics on the number of (a) British and (b) foreign nurses practising in the UK who carry HIV. [73444]

Mr. Hutton: There is currently no requirement on National Health Service employers to offer or require an HIV test prior to employment of nurses, whether recruited from the United Kingdom or abroad. Therefore, information on the number of HIV infected nurses (of any nationality) working in the NHS is currently not collected centrally.

The Department is considering the recommendations of an ad hoc expert group set up to assess the potential health risk posed to patients by health care workers new to the NHS infected with serious communicable diseases, including HIV. Implementation of any resulting change in policy would include consideration of monitoring needs.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses were recruited for the NHS is each of the last five years for which figures are available from (a) Botswana, (b) South Africa, (c) Uganda, (d) Namibia, (e) Tanzania, (f) Kenya and (g) Malawi; and if he will make a statement on recruitment from countries with a high incidence of HIV. [72010]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the country of origin of staff working in the National Health Service is not collected centrally.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 July 2002, Official Report, column 536W, how many of the nurse, midwife and health visitor consultant posts being approved have been taken up by experienced nurses who have returned to the NHS following a substantial period outside the profession. [72838]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The information requested is not collected centrally.

The nature of nurse consultant posts demand a portfolio of career-long learning, experience and formal education, usually up to or beyond masters degree level including research experience and a record of scholarship. Most nurses who have had a substantial period of time outside the profession are unlikely to have the relevant recent experience required for nurse consultant posts.

Wheelchair Services

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to introduce national standards for prosthetic, orthotic and wheelchair services and if he will make a statement. [71797]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: We are currently working with multi professional groups in prosthetic and orthotic services and looking at ways of enhancing patient care through programmes such as the action on orthopaedics and the work of the prosthetic strategic supply group. We will consider in due course, whether any outcomes of this work can be issued as appropriate guidance to the National Health Service.

We are also working with the Modernisation Agency to improve wheelchair services and to spread best practice across the country. Several national groups, with an interest, have been working on standards for the wheelchair service. As the collaborative work progresses, we will review whether one such standard could be given Departmental endorsement.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) residential and (b) nursing homes closed in London in (i) 1999, (ii) 2000 and (iii) 2001. [69966]

Jacqui Smith: The number of residential care homes and nursing homes[1] for each year since 1997 is given in the tables.

Information on nursing homes is collected at health authority rather than local authority level.

[1]General and mental nursing homes, private hospitals and clinics. Includes dual registered homes, therefore the number of residential homes and nursing homes should not be added together.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contingency arrangements (a) his Department and (b) the National Care Standards Commission have made to advise care home managers concerning their legal obligations in respect of staff awaiting the results of a criminal record check after 1 August; how many care home staff are awaiting a clearance check by the Criminal Records Bureau; how long they have been waiting; and what action a home failing to comply with staffing regulations because of delays by the Criminal Records Bureau will be required to take. [71202]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 July 2002]: All the statutory regulations are immediately accessible on the Department's website and the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) internet website. The Care Homes Regulations were published in December 2001 following extensive consultation and were immediately placed on the Department's website.

The NCSC wrote to all pre-existing care homes on 8 March 2002 with a guide to the application of the Care Standards Act. The guide included general information about legal requirements, including the requirement for care homes to obtain criminal records checks on staff. The guide included addresses for obtaining more information. The guide also included an application form for providers to apply for the relevant national standards document. Each set of national standards includes the appropriate regulations at the back.

The NCSC sent a registration pack to all unregistered care homes in February 2002 and sends a registration pack to all new applicants. The pack advises applicants to check the legal requirements before submitting their application to the NCSC.

In addition, the NCSC wrote to all providers in June reminding them of their obligations. This information can be found on the NCSC's website, which also sets out guidance to help providers manage their staff recruitment until the Criminal Records Bureau is fully meeting its targets. The NCSC has also co-operated with the care homes' umbrella organisations, to arrange for publication of this information on their internal sites.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in connection with the implementation of standards 21.3 and 22.2 of the National Minimum Standards for Care Homes for Older People; if he will place them in the Library; what assessment he has made of the impact of standards 21.3 and 22.2 of the National Minimum Standards for Care Homes for Older People on the availability of beds in residential care and nursing homes; what estimate he has made of the impact on the number of care homes of the requirement of complying with the National Minimum Standards for Care Homes for Older People; and what estimate he has made of the average amount that each care home will have to spend in order to comply with the National Minimum Standards for Care Homes for Older People. [65040]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not easily available. The Department has received a large number of letter about national standards from care home owners, their representatives and other interested parties. Some of these letters include reference to paragraph 21.3 or paragraph 22.2 or both. Separating out all those letters which mention these paragraphs and placing them in the Library would involve disproportionate cost.

On 23 July my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health announced his intention to issue for consultation an amended set of physical environment standards. The aim of the amendments is to remove the requirement for care homes which existed before 1 April 2002 to conform to certain physical environment standards, including standards 21.3 and 22.2. For pre-existing care homes these standards would in future be regarded as good practice to which all care homes should aspire.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the situation facing local authorities and the private sector with regard to care homes. [71762]

Jacqui Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement on older people's services which my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State made to the House on 23 July at columns 869–72.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many care homes have (a) opened and (b) closed in each region in each of the last five years. [72545]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures he has collated of the average cost over the past five years, by region, for residents of a private care home. [72384]

Jacqui Smith: Information on care home fee levels is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may find it helpful to consult reports of the recent annual surveys of the care home sector undertaken by consultants Laing and Buisson. These contain information on the average weekly fees in each region charged by private care homes for elderly people.

The social services performance assessment framework indicators published in October 2001 contain information on councils' unit costs for providing residential and nursing care for different client groups. A copy of this document is available in the Library.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residential care home places for elderly people were closed in (a) England and (b) the NHS during the last 12 months. [72951]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Children's Hospices

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the children's hospices in the North West region; and what grant from his Department was allocated to each children's hospice in each of the last five years. [69404]

Ms Blears [holding answer 12 July 2002]: There are five children's hospices in the North West of England:

Brian House, Blackpool;

Derian House, Chorley;

Zoe's Place, Liverpool (baby hospice);

Francis House, Manchester; and Claire House, Wirral.

The Department has never awarded grants to children's hospices. The level of National Health Service funding is for primary care trusts to determine, as part of their health improvement programmes, in consultation with their local partners.

However, the New Opportunities Fund invited applications to participate in a £48 million children's palliative care programme in England, of which £15.3 million is specifically available to promote high quality provision within children's hospices. The closing date for applications was 16 August and applicants will be informed of the outcome in January 2003.

Child Care Co-ordinators

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS trusts have a child care co-ordinator. [68284]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 10 July 2002]: There are at least eighty National Health Service child care co-ordinators in post throughout the NHS, and recruitment is continuing. Childcare co-ordinators may cover one trust, a number of trusts, or the whole local health economy, including the primary care trusts. We expect that by April 2003, all NHS staff will have access to the services of a childcare co-ordinator to offer support and advice to parents working in the NHS.

Children (Prescriptions)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is given to individual carers about the type of prescriptions provided to children in care. [71738]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 July 2002]: We have issued National Minimum Standards across the range of children's services. The standards for fostering services, which accounts for two thirds of all children in care, state that the carer should be provided with a written health record for each child placed in their care, and that this should be updated during the period of the placement. In addition, before a placement begins, the carer should be provided with as full a description as possible of the health needs of a child and clear procedures governing consent for the child to receive medical treatment. Where it is an agency placement, the responsible authority should pass the information on to the agency, who in turn passes it on to the carer. Similar arrangements apply to those placed in children's homes.

Health and Social Care Inspectorate

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the National Care Standards Commission and the Social Services Inspectorate will be abolished and their functions transfered to the Health and Social Care Inspectorate. [72150]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 19 April, we plan to set up two new independent inspectorates, the Commission for Healthcare Audit and Inspection and the Commission for Social Care Inspection. These new bodies will further strengthen the system for inspecting health and social care, ensure clearer public accountability and rationalise the number of bodies regulating health and social care.

The Commission for Social Care Inspection will create a single comprehensive Inspectorate for social care, bringing together the inspection functions of the social services inspectorate, including a number of their function with the Audit Commission, and the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) and including the regulation of social care providers. The NCSC and the social services inspectorate will continue with their existing work until the new body goes live.

Social Workers

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers per 1,000 population there were in (a) St Helens, (b) Merseyside, (c) the North West and (d) England in each year since 1996. [71280]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The table below shows the whole-time equivalent number of social work staff (including care managers) per 1,000 population as at 30 September for each year between 1996 and 2001 for St. Helens, Merseyside, the North West excluding Merseyside and England as a whole.

Social work staff[1] (whole-time equivalent) per 1,000 population	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001[2]

Prisoners' Mental Health

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon of 15 July 2002, Official Report, column 125W, on mental health, what information is held on the mental health of inmates in British prisons; and if he will make it available. [72422]

Jacqui Smith: Information on the mental health of prisoners in England and Wales is contained in the report of a survey of psychiatric morbidity among prisoners carried out by the Office for National Statistics in 1997, a copy of which is available in the Library. Information on the mental health of prisoners in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for the devolved administrations.

Mental Health

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to encourage the use of technology in improving dementia care. [61342]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 17 June 2002]: Passive personal alarm systems and other such technology that detects unusual patterns of domestic activity, wandering and unlit gas are a useful addition to the field of dementia care. Use may reduce or postpone admissions to residential or nursing care and can improve the quality of life for carers. Every opportunity is taken by Ministers and officials to encourage the spread of such technology as part of the funded national project to integrate community equipment services by 2004 and to increase the number of people benefiting from these services by 50 per cent.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average time was for appeals to mental health review tribunals to be heard in each region in the most recent year for which information is available. [65794]

Jacqui Smith: There are three separate categories that Mental Health Review Tribunal's fall into: Section 2, Non-Restricted and Restricted. The section 2 target is a statutory target.

Section 2 tribunals must be heard within 7 days of the application being received in the office.

Non-restricted cases are listed as speedily as possible but no earlier than 3 weeks after receipt because the Responsible Authority has three weeks under the provisions of the Mental Health Act 1983 in which to provide reports for the Tribunal. Before October 2001, the non-restricted tribunals were required to be listed within 8 weeks of the application being received in the office. Subsequent case law requires the tribunal to be less rigid, and to list speedily taking into account the circumstances of individual cases

Restricted cases must be heard within 20 weeks of the application being received in the office.

Timing of listed appeals:

The average time for appeals to be heard between July 2001-June 2002 and is divided into the four regions.

North London and East Region
Section 2—9 days
Non-Restricted—7.2 weeks
Restricted—18.2 weeks

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met colleagues in the office of the Deputy Prime Minister to discuss the Social Exclusion Unit's work on mental health issues; and what future meetings are planned. [67983]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 8 July 2002]: Officials from the Department are involved in the Social Exclusion Unit's current projects and meet on a regular basis, seeking to ensure that these reflect the needs of mental health service users

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Newcastle Declaration made on 25 June in respect of mental health and its treatment. [68047]

Mr. Hutton: The launch of the first year strategy for the National Institute for Mental Health in England in Newcastle on 25 June brought together professionals and service users to show their support for the work being prepared on early intervention services. Discussions have formed the basis of the Newcastle Declaration which emphasises the high levels of care for people in the early stages of psychosis.

The Declaration is now being taken forward to an International Conference in Copenhagen in the Autumn and is a sign of the broad support for the conventions taken forward.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much spending there was on mental health services in (a) St Helens and Knowsley Health Authority, (b) Merseyside, (c) the North West and (d) England in each year since 1996; and what the projected amounts are for (i) 2002 and (ii) 2003. [71282]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The data for 1996–97 to 2000–01 are shown in the table below. Projections are not available.

	St Helens	Merseyside	North West	England
		£'000
1996–97	16,287	57,643	350,192	2,648,191
1997–98	17,066	63,037	365,286	2,767,036
1998–99	19,684	72,595	395,425	2,925,934
1999–2000	21,485	81,780	454,238	3,445,341
2000–01	24,105	144,293	546,979	3,952,618

Figures are secondary mental illness expenditure by the health authority and, for 2000–01, by PCTs.
Sources:
Health authority audited accounts 1996–97 to 1998–99;
Health authority audited summarisation forms 1999–2000 and 2000–01;
Primary care trust audited summarisation schedules 2000–01.
Notes:
Merseyside includes St Helens and Knowsley. Sefton and Liverpool health authorities.
Sefton included £63 million mental illness expenditure in 2000–01, when it was the lead commissioner for secure mental health services in the North West region. This explains the large increase in the Merseyside figures for 2000–01.
North West includes the 16 health authorities.
Primary mental illness expenditure is not separately identified in the accounts/summarisation schedules.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding is available for (a) mental health services and (b) mental health counselling services in Buckinghamshire in the current financial year; what the corresponding figures were, adjusted for inflation, in 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [72596]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The Government is committed to the delivery of effective mental health services for those people who need them. The NHS Plan built on the national framework for mental health by providing for extra investment of over £300 million by 2004.

The information requested is held at health authority and primary care trust level.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what format his Department holds information regarding the (a) number of acute psychiatric beds, (b) occupancy rate and (c) delayed discharge from these beds. [71947]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Information regarding the number of hospital beds and occupancy rate is collected annually via the Department's collection from KHO3 "Bed Availability and Occupancy". The form requests availability and occupancy of beds in wards open overnight by ward classification. A section for information on mental illness is split into three parts: children—short stay, long stay, elderly—short stay, long stay and other ages—secure unit, short stay, long stay.

The resulting data is published on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/

Information on delayed discharge from these beds is not collected.

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress in the implementation of the Learning Disabilities Strategy set out in the White Paper "Valuing People". [72985]

Jacqui Smith: We are continuing to make good progress in delivering the programme of action set out in the White Paper Valuing People: A New strategy for Learning Disability for the 21 Century (March 2001).

I last reported progress to the House on 1 February (column 535). I was pleased to report then on good progress in setting up Learning Disability Partnership Boards, the Learning Disability Task Force, and the Valuing People Support Team, and on the early distribution of guidance. Progress since February includes:

The Valuing People Support Team is fully operational and is continuing to develop effective links with Learning Disability Partnership Boards. It has started on a wide ranging programme of activities to support Boards in achieving their objectives, for example around person centred planning and employment strategies

We have allocated £900,000 to fifty seven citizen advocacy and self advocacy projects across the country in the first year of a three year funding programme

Work is under way on a joint Department of Health/Department for Work and Pensions study of the interface between day centres and supported employment (due for completion in April/May 2003)

We have published guidance jointly with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on housing and support options for people with learning disabilities. This is in draft on the Department's learning disability website for consultation. The guidance will help Partnership Boards and local councils develop housing strategies for people with learning disabilities

Guidance on Health Action Plans has been published and is being distributed to Learning Disability Partnership Boards

The Learning Disability Task Force has held three further meetings at which it has discussed a range of issues and has had presentations from a number of Government departments. Task Force sub groups are taking forward more detailed work on individual topics

All learning disability joint investment plans (JIPs) have been evaluated and Learning Disability Development Fund (LDDF) revenue was distributed by the end of March to all but six Partnership Boards whose JIPs were unsatisfactory; all but one of these have since been brought up to standard and money released.

We have commissioned and started work on a national survey of people with learning disabilities

A National Forum of People with Learning Disabilities continues to provide a voice for people using learning disability services. We are supporting the establishment of a network of Regional Forums which will feed in to the National Forum and ensure that it is properly representative

The Learning Disability Task Force will be reporting to me later in the year on its work in overseeing the Valuing Prople implementation programme. I will also be publishing a separate report on learning disability services later in the year.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funding is made available to provide residential care and supported living for people with a learning disability; and if he will make a statement; [66302]

(2) what guidance is forwarded to social services departments regarding the collection of (a) the numbers of older carers and (b) information about the caring needs, family circumstances and housing needs of people with a learning disability; and if he will make a statement. [66303]

Jacqui Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the response I gave my hon. Friend, the Member for Edmonton (Mr. Love) on 9 July 2002 at columns 889–90W.

Local councils decide the level of funding provided for residential care for people with a learning disability according to need, no specific amounts are made available for this purpose. Gross current expenditure on care for learning disabled people by councils with social services responsibilities in England in 1999–2000 and 2000–01, the latest two years for which this information is available, was

	1999–2000 (£million)	2000–01 (£million)
Residential care	922.0	1015.3
Non-residential care	605.4	631.8
Total	1527.4	1647.1

Note:

Figures do not include the costs of assessment related work by social services departments, or the costs of commissioning provision from the private and independent sector and other local authorities.

We do not specifically require local authorities to collect numbers of older carers but our "Fair Access to Care Services" guidance issued on 28 May (copies available in the library) sets out that social services departments should monitor the extent to which different groups are referred, which groups receive an assessment and which groups go on to receive services.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he is making to monitor the implementation of the White Paper on learning disabilities "Valuing People" by local learning disability partnership boards. [72986]

Jacqui Smith: We are committed to ensuring the effective delivery of the programme of action set out in the White Paper Valuing People: A New Strategy for Learning Disability for the 21 Century (March 2001).

Implementation of the strategy is primarily the responsibility of local authorities as set out in the implementation guidance issued in August 2001.

Progress made in the implementation of Valuing People at council level is monitored by the social services inspectorate using the existing performance assessment framework for social services. Through the monitoring element of the framework, councils provide annual summaries of the improvement priorities, targets and strategies. Progress with these improvements is updated during the year and reviewed annually prior to the determination of the councils' overall performance (star) rating.

The Valuing People Support Team is continuing to develop links with local learning disability partnership boards and will also provide information on progress with implementation. A national survey of people with learning disabilities has been commissioned which will describe users' experiences of services and help to identify areas where improvement is needed.

The £2 million learning disability research programme will help to improve the evidence base. Projects being funded include ones designed to assess the effects of the Valuing People programme.

The learning disability task force's annual report, due later this year, will provide an overview of progress by all partners in the implementation programme and advise on any aspects of implementation where particular action might be required.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the reports of the Personal Social Services Research Unit submitted to his Department in (a) December 2001 and (b) February 2002; and what action has been taken in response to the findings and conclusions. [71195]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 July 2002]: The research the Department commissioned is being analysed in the Department. The findings, will inform future policy considerations.

Primary Care Trusts

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for funding PCTs that have more GPs than the recommended average per 100,000 people. [72887]

Mr. Hutton: The framework document for the new general medical services contract proposes the introduction of a formula that links funding to patient numbers, and that a fair shares distribution will be achieved over time. Detailed negotiations on the contract including transitional arrangements are taking place now the framework has been approved in a ballot of general practitioners.

Primary Care (Twickenham)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his latest estimate is of the general practitioner/patient ratio in (a) Twickenham and (b) the London Borough of Richmond upon Thames; and if he will make a statement. [72496]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The information available is shown in the table.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds have been committed to improving access to primary care in Twickenham since 1997; what improvements have taken place; and if he will make a statement. [72495]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 23 July 2002]: As part of the Department's commitment to improving access to primary care nationally, we have increased the primary care trust primary care access fund by £83.5 million to £168 million, with at least £48 million dedicated in 2002–03 to improving access in primary care and implementing advanced access. Richmond and Twickenham Primary Care Trust has received £150,000 from the primary care access fund.

In 1997 the Kingston and Richmond Health Authority used improvement grants to fund schemes that improved physical access to surgeries and improved communications with surgeries.

From 1998 the new primary care organisations within Richmond and Twickenham began to work with local general practitioners (GPs) to explore new ways of working. Teddington, Twickenham and Hamptons successfully bid to participate in the national primary care collaborative focussing on improved coronary heart disease (CHD) care, improving access to primary care and managing capacity. Funding available for this scheme totalled £149,000 over two years. This has allowed primary care teams to scrutinise the demand on their services and look to manage that demand using a variety of methods including telephone triage/consultations by GPs, nurse triage, changing the skill mix by employing health assistants. A further £110,000 was spent on innovative projects that focused on partnership developments, for example, with the voluntary sector, community pharmacy, to improve access by ensuring that patients were seen by the right professional in the right place.

The programme extends from pilot sites and is being extended to the whole of Richmond. Available resources this year are £150,000 and will be spent on further improving access.

The primary care organisations continued to support the improvements of physical access to surgeries by investment in for example, induction loops, tactile signage, and ramps. In 2001–02 at least £220,000 was invested in this area.

Consultant Treatment

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to monitor how many patients originally referred to a NHS consultant finally receive treatment in the private sector from the same consultant. [72222]

Mr. Hutton: This Department does not collect information about private patients treated in private hospitals. We have agreed as part of the framework for the new consultant contract that there will be contractual provisions governing the relationship between private practice and National Health Service commitments, based on the principle that an NHS consultant's commitment to the NHS must take priority over any work undertaken for other organisations. The detail of the provisions is under discussion, but we have agreed that consultants will be required to inform employers of their private practice commitments, as part of their annual job planning and appraisal process.

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce regulations to prevent consultants treating patients in their private practices that were originally referred to them through the NHS. [72221]

Mr. Hutton: We have agreed as part of the framework for the new consultant contract that there will be contractual provisions governing the relationship between private practice and National Health Service commitments. These provisions will be based on the principle that an NHS consultant's commitment to the NHS must take priority over any work undertaken for other organisations and designed to minimise the potential for actual or perceived conflicts of interest. One of the key principles is that consultants should not allow private practice to disrupt the provision of NHS services or have any adverse impact on NHS performance or delivery of NHS commitments. The detail of the provisions is under discussion, but we have agreed that the areas covered by the new rules will include the transfer of patients between the NHS and private sector, and management of NHS waiting lists.

NHS Planning

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered (a) town planners, (b) landscape designers, (c) chartered surveyors and (d) architects work in (i) NHS Estates, (ii) NHS regional offices and (iii) NHS trusts. [71857]

Mr. Lammy: NHS Estates employs four town planners, forty-seven chartered surveryors and fourteen architects. In addition it draws on specialist expertise from outside the Agency. We do not hold the requested information on National Health Service trusts centrally. NHS regional offices ceased to exist on 1 April 2002.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he has taken to publicise the fact that accident and emergency departments do not give advice over the phone. [72415]

Mr. Lammy: The Department has taken no specific measures to publicise the fact the accident and emergency departments do not give advice over the phone.

Patients can obtain telephone advice on medical emergencies from NHS Direct, a nurse-led telephone helpline providing health information and advice 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time is in accident and emergency departments by region, before a patient gets treated in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [72461]

Mr. Lammy: The Department does not routinely collect information on average waiting times in accident and emergency departments (A and E).

Information on total time in A and E from arrival to transfer, admission or discharge has been collected by the Department since August 2001. We have reliable data from October 2001.

The table below shows the number of people spending four hours or less in A and E by region from October 2001 to March 2002.

Percentage of patients spending less than four hours in A and E from arrival to transfer, admission or discharge.

Organisation	Number of A and E attendances	Number of patients spending under 4 hours in A and E	Patients spending under 4 hours in A and E per cent.

West Midlands	641,729	536,635	84
England	5,553,823	4,277,639	77

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to deal with increased accident and emergency admissions in the south-west area [71264]

Ms Blears [holding answer 19 July 2002]: In the former south west region over £15 million from the accident and emergency (A and E) modernisation fund has been invested in improving A and E facilities over the last three years.

Private Bed Facilities

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much revenue was earned by hospital trusts operating private bed facilities in the last 12 months for which figures are available; [71084]

(2) if he will list those hospital trusts operating private bed facilities. [71085]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 18 July 2002]: In 2000–01 the total gross income received and receivable for patient care services from private patients treated by National Health Service trusts was £316,627,000. Source: NHS Trust Summarisation Schedules 2000–01. The income reported is for all private patients and not just those using a bed.

The Department does not maintain records centrally of the private facilities operated by NHS acute trusts. A list of NHS trusts reporting finished consultant episodes for private patients in 2000–01 is shown in the table.

A FCE is defined as a period of patient care under one consultant in one healthcare provider. Source: Hospital Episode Statistics (HES), Department of Health

Private Treatment

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS patients were treated by the private sector in Somerset in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02. [71237]

Ms Blears: This information is not available centrally. The Department is reviewing its information needs as far as National Health Service funded activity in the private sector is concerned.

NHS Efficiency Task Force

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what procedures the work of the NHS Efficiency Task Force is evaluated. [68161]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The National Health Service efficiency taskforce and its members provided specific and general advice on a range of issues relating to performance improvement. The taskforce last met on 28 June 1999. We continue to consult widely, with the NHS, academics and leading policy makers from abroad, on the range performance issues including efficiency.

National Health Service Framework

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the budget was for the implementation of the National Service Framework on (a) cancer, (b) heart disease and (c) mental health in (i) 2002–03 and (ii) each of the previous three years. [68144]

Ms Blears [holding answer 11 July 2002]: Resources to support the implementation of national service frameworks are largely included in allocations to health authorities.

The NHS Cancer Plan was published in September 2000. Additional funding made available, including revenue and capital, to support its implementation after that date has been:

2001–02 £m	2002–03 £m
280	407

In addition £100 million capital has been made available for CT scanners, simulators and radiotherapy planning equipment.

The national service framework (NSF) for coronary heart disease was published in March 2000. Additional revenue to support implementation from that date has been:

2000–01 £m	2001–02 £m	2002–03 £m
68.2	150.5	334.5

In addition £285 million capital has been made available, the bulk of which will spent over the next four years to fund modernisation and expansion at 12 cardiac centres.

The NSF for mental health was published in September 1999.

Additional revenue to support implementation of the NSF and NHS Plan from that date has been:

1999–2000 £m	2000–01 £m	2001–02 £m	2002–03 £m
68.5	66.0	12.35	93.5

In addition £160 million capital has been made available, and a further £79 million for local councils with social services responsibilities.

NHS Doctors (Suspensions)

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS doctors have been suspended under the NHS disciplinary procedure in each of the past 10 years, broken down by (a) grade and (b) speciality. [68228]

Mr. Hutton: Following Health Service Guidelines (HSG(94)49) issued in October 1994, National Health Service trusts routinely report suspensions lasting six months or longer to the Department. Figures are not available for suspensions lasting less than six months. Reliable information is only available for 1999–2001. Information is not held centrally on speciality:

1999	25 individuals whose suspension commenced 1 Jan–31 December 1999	16 consultants 3 specialist registrars 2 staff grade doctors 1 "surgeon" 1 clinical medical officer 1 associate specialist 1 "doctor"
2000	29 new suspensions which commenced during year Jan–Dec 2000	24 consultants 2 senior house officers 1 medical advisor 1 staff grade doctor 1 "doctor"
2001	26 new suspensions which commenced during year Jan–Dec 2001	20 consultants 1 clinical medical officer 1 senior dental officer 2 staff grade doctors 2 specialist registrars

The Department is supporting the managers who are dealing with individual cases. It has seconded a former NHS Trust Human Resources Director to assist employers find ways to ending suspensions as quickly as possible.

NHS Plan

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in developing a comprehensive policy for the National Health Service. [68534]

Mr. Hutton: The NHS Plan published in July 2000, set out a far reaching reform programme to redesign the National Health Service around the needs of the patient.

Delivering the NHS Plan takes that process a stage further, by explaining how the record increases announced in this year's Budget, 7.4 per cent. per annum annual average increases above inflation, for the five years up to 2007–08, will enable us to go further and faster.

NHS Charges

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the services provided by the National Health Service for which charges may be made. [57447]

Mr. Hutton: Treatment provided by the National Health Service is free at the point of delivery except in cases where specific legislation has been passed allowing a charge to be made. The current services for which a charge can be made are:

prescriptions;

dental services;

the supply of optical appliances by the hospital eye service;

private patients;

overseas visitors;

appliances such as wigs and fabric supports.

The NHS can also charge for the provision of accommodation and services for private resident and non-resident patients.

In addition to the above NHS hospitals can charge for certain patient services using income generation powers. However a charge can only be made where the service is considered to be additional treatments over and above the normal service provision. Any item or service that is considered to be an integral part of a patient's treatment by their clinician remains free of charge.

NHS Structural Reorganization

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what structural reorganisations have taken place in the NHS since 1997; and what estimate he has made of the total cost to the NHS of structural reorganisation programmes since 1997. [59093]

Mr. Hutton: We have abolished the internal market and devolved decision making in the National Health Service to the frontline. We have reduced the number of service commissioners from approximately 3,600 in 1997 to approximately 300 in 2002.

The intention to replace general practitioner (GP) fundholding with primary care groups (PCGs) and primary care trusts (PCTs) was announced in the New NHS: Modern and Dependable as was the intention to reduce the number of health authorities (HAs) with the responsibility for commissioning services being delegated to PCGs and PCTs. This policy was reinforced by the NHS Plan and Shifting the Balance of Power. As a result of the new NHS Reform and Health Care Professions Act, the new health authorities will become strategic health authorities, and the changes to health authorities and PCTs under Shifting the Balance of Power will be in place from 1 October 2002.

The number of NHS trusts has reduced through a series of locally led mergers and demergers with a number of community trusts merging with PCTs.

The table shows the change in numbers of organisations and different levels of responsibilities within the NHS since 1 April 1997.

	Service Commisioners		Service Commissioners and Providers		Service Providers
Year	HAs	GPFHs	PCGs	PCTs	NHS Trusts
1 April 1997	100	3,565	N/A	N/A	425
1 April 1998	100	3,383	N/A	N/A	403
1 April 1999	99	Scheme ended	481	N/A	342

The table shows the change in numbers of organisations and different levels of responsibilities within the NHS since 1 April 1997.

	Service Commisioners	Service Commissioners and Providers	Service Providers
1 April 2000	99	459	17	326
1 October 2000	95	434	40	326
1 April 2001	95	239	239	318
1 April 2002	28 (note 1)	1	303	274

Note 1:
In practice, commissioning of services has been delegated from HAs to PCTs. HAs will become StHAs in October 2002, subject to the NHS Reform and Health Professions Bill.

The establishment of primary care groups was funded using monies released by the abolition of GP fundholding. The previous Government had set aside an annual budget of £180 million to run fundholding. We have used those monies both to set up PCGs and to improve services to patients. Approximately £150 million additional monies was used following the establishment of PCGs. Approximately £63 million of central funding has been made available to support the establishment of primary care trusts.

The New NHS: Modern and Dependable contained a commitment to deliver £1 billion management costs savings over five years (1997–98 to 2001–02), including £100 million in the first year. The changes as a result of Shifting the Balance of Power will release £100 million savings from reducing bureaucracy and this will be placed in a transitional fund in 2002–03 and 2003–04 and used to fund childcare facilities for NHS staff.

NHS Hospital Trust Mergers

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria he applies when deciding whether NHS hospital trust mergers may proceed. [67187]

Mr. Hutton: Proposals to merge National Health Service trusts are given careful consideration at all stages to ensure the best interests of patients. Among the criteria considered by my right Hon. Friend, the Secretary of State before agreeing that trust mergers may proceed are:

Assurance that patients' interests are fully safeguarded;

Assurance that clinical quality will be maintained, or improved, uniformly across the whole area;

Evidence derived from the health impact assessment;

Outcome of local public consultation;

Evidence of support for the merger from within the NHS;

Any specific service issues;

Implications for staff;

Financial considerations.

Patient Environment Inspection Programme

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the process used to grade hospitals on the 19 elements of the patient environment inspection programme, with specific reference to how each element is weighted in the final assessment. [71861]

Mr. Hutton: Since publication of the NHS Plan, patient environment action teams (PEATs) teams have undertaken four rounds of assessment visits to acute NHS trusts each evaluating performance and progress against 19 separate elements. Scores are combined to produce a rating. Each element of the patient environment was scored on a scale of one to four, where one is poor and four is excellent.

On the question of weighting; whilst every aspect of the assessment is important, we recognise that patients will see some areas as of greater importance than others. For this reason, in determining the final rating a hospital receives, particular attention is paid to the hospital's performance in areas of ward cleanliness, tidiness and decoration and the condition of ward furniture so that defects in these areas are not masked by good performance in other areas of assessment.

The clean hospitals programme has had a clear impact on standards of cleanliness, decoration and supporting services. Hospitals up and down the country have responded magnificently to this, the biggest clean-up campaign in the history of the National Health Service, to the extent that by October last year there were no hospitals in England where cleaning standards were found to be less than acceptable. The latest round of PEAT visits have recently been completed and the results will be available shortly.

MRSA

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 May 2002, Official Report, column 403W, on hospital acquired infection, what plans he has to make representations to the International Classification of Diseases to include MRSA as a distinct code for encoding death registration data. [71349]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 22 July 2002]: A world health organisation technical group is developing a proposal to use additional codes to identify antimicrobial resistance in infectious diseases. Subject to official ratification, this is likely to lead to an updating of the international classification of diseases.

Hand Hygiene

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of compliance with hand hygiene protocols in NHS hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [71860]

Mr. Hutton: Guidelines on hand hygiene were issued to the National Health Service in January 2000 and trusts are expected to have a policy in place for compliance with hand hygiene which should be audited by the local infection control team. Details of the arrangements in place at each trust are also available to the Commission for Health Improvement as part of its clinical governance review process and to the Audit Commission in their reviews of provider care.

Laundry Facilities

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of laundry and changing facilities in NHS hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [71862]

Mr. Lammy: Laundry and changing facilities/services are arranged by individual hospitals/trusts in relation to their local needs, as are the requirements for storage of linen and laundry

Infection Control

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to (a) increase the availability of (i) isolation or (ii) single rooms in NHS hospitals and (b) increase the use of barrier nursing with respect to infection control issues. [71865]

Ms Blears: National Health Service hospital trusts are expected to have a policy in place for the isolation of patients with infectious diseases and are responsible for determining the level of provision of isolation and single rooms. The use of isolation facilities and barrier nursing, like other treatment decisions, will depend on the clinical judgement of the local infection control team and the clinicians involved in treating the affected patients.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes he plans to NHS infection control policy following the identification of rancomycin resistant staphylococcus aureus in the United States. [72000]

Ms Blears: Vancomycin resistant staphylococcus aureus (VRSA) can be contained by good infection control procedures. The national controls assurance standard already requires trusts to have effective infection control policies therefore no specific policy change is required.

Minimising the development and spread of new strains such as VRSA requires prudent prescribing as well as strict adherence to infection control measures. These are two of the reasons why we are developing targeted action plans for healthcare associated infections and antimicrobial resistance under "Getting Ahead of the Curve", our strategy for combating infectious diseases.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of methicillin resistent staphylococcus aureus were identified in (a) England and (b) each NHS region in each of the last six years, including the most recent year for which figures are available. [71842]

Ms Blears: The mandatory reporting of methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) bacteraemias by National Health Service acute trusts began in April 2001 and these data are published in the communicable disease report weekly. The first year's data are now available and these form a benchmark for future analysis.

However, data for the last six years on MRSA bacteraemias voluntarily reported to the public health laboratory service by microbiology laboratories are available and these are shown in the table

Adverse Patient Incidents

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the Serious Hazards of Transfusion report (2000–01); and what strategy he has to reduce the number of mistakes made in patient identity. [73030]

(2) what action he has taken following the SHOT report to adopt new systems and technology to prevent patient identity errors. [73114]

(3) what (a) strategies, (b) systems and (c) technologies he plans to introduce to reduce the number of adverse patient incidents in the NHS; and if he will make a statement; [73045]

(4) if he will make a statement on the Spoonful of Sugar medicine management in NHS hospitals, Audit Commission report of December 2001, and what strategy he has to reduce the human and financial costs of mistakes in the NHS. [73029]

(5) if he will make a statement on the National Patient Safety Agency 17 June report; and what strategy he has for reducing the percentage of NHS hospital admissions that experience adverse incidents caused by human error; [73044]

(6) what estimate he has made of the overall cost to the NHS of adverse patient incidents in each of the last five years for which figures are available; [73115]

(7) what estimate he has made of the number of NHS beds lost due to adverse patient incidents in each of the last five years. [73116]

Mr. Lammy: The Department does not collect information on the number of extended hospital stays as a result of adverse events nor figures on their financial cost. However, as reported in An Organisation with a Memory—a report of an expert group on learning from adverse events chaired by the Chief Medical Officer, it is estimated that there may be around 850,000 adverse events each year in the National Health Service which research suggests may lead to three million preventable additional hospital bed days. It is estimated that extended hospital stays as a result of adverse events costs the NHS approximately £2 billion a year.

The Government established the National Patient Safety Agency in July 2001 to improve the safety of NHS patient care by promoting a culture of reporting and learning from adverse events, and to manage the national reporting system to support this function.

By collecting and analysing data on adverse events the agency will be able to identify trends and patterns of avoidable adverse events, provide feedback to organisations to enable them to change their working practices, help develop models of good practice and systems solutions at national level and support ongoing education and learning.

From September 2001 the National Patient Safety Agency ran a pilot in a small sample of trusts designed to test the system for collecting data on adverse incidents and near misses from the NHS.

On 18 June 2002, the National Patient Safety Agency held a conference and presented initial findings of the pilot. The results of the data collection are preliminary and few conclusions can be drawn from this data at this stage. The agency will publish audited figures when they are available. The agency will be working to implement a national reporting system across the NHS from 2003.

This will provide us with a firm evidence base on the scale of the problem and its financial consequences—a baseline allowing us to understand the real extent and nature of adverse events, and act on that knowledge.

The Department has set a specific target which requires the NHS by 2005 to reduce by 40 per cent. the number of serious errors in the use of prescribed drugs. The Department will shortly be publishing a report highlighting processes and individual medicines that are commonly involved in medication errors. The report will also identify a range of measures that professionals and NHS organisations can use to systematically drive down the risk of medication errors across the NHS.

The Department has broadly welcomed the Audit Commission's report on medicines management in NHS hospitals, A Spoonful of Sugar. Chief pharmacists and their staff play a key part in medicines management and it is helpful to see this role highlighted. The report reinforces the Department's medicines management performance management framework.

Ms Blears: The fifth report (2000–01) on the serious hazards of transfusion (SHOT) was published on 10 April 2002 and again indicated that blood transfusion in the United Kingdom is very safe, and amongst the safest in the world. Although the number of serious events reported, 315, had increased by 7.5 per cent. this must be seen against a total of over three million blood components transfused annually and increased participation in the scheme. Since the previous report, for 1999–2000, participation in SHOT by National Health Service (NHS) trusts has increased from 72 per cent. to 92 per cent. of all hospitals. We will be looking to SHOT and the new national patient safety agency to help us take a more comprehensive approach to improving patient safety in the NHS.

We are committed to modernising the NHS and working on systems that are shown to reduce error in clinical practice, are safe, and capable of being used effectively and universally. To this aim, there are pilot projects looking to improve the identification of patients and issue of the correct blood. The results will help to inform future research and developments in this area to improve patient care.

In July 2002 new guidance was issued to the NHS on "Better Blood Transfusion—Appropriate Use of Blood" www.doh.gov.uk/publications/coinh.html. This sets out a programme of action for the NHS to; ensure that Better Blood Transfusion is an integral part of NHS care. The guidance includes an objective to improve the safety of the blood transfusion process and calls on the NHS by December 2002, to ensure that policies on patient identification are in place, implemented and monitored throughout the blood transfusion process from prescription, sampling, laboratory testing and issue of blood to collection and administration of blood transfusion.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) technologies and (b) systems he plans to introduce in the NHS to reduce the risk of the wrong drugs or inappropriate quantities of drugs being given to patients; and if he will make a statement. [73118]

Mr. Lammy: It is recognised that the manual writing of prescriptions and the manual dispensing of drugs is associated with a significant error rate. Measures to combat this include the following.

In primary care technologies are already in place within general practitioner's (GP's) clinical practice system to help identify the risks involved in prescribing of drugs to patients. PRODIGY is a computer-based decision and learning support system contained within the GP practice system, which offers a series of recommendations in prescribing and organisation of treatment for conditions.

In secondary care information for health the strategy for information services in the National Health Service recommended the introduction of electronic records into all acute trusts. Electronic prescribing systems were specifically mentioned as part of those electronic records. It is intended by 2008 that all acute trusts will have electronic prescribing systems, most acute trusts by 2005. The use of these systems will lead to a reduction in errors that can occur.

In the pharmacy, "Pharmacy in the Future—Implementing the NHS Plan", emphasised the need to re-engineer hospital pharmacy services to be more efficient, timely and safe and more patient focussed. Use of modern automation technology was seen as one way of facilitating this. This was reinforced in the Audit Commission report "A Spoonful of Sugar". Consideration is currently being given to the commissioning of a national specification for automated dispensary systems for the NHS and earmarking of funding for their introduction.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the level of compensation to be budgeted for by the NHS in respect of adverse patient incidents in the (a) current and (b) next financial years. [73117]

Mr. Lammy: Compensation is only paid where there is a liability to do so, and payments are usually made following settlement of clinical negligence claims. According to the National Audit Office Summarised Accounts for the National Health Service (2001) a provision of £4.4 billion was calculated for liabilities relating to all current clinical negligence claims and ones which may arise from incidents which have incurred but not yet been reported. These liabilities will include compensation as well as legal and other costs which are not identified separately in the accounts.

GM Crops

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on recent research regarding genetically modified DNA material from crops finding its way into human stomach bacteria. [72447]

Ms Blears: Research funded by the Food Standards Agency (FSA) has demonstrated that the likelihood of gene transfer from genetically modified crops into gut bacteria is extremely low and that fragments of DNA that survive in the gut are too small to change the nature of human gut bacteria.

Reports of the research are published on the FSA web site and copies have been placed in the Library.

Vaccinated Meat

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to prepare (a) consumers and (b) retailers for the possibility of eating or selling meat that has been vaccinated for foot and mouth disease. [72451]

Ms Blears: The Food Standards Agency has advised that there are no health concerns for consumers from eating meat, milk or other produce from animals vaccinated with any of the foot and mouth disease vaccines that are being considered for possible future use in the United Kingdom. The vaccine cannot infect people. All of the other ingredients in the vaccine are commonly used and do not give rise to safety issues.

Press Office

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) full time equivalents were employed by his press office and (b) secondees were placed in his press office in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [70551]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Detailed information on the number of press officers employed by the Department during the financial year 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in Appendix II of the report "The Government Information and Communications Service" (HC 770) published by the Select Committee on Public Administration in 29 July 1998. Copies are available in the Library.

The table shows press office staff for January 2000, 2001, 2002

	Jan 2000	Jan 2001	Jan 2002
No. Staff in Media Centre—Press Officers	16	19	22

Two secondees have been placed in the Department's press office over the last five years.

E-government

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the costs were relating to the Department's websites for the financial year ended March; which company dealt with the website development; and if he will make a statement. [72490]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The cost of the Department's website for the financial year ending March 2002 are shown in the table.

Hosting and maintenance (£0,000)	Website development and user research (£0,000)	Estimated staff costs (£0,00)	TOTAL (£0,000)
73.32	245.9	339.7	658.92

Website development and user research was undertaken by Worth Media and Planetary Tribe respectively in conjunction with Department staff.

The website regularly receives in the region of five million hits per month and is consistently placed in the top six most-visited Government website's.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether it is his policy to ensure that documents referred to in parliamentary answers are available via his Department's website; [72271]

(2) for how long he retains documents referred to in parliamentary answers on his Department's website. [72267]

Mr. Lammy: The Department aims to be as helpful as possible in responding to hon. Members' Questions. Where it is helpful to refer hon. Members to other documents as part of the substantive reply, this may be done by making hard copies of documents available in the Library, or by reference to material available on the Department's website.

The majority of departmental publications are made available on the website through the Publications Library (POINT). The Department current policy is to retain all published online material on our website. This will be reviewed in the context of The Office of the e-Envoy's guidance on archiving websites when available.

The Department complies with minimum requirements set out in the Office of the e-Envoy's "Guidelines for UK Government Websites".

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average time taken by his Department to answer questions has been this Session; and if he will make a statement. [70048]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested can only be provided at a disproportionate cost. This is because the Department's Parliamentary database does not readily provide this information, which could only be obtained therefore by a manual count of the records. The Department has received over 10,000 written questions this Session so far. Even to perform the calculations on a reasonable sample would incur a disproportionate cost. A new database is being developed for the next session that should be able to provide this kind of management information on a routine basis.

The Department fully recognises the need to ensure that hon. Members receive prompt, timely and helpful replies to their questions. Ministers make every effort to ensure that this important instrument of accountability is given the priority that it needs and deserves. Where there are regrettable delays in answering questions this stems from a proper desire to maintain high standards of accuracy and helpfulness in replies. We will, however, continue to strive to make further progress with the equally important yardstick of timeliness.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Azerbaijan

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will seek the co-operation of British companies engaged in oil exploration in Azerbaijan in assisting that country to deal with refugees; and if she will make a statement. [61600]

Clare Short: Resolution of the refugee problem in Azerbaijan is ultimately dependent on a political settlement of the Nagorno Karabakh dispute with Armenia, which would permit resettlement of those displaced by the conflict.

My Department is currently funding a number of activities in Azerbaijan which seek to encourage greater responsibility from the private sector in ensuring that the benefits of their activities are widely shared.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contribution her Department is making to the efforts to achieve quality epidemiology and behavioural surveillance in the fight against AIDS in Asia. [67481]

Clare Short: We are supporting major HIV/AIDS programmes in six countries in the Asia: China, India, Cambodia, Vietnam, Nepal, and Bangladesh. We are also considering programmes in other countries eg. Pakistan and Burma.

In all cases a critical component of that work is more effective epidemiology and enhanced behavioural surveillance, particularly in the two most populous countries of China and India. We are seeking to integrate such activities into national programmes and thereby enable improved chances for sustainability.

Due to the weaknesses in knowledge about the nature and scale of epidemic, this is key to organising a more effective response to HIV/AIDS in the region.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's plans to target resources at supporting HIV/AIDS projects in developing nations. [67866]

Clare Short: My Department's plans for supporting HIV/AIDS projects are outlined in the HIV/AIDS Strategy Paper which was published in May 2001. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to the answer of 25 February 2002, Official Report, columns 883–886W, what is meant by rights-based response to HIV/AIDS in Nepal; and if she will make a statement. [73294]

Clare Short: The UK has contributed £1.6 million to assist the Government of Nepal to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS into the general population, through interventions to stabilise and contain the concentrated epidemic among female sex workers and injecting drug users. These are vulnerable groups that are often harassed, stigmatised and have restricted access to services. The rights-based approach recognises the need to protect them from further marginalisation and discrimination, and to uphold their rights with regards to privacy, health and education.

The UK is also assisting the Government of Nepal with the development of its HIV/AIDS strategy for the next five years, and plans to make more resources available to implement the strategy.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had recently with representatives of the Government of Yugoslavia about refugees within Yugoslavia. [67184]

Clare Short: Assistance for refugees and internally displaced persons (IDPs) in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia falls under the remit of the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the European Commission Humanitarian Affairs Office (ECHO). We are supporting the work of these agencies by contributing significant amounts of funds, including 19.7 per cent. of the €69.3 million ECHO budget (made up of €47.8 million to Rep. of Serbia, €14 million to Kosovo and €7.5 million to Rep. of Montenegro).

In addition to this, we are working very closely with the Yugoslav and Serbian authorities on a programme of social and economic reforms that will help to improve the living conditions of the poorest people in the FRY, including refugees and IDPs. We are funding a £3.2 million programme of social policy reforms that will strengthen the delivery of social welfare, health, employment and education services in Serbia. We are also working closely with the World Bank on a major social services adjustment credit that will enable the Serbian authorities to make further progress in these areas.

These plans are described in detail in our Country Strategy Paper for the FRY, which is available in the library of the House.

Nepal

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the situation with regard to food and water security in rural Nepal. [63478]

Clare Short: Food insecurity in Nepal is severe and is greatest in the hill and mountain regions. There is growing concern over a possible humanitarian crisis emerging in the mid- and far-west regions of Nepal due to the initial failure of this year's monsoon in these areas.

The situation is being made worse by the conflict. The Maoists have looted food intended for development programmes, but more seriously the army has imposed food restrictions in at least 8 districts, preventing traders from going into the hills and severely restricting the food individuals can carry. The harvest is already down in these areas because of the late monsoon, and because men did not return from seasonal work in India to take part in planting. Fear of both Maoists and security forces was the key factor. With little accurate information currently available, DFID will support more intensive monitoring by the World Food Programme.

As regards water security, access to drinking water is not a major problem though the safety of this water is questionable. DFID is currently supporting programmes to enhance water supply and sanitation across rural Nepal.

Millennium Development Goals

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she estimates that, as a result of the G8 talks, the UK is on target to meet its millennium development goals; and if she will make a statement. [72849]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Sittingbourne and Sheppey (Mr. Wyatt) on 7 May, Official Report, column 15W. The G8 Summit focoused on the challenges facing Africa where least progress is being made. It produced valuable commitments of support for Africa in promoting peace and security; providing education for all; tackling HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis and overcoming the burden of unpayable debt. If African Governments deliver strong policy commitments, Africa can expect at least an additional $6 billion a year in development assistance, as a result of the Summit, to help accelerate its progress there towards the Goals.

Progress towards the Millennium Development Goals is monitored globally by the UN Department for Social and Economic Affairs, using data provided by a range of international bodies and country governments. UN country teams lead on country-level reporting, co-ordinated by UNDP.

Commodity Prices

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the UK intends to do with other Governments to address the effect of international commodity prices in Johannesburg. [69478]

Clare Short: There are no proposals for a statement on commodity prices at the World Summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg.

The prices of a number of internationally traded commodities have fallen dramatically in recent years. This has had an effect in producer countries at the household level (e.g. ability to purchase food and medicines) as well as at a higher, national, level (e.g. in terms of foreign exchange earnings, debt repayment ability etc.).

Many of the poorest countries, particularly in Africa, remain dependent on a narrow range of commodity exports. We are committed to helping commodity dependent exporting countries reduce their vulnerability to the effects of world commodity prices.

The UK, through its development programme and other endeavours at the international level, is supporting a range of actions that seek to expand the trade opportunities of these countries in order to reduce their dependence on primary agricultural commodity exports. Existing trade barriers (including tariff escalation) are a major impediment to this. The UK is not only working to secure reform of international trade rules in general but also to reduce the impact of protectionist regimes such as the Common Agricultural Policy.

There is scope for creating a more favourable domestic environment within commodity dependent countries themselves. This is necessary to generate the economic growth and other conditions that contribute to developing the means by which they can reduce their vulnerability to external shocks such as unfavourable price movements. The UK provides support to a variety of activities in this regard. These range from actions to enable local institutions to become more efficient and innovative, through to securing improvements in the regulatory framework in order to facilitate the development of local enterprises and attract foreign investment.

World Trade Organisation

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to enable poor countries fully to participate in meetings of the World Trade Organisation. [66185]

Clare Short: During the normal course of WTO business in Geneva, there can be 26–40 meetings per week which some countries must cover with a delegation of 2–3 people, while others have no representation in Geneva and must follow the issues from their capital. The Ministerial Declaration at Doha made wide-ranging commitments to trade-related capacity-building for poor countries, and stated that

"priority shall . . . be accorded to Members and Observers without representation in Geneva".

To meet that commitment, a task force was appointed by interested Ministers to examine the feasibility of expanding an existing organisation, the Agency for International Trade Information and Cooperation (AITIC) into an inter-governmental organisation with a wider mandate than at present. AITIC is a Swiss NGO which has since 1998 been supporting countries with little or no representation in Geneva by drafting briefing notes on difficult issues, offering a neutral forum for discussion, organising workshops and training seminars, running an "early warning system" on key issues, etc. The UK strongly supports this work and has made a commitment of £1m to support the first phase of AITIC's work as an IGO. This forms part of the UK's overall commitment to allocate £45m (of which £38 million has already been committed) to trade-related capacity-building work between 1998 and 2003.

Development Funds

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the African Development Fund; [67510]

(2) if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the Caribbean Development Fund. [67506]

Clare Short: The figures requested are available in Statistics on International Development (SID), Table 8 which shows a breakdown of gross public expenditure on multilateral contributions for the last five financial years.

A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House.

Liberia

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) how she has responded to the appeal by the UNHCR for emergency assistance for Liberian refugees; and if she will make a statement; [68826]

(2) if she will make a statement on the abduction of UNHCR nurses from the Sinje refugee camp in Liberia by LURD rebels. [68827]

Clare Short: My Department is considering UNHCR's appeal for emergency support for Liberian refugees. I am informed that five Liberian nurses working for the non-governmental organisation MERCI were abducted from Sinje refugee camp in north-west Liberia on 20 June. Their abduction from the UNHCR-run camp, where they provided healthcare to residents, followed attacks on the camp by LURD rebels. Despite attempts by UNHCR and others to locate and secure the release of the nurses, their whereabouts is still unknown.

Basic Education Project, Nigeria

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial support her Department is giving in 2002–03 to the Universal Basic Education Project in Nigeria. [65756]

Clare Short: In support of the Federal Government of Nigeria's efforts to achieve Universal Basic Education, the Department for International Development has funded the Support to Education Sector Analysis and Planning Project. This £556,000 project is providing assistance to Nigeria for their implementation of Universal Basic Education.

In addition to this, my department is at present collaborating closely with the World Bank towards the development of a programme of Technical Assistance that will assist Nigeria in working towards the achievement of the Universal Basic Education Millennium Goal. This proposal will be submitted to Senior Management for approval within the next few weeks.

Sudan

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what efforts have been made to support the peace process in Sudan under the auspices of the Inter-Governmental Authority of Drought (a) through diplomatic means and (b) through financial assistance. [69231]

Clare Short: The UK has engaged fully and been present as an observer throughout the latest round of the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) peace talks from 17 June to 20 July in Machakos, Kenya. To date we have provided £101,119 in financial support to the IGAD secretariat.

Overseas Superannuation

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money was spent by her Department in each year since 1998–99 on overseas superannuation, referred to on page 98 of the 2002 departmental report. [73131]

Clare Short: Details of Overseas Superannuation expenditure for each year to 2000–01 are given in line two of Table 1 on page 98 of the Departmental Report 2002.

Kenya

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (1) discussions her Department has had with the UNHCR regarding the protection afforded to refugees in Kenya and the security of refugee camps in Kenya; and if she will make a statement. [73275]

(2) if she will make a statement on the UNHCR's resettlement policy in East Africa, with specific reference to Kenya; [73277]

(3) what links her Department has with the UNHCR offices in Kenya; [73279]

(4) what discussions her Department has had with (a) the UNHCR, (b) the Kenyan Government and (c) refugees in Kenya regarding the resettlement of refugees in Kenya; [73276]

(5) what action she has taken to counter corruption in the Kenyan office of the UNHCR; [73280]

(6) what the UNHCR has spent in the last 12 months in Kenya. [73278]

Clare Short: The UNHCR programme in Kenya currently assists a refugee population of over 213,000; 129,000 of whom are Somalis and 70,000 are Sudanese. The cost of the programme was over $25.2 million in 2001 (see table below), and has a budget of $18.1 million in 2002.

UNHCR's programme aims to provide international protection and humanitarian assistance to refugees in Kenya while exploring durable solutions to assist refugees, mainly voluntary repatriation to their country of origin.

Unfortunately local integration of refugees is extremely limited, due to limited freedom of movement, access to resources, markets and job opportunities. In addition, continued conflict in refugees' countries of origin seriously limits opportunities for repatriation. As a result, UNHCR's main activities, in cooperation with the Government of Kenya (as well as WFP, UNICEF and UNESCO), have been in providing asylum for refugees by guaranteeing their legal protection and physical security; as well as offering income generating activities, refugee employment, education, vocational training and healthcare. UNHCR also offers assistance to refugees who wish to voluntarily repatriate themselves.

The hon. Lady's second question asked if the Secretary of State will make a statement on the UNHCR's resettlement policy in East Africa, with specific reference to Kenya. [73277]

UNHCR's resettlement policy in East Africa, as elsewhere, is to help refugees with particular refugee needs and concerns over repatriation and local integration, to seek asylum in third countries. DFID has not discussed resettlement with UNHCR, the Kenyan Government or refugees.

The hon. Lady's third question asked what links the Secretary of State's Department has with the UNHCR offices in Kenya. [73279]

DFID contributed £550,000 in 2000–01 and a similar amount in 2001–02 to UNHCR's programme in Kenya.

DFID staff based in London and Nairobi undertook a monitoring mission on the UNHCR Kenya programme in January 2000.

The hon. Lady's fourth question asked what discussions the Secretary of State's Department has had with (a) the UNHCR, (b) the Kenyan Government and (c) refugees in Kenya regarding the resettlement of refugees in Kenya. [73276]

Both DFID and BHC officials in Nairobi are in regular contact with UNHCR Kenya. We continue to monitor closely the refugee situation in the established camps and the border areas of Kenya through regular dialogue with UNHCR officials and other concerned agencies.

The hon. Lady's fifth question asked what action the Secretary of State has taken to counter corruption in the Kenyan offices of the UNHCR. [73280]

Allegations of corruption in UNHCR's offices in Kenya led to the security section of UNHCR undertaking an investigation in December 1999. The report, issued in June 2000, did not substantiate the allegations but recommended further investigation take place. While UNHCR branch officers in Nairobi were following up the allegations, threats were made against three officers. This led to the Inspector General of UNHCR calling in the UN Office of Investigation and Oversight Services (OIOS) in October 2000 to conduct an investigation.

The findings of the OIOS investigation suggested that outside expertise was needed. Hence in December OIOS approached 4 donor governments (including the UK) to provide qualified staff to participate in an international investigation task force. DFID provided (on secondment) the services of a Detective Chief Inspector. The UK cost of this secondment was £13,117. Overseas costs were met by UNHCR.

The hon. Lady's sixth question asked if the Secretary of State will provide a breakdown of the UNHCR's spending in Kenya. [73278]

The table below lists UNHCR's expenditure in Kenya for the period 2000–01.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she last visited Kenya; whom she met; what discussions she had; and when she next intends to visit Kenya. [73274]

Clare Short: I last made a substantive visit to Kenya in August 1998. I have visited the country very briefly on a number of occasions since then. I have no specific plans to visit again. The Under-Secretary visited Kenya earlier this month as part of her own induction programme. She met a wide range of people, including the Minister of Finance, and visited programmes supported by DFID. Her discussions focused on the prospects for poverty reduction in Kenya, and how the international community, including DFID, can best support Kenya's efforts to achieve it.

Human Rights (Rwanda)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what activities are being undertaken in (a) Rwanda and (b) Burundi by her Department to improve the human rights situation; and if she will make a statement. [73010]

Clare Short: DFID is the largest bilateral donor to Rwanda providing £30 million a year. Our programme is set within the framework of a Memorandum of Understanding which includes commitments in areas such as human rights and governance.

The human rights situation in Rwanda has improved for the majority of individuals since 1997. The establishment of the Human Rights Commission and the Commission for National Unity and Reconciliation are evidence of the Government of Rwanda's commitment to eliminating human rights abuses and to the reconciliation process. The Government have held successful local level elections in 2001 supported by DFID, but the end of the transitional period brings new challenges as Rwanda moves towards full national elections in 2003. DFID are supporting work to draft a new constitution.

We believe that the Government's commitment to end the cycle of ethnic tension, to maintain stability within Rwanda, to eliminate poverty and improve the lives of all Rwandans is genuine and their policies are moving them in the right direction. However, we monitor closely reports of human rights abuses and raise our concerns with GoR accordingly.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide support for the British Council's plans to develop its programmes in support of the New Partnership for Africa's Development. [73196]

Clare Short: The British Council's funding is provided by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Any plans for developing programmes in support of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) would therefore be for the FCO's consideration.

Land Reform Programmes

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries in which her Department supports land reform programmes. [73282]

Clare Short: In the current financial year DFID is supporting land reform activities in the countries listed below. Further details of these projects are available from the Department's on-line database at www.narsis.org. Please note that in the last two cases—South Africa (where we provided an earlier phase of support), and the SADC region, our support to land reform is currently in the design stage.

Bangladesh	Kyrgyzstan	Rwanda
Croatia	Moldova	Ukraine
Guyana	Mozambique	South Africa
Kenya	Russia	SADC

The hon. Lady's second question asked if the Secretary of State will list the countries in which her Department operates a sector wide approach to development. [73283]

My Department supports one or more sector wide approaches in a number of aid dependent Low Income Countries, including in Bangladesh, Ghana, Malawi, Mozambique, Rwanda, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia.

The hon. Lady's third question asked what the Secretary of State is doing to promote good government in Ethiopia. [73287]

We are currently developing a partnership with the Ethiopian Government and as part of this process we are formulating our Country Assistance Plan for Ethiopia. Our Plan will be based on the Ethiopian Government's Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper, which includes a commitment to good governance. We are considering support through our programme for Civil Service Reform and capacity building of local government. We also have a Partnership Fund, which has the objective of increasing awareness, accountability and responsiveness of government to the public and civil society.

The hon. Lady's fourth question asked what assistance the Secretary of State's Department has provided (a) bilaterally and (b) multilaterally to the EPRDF in Ethiopia in each of the last five years. [73284]

The DFID bilateral programme has not provided any financial or technical assistance to the EPRDF in any of the last five years. We are not aware of any specific multilateral contributions direct to the EPRDF.

The hon. Lady's fifth question asked what steps the Secretary of State's Department is taking to encourage Ethiopia to fulfil its obligations under the Convention of the Child. [73285]

Implementation of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC), which has been signed by Ethiopia, is monitored by the Committee of the Rights of the Child, who examine reports submitted by States' such as Ethiopia. Under the CRC, UNICEF has a legal obligation to promote and protect child rights by supporting the work of the Committee. DFID has been supporting UNICEF to increase its capacity to apply human rights principles and the provisions of the Convention in the design and implementation of its programmes. UNICEF has been testing out rights-based programming in East Africa including Ethiopia. DFID is also funding a project to rehabilitate street children into their communities and to raise awareness of children's issues in Addis Ababa.

Reproductive Health Programmes

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 25 February 2002, Official Report, columns 883–886W, how much money her Department has given in support of the Russian Family Planning Association per annum since 1997; what that represents in percentage terms of her Department's per annum expenditure for population reproductive health programmes; if she will explain the makeup of the Russian Family Planning Association; and if she will make a statement. [73183]

Clare Short: My Department funded the International Planned Parenthood Federation's (IPPF) European Network to provide technical assistance to the Russian Family Planning Association (RFPA) from March 1995 to June 2002. The purpose of our support has been to ensure that accurate information about reproductive health is disseminated in Russia, through the leadership of the RFPA. The total value of funding provided to IPPF during this period has been £390,000, over two project phases. Annual expenditure since 1997 has been as follows:

FY 1997–1998—£23,567

FY 1998–1999—£39,001

FY 1999–2000—nil

FY 2000–2001—£54,351

FY 2001–2002—£140,370

FY 2002–2003—£55,000 (expected)

My Department spent approximately £206 million on sexual and reproductive health in financial year 2001–02. My Department's expenditure on this project in that year therefore represents less than 0.07 per cent. of annual expenditure. The RFPA is a non-governmental organisation, based in Moscow. My Department reviewed this project in January 2002 and concluded that its purpose was likely to be largely achieved. No further assistance to the RFPA is planned.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 25 February 2002, Official Report, columns 883–886W, how much money her Department has given to the (a) health and sexual education programme in Bolivia since 1997 and (b) Orissa Reproductive Health Project in India in each year since 1997; what these amounts represent in percentage terms of her Department's per annum expenditure for population reproductive health programmes; and if she will make a statement. [73172]

Clare Short: My Department has spent the following amounts on each project listed since 1997. Expenditure has also been expressed as a percentage of DFID's annual spend on sexual and reproductive health activities in each year;

Orissa Reproductive Health Project, India	287,386	0.7	475,214	1.1	409,765	0.5	422,428	0.3

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 25 February 2002, Official Report, columns 883–886W, how much money her Department has given to (a) the reproductive health programme in Peru, (b) the STD programme in the Russian Federation and (c) the Central American regional programme for improving sexual and reproductive health services in each year since 1997; what these amounts represent in percentage terms of her Department's per annum expenditure for population reproductive health programmes; and if she will make a statement. [73184]

Clare Short: My Department has spent the following amounts on each of the programmes listed since 1997. Expenditure has also been expressed as a percentage of DFID's annual spend on sexual and reproductive health activities in each year;

	1997–98		1998–99		1999–2000		2000–01

Radioactive Floodwaters

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent reports she has received for assistance for containing radioactive floodwaters in Kyrgystan and Uzbekistan; and how she proposes to respond to them. [61860]

Clare Short: No reports have been received, but my Officials have recently obtained a World Bank commissioned technical assessment on landslide and uranium tailings problems and options for remediation in Kyrgyzstan. My Department has not been asked to respond to the technical assessment.

Lebanon

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assistance she has given to the Government of Lebanon for the re-building of its infrastucture; and if she will make a statement. [73016]

Clare Short: My Department has a very small bilateral development assistance programme in Lebanon. We contribute to multilateral institutions (including the World Bank, IMF and EC) which are implementing larger programmes in Lebanon. The Government of Lebanon would be able to raise any issue of concern with these institutions directly.

Biotechnology Research Projects

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what biotechnology research projects in (a) agriculture and (b) biomedics have been supported by her Department; and what public investment has gone into them in each of the last three years. [73238]

Clare Short: Separate data are not maintained of the many projects using biotechnology techniques for research purposes.

Biotechnology research projects in agriculture and related disciplines involving the potential release of genetically modified organisms in developing countries, and studies on genetic modification issues, are listed on the DFID website www.dfid.gov.uk. Expenditure on these projects in the last three years was: 1999–2000 £645,136; 2000–01 £767,479; 2001–02 £873,516.

A briefing note on genetically modified organisms and developing countries is also on the website.

DFID invests in biomedical research to develop new drugs, vaccines and other products to prevent disease in developing countries.

Since 2001, £1.5 million has been invested in the International AIDS Vaccine Initiative. The Medicines for Malaria Venture has been given £1 million a year over the last three years to expedite discovery of the next generation of anti-malarial drugs.

Through the UK Medical Research Council (MRC), DFID began funding a five year £16 million Microbicides Development Programme in the current financial year. In addition, DFID's concordat with the MRC involves a contribution in excess of £4 million a year to their research portfolio which includes basic biomedical research relevant to the health of poor people in developing countries.

DFID's contribution of about £10 million a year to the World Health Organisation includes funds for its tropical diseases research programme. This funding is not earmarked and data are not available of the exact sums going to the programme and the amounts used for biomedical research.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when the EU Committee for the implementation of the Regulation establishing an Instrument for Structural Policies for Pre-accession is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [73160]

Clare Short: The next meeting of the EU Committee of the Instrument for Structural Policies for Pre-accession (ISPA) is due to take place in October 2002; the exact date has yet to be decided.

Schedule 5 of the 1998 Scottish Act sets out areas of policy that are reserved, that is, where responsibility has not been devolved to the Scottish Executive. Section 7 (1) of Schedule 5 states:

"International relations, including relations with territories outside the United Kingdom, the European Communities (and their institutions) and other organisations, regulation of international trade, and international development assistance and co-operation are reserved matters."

The United Kingdom is represented on the ISPA Committee by officials from the Department for International Development and the United Kingdom Permanent Representation to the European Commission.

Deforestation

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department's policy is on deforestation. [73281]

Clare Short: Deforestation is a serious problem in many countries but it affects people in different ways and is not always harmful. It is driven by many factors that vary in nature and scale from place to place. Some of these factors, such as unsustainable timber extraction, are linked to the forest sector while others, such as agricultural and energy policies, lie outside the forest sector.

Each country has a particular set of circumstances, in terms both of the direct and underlying causes of deforestation and of the scope for action in addressing them. My Department works with developing countries to address the underlying causes of deforestation in the context of their national forest programmes and wider strategies for sustainable development. We have also supported work by the Intergovernmental Forum on Forest on the underlying causes of deforestation and forest degradation.

Commission on Intellectual Property Rights

Bob Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) when the Commission on Intellectual Property Rights was established; what it's terms of Reference are; who its members are and on what occassions it has meet. [72057]

(2) when she expects the Commission on Intellectual Property Rights to report. [72056]

Clare Short: The Commission was established on 8 May 2001.

Details of the terms of reference, Commission members and meetings can be found on the CIPR website at: www.iprcommission.org.

The Commission's report will be published on 12 September 2002. I will place copies in the Library of the House.

The Department for International Development answered the following questions by letter during the Whitsun recess in May and June 2002

Middle East

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answers of 9 May, 2002, Official Report, column 290W, on humanitarian assistance (Middle East), what the UK contribution to European Union and World Bank activities in the Territories Controlled by the Palestinian Authority was in each of the past 10 years, broken down by (a) monetary value, (b) percentage of activity total and (c) percentage of her Department's annual spending total; and if she will make a statement. [58334]

Clare Short: The UK contribution to the European Commission is given in the table:

Year	UK share of EC assistance to Palestinians (£ millions)	UK share as percentage of total EC Palestinian Activities	UK share as a percentage of UK Official Development Assistance
1994	12.8	15.0	0.6
1995	15.3	16.0	0.8
1996	11.5	14.5	0.6
1997	12.9	14.3	0.7
1998	14.7	19.1	0.8
1999	15.4	17.8	0.8
2000	26.8	19.0	1.2

The UK contribution to the World Bank is given in the table below

Year	UK Share of World Bank Disbursements to the West Bank and Gaza Strip (£ millions)	UK share as a percentage of the World Bank's Trust Fund for the West Bank and Gaza Strip	UK share as a percentage of UK Official Development Assistance
1995	0.4	5	0.02
1996	0.7	5	0.04
1997	1.4	5	0.08
1998	1.7	5	0.09
1999	0.9	5	0.04
2000	1.2	5	0.05
2001	1.0	5	0.04

The European Commission (EC) and World Bank programmes did not commence until 1994 and 1995 respectively. EC Data for 2001 has not yet been confirmed. The figures are calculated using approximate exchange rates for Euros and US Dollars. The percentage figure for our share of World Bank spending is an average of the various Bank instruments.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support Her Majesty's Government are providing in the rebuilding of Angola. [58913]

Clare Short: We have been following events in Angola closely. We strongly welcome recent moves towards peace and the agreement signed in Luanda on 4 April, which established a ceasefire after 30 years of civil war. A lasting peace is the key to development in Angola which is a country of enormous economic potential whose people are living in desperate poverty.

We are working with Angola bilaterally, as well as with our international partners and the United Nations. The humanitarian situation remains critical. And there is an urgent need to provide relief to the Unita fighters and their families gathered in the Quartering Areas. We are encouraging the UN to engage and the international community and Angolan Government to provide more resources for the relief effort. The UK will continue to play its part in meeting urgent humanitarian needs. DFID also has a small development assistance programme focused on long term poverty reduction for the large numbers of people, forced by the conflict, to migrate into urban areas. This totalled £2 million in the last financial year.

I undertook on my visit to Luanda to discuss Angola's situation with the IMF and World Bank and did so with Jim Wolfensohn and Horst Kohler and their staff at the spring meetings in Washington. We will continue to work to encourage reform so that the rich natural resources of Angola are used for the benefit of its people.

Angola

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the humanitarian situation in Angola; what emergency aid is (a) being delivered and (b) planned by her Department; and if she will make a statement. [58909]

Clare Short: My Department continues to monitor closely the humanitarian situation in Angola, which remains serious. Millions of Angolans are living under life threatening conditions and humanitarian agencies are working at full capacity to alleviate the worst aspects of the humanitarian crisis in the country.

We recently contributed £1 million to the 2002 United Nations Inter Agency Consolidated Appeal for Angola to ensure that critical needs are met and gaps in humanitarian assistance are covered during the sudden onset of emergencies. We also recently contributed £300,000 toward the International Red Cross country appeal for 2002 and £450,000 toward Medecins Sans Frontieres emergency health and sanitation programmes in Kuito, one of the worst effected areas in the country.

We are planning to spend some £2 million on humanitarian aid during the current financial year. We are also examining the potential for a specific DFID contribution to assist with the demobilisation of UNITA fighters.

Her Majesty's Government remains in close contact with the Government of Angola and international partners. We will remain at the forefront of diplomatic and political efforts to ensure that the internationals system engages effectively with the Government of Angola to deliver humanitarian aid more effectively, so that the peace process is reinforced.

Central Asia

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much her Department (a) pledged and (b) delivered to (i) Kazakhstan, (ii) Kyrgyzstan, (iii) Tajikistan, (iv) Turkmenistan and (v) Uzbekistan in each year from 1997 to September 2001; how much has been (A) pledged and (B) delivered to each country since September 2001; and if she will make a statement. [59808]

Clare Short: Figures up to September 2001 are not readily available as the department's records are maintained on a financial year basis as follows:

	1997/98	1998/99	1999/2000	2000/01
£ thousand	pledged/ delivered	pledged/ delivered	pledged/ delivered	pledged/ delivered
Kazakhstan	2,000/2,145	1,500/1,345	1,500/1,082	1,170/908
Kyrgyzstan	600/528	650/442	1,100/1,223	2,000/1,509
Tajikistan	100/24	100/732	130/45	100/640
Turkmenistan	200/240	300/194	200/97	100/111
Uzbekistan	700/586	700/592	500/505	220/484

In addition, the following was provided through Multilateral Organisations (calendar year):

	1997	1998	1999	2000
Kazakhstan	1,900	2,300	1,700	1,300
Kyrgyzstan	11,600	9,100	2,800	5,900
Tajikistan	3,000	4,900	2,700	3,900
Turkmenistan	500	800	700	400
Uzbekistan	1,200	1,700	2,000	1,600

Amounts pledged and delivered to each country since September 2001 are not readily available. Allocations for 2002/2003 financial year are:

Kazakhstan	800
Kyrgyzstan	3,500
Tajikistan	500
Turkmenistan	100
Uzbekistan	500

East Timor

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money her Department has (a) pledged and (b) delivered to (i) the new Government of East Timor, (ii) non-Governmental organisations in East Timor, (iii) multi-lateral programmes specifically aimed at East Timor and (iv) multi-lateral programmes including East Timor; and if she will make a statement. [58910]

Clare Short: Britain, together with the wider international community, remains committed to helping secure sustainable and equitable development for East Timor and its people. We are the fourth largest bilateral donor. Details of commitments and disbursements to East Timor for the period 1999 to 2005 are as follows:

Activity	Commitment 1999–2005 £	Disbursed £
United Nations: 1999 ballot	800,000	800,000
Humanitarian and Emergency Relief	6,500,000	6,500,000
United Nations Transitional Administration	4,500,000	4,500,000
United Nations: Support for 2001 Elections	500,000	500,000
World Bank Trust Fund (infrastructure)	8,000,000	8,000,000
Support for Developing the National Development Plan (NDP)	300,000	-

Civil Society and International NGOs	67,831	25,809
Local Civil Society Organisations	450,000	94,579
UK share of European Commission Expenditure, 1999–2005*	19,728,000	14,200,000
Total	54,735,831	35,210,388

*Estimated UK attribution at 19 per cent. of EU expenditure in East Timor

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the value was of CDC investments in agribusiness in (a) Africa and (b) China in (i) 1998, (ii) 1999, (iii) 2000 and (iv) 2001, (A) in money terms and (B) as a proportion of all new investments; and if she will make a statement. [55990]

Clare Short: The value of CDC's new investments in agribusiness in Africa and China over the last four years is shown below, along with their proportion in relation to all new investments.

(A) value in £m	1998	1999	2000	2001
Africa	14	6.1	6.2	0.6

(B) as proportion of total of all new investments

Africa	6.2%	2.2%	2.4%	0.4%

CDC has no agribusiness investments in China.

UN Commission on Human Rights

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the UK Government have provided to the UN Commission on Human Rights for each of the last five years. [58629]

Clare Short: DFID provides strategic support to the OHCHR through an Institutional Strategic Partnership. The partnership runs from January 2000 to December 2002 and to date we have provided £3.4 million. The objectives of the partnership are to enhance the capacity of OHCHR in order to support the development and management of its field programmes and operations; to mainstream all human rights across the work of the UN system; to integrate economic, social and cultural rights into its work; and to provide human rights information to other implementing agencies. In order to ensure that the OHCHR is able to comply with the mandates given to the OHCHR at the Commission on Human Rights, and that the special procedures of the Commission on Human Rights operate efficiently, DFID includes the servicing of these special procedures in its support to the central capacity of the OHCHR.

Southern Africa

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what actions Her Majesty's Government are undertaking to extend the availability of affordable anti-AIDS/HIV drugs in Southern Africa. [58914]

Clare Short: The Government are supporting an expanding programme to combat HIV/AIDS in Southern Africa (South Africa, Botswana, Namibia, Lesotho and Swaziland). Part of this involves strengthening South Africa's lead on essential drugs for the South African Development Community, and strengthening the essential drugs programme in South Africa to improve legislation, procurement and pricing for HIV/AIDS and other drugs.

We are also taking action at a global level. The Working Group on Access to Medicines, which I chair, is working with the pharmaceutical industry, foundations, developing countries and the World Health Organisation, World Trade Organisation and the European Commission to look at the feasibility of a global differential pricing mechanism for essential medicines. But the Government recognises that affordability is only one of four key factors that influence access to medicines. Others are the need for sustainable financing, the rational selection and use of existing drugs and reliable health and supply systems.

On sustainable financing we have pledged $200 million over 5 years to the Global Fund to Fight TB, AIDS and Malaria (GFATM), of which South Africa is already a beneficiary and to which other countries in the region have access. We have also committed over £1 billion since 1997 to strengthening developing countries' health systems, building their capacity both to deliver medicines to the poor and to make effective choices about the selection and use of drugs.

EC Advisory Committees

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the mandate of the Committee on Economic Aid to the Countries of Central and Eastern Europe and for the Co-ordination of Aid to the Candidate Countries under the Pre-accession Strategy Phase is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if she will list the items currently under its consideration; if she will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [55387]

Clare Short: There are two relevant committees; they cover the EC's PHARE (originally: Poland and Hungary Assistance for the Reconstruction of the Economy) and ISPA (Instrument for Structural Policies for Pre-Accession) programmes. The mandate of the PHARE Committee is to oversee the implementation of Council Regulation EEC Number 3906 of 18 December 1989, which established PHARE, and its subsequent amendments. The ISPA Committee oversees the implementation of Council Regulation EC Number 1267–1999, which established ISPA. They determine the strategy framework for PHARE and ISPA, and approve annual and multi-annual allocations to country and regional programmes.

The PHARE Committee has met eight times in the last year, the ISPA Committee, three times. The UK is represented by the Department for International Development (DFID) and the UK Permanent Representation to the European Commission.

The annual cost to public funds of the Committee's work principally comprises the work of DFID officials in assessing and discussing with the EC strategy and programme proposals, as well as the costs of attendance at meetings of the Committees. The precise amounts concerned are not readily available.

The items most recently considered under the Phare Committee were: the final part of the 2002 National Programme for Slovenia, the OLAF (European Anti-Fraud Office) 2002 Multi-Beneficiary Programme and the SIGMA (Support for Improvement in Governance and Management) 2002 Multi-Beneficiary Programme. The ISPA Committee recently considered a range of nineteen environment and seven transport projects across the range of Candidate countries.

Pre-accession programmes and/or work related to them are subject to scrutiny by Select Committees of Parliament. Under Council Decision 1999/468/EC the EC has undertaken to publish an annual report on the working of committees. The first such report was deposited in the libraries of both Houses on 26 February (Commission Document 5685/02). We have encouraged the EC to make available on its website a record of every comitology committee, its agendas and recent actions.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the mandate of the Committee on the development and consolidation of democracy and the rule of law and on the respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if she will list the items currently under its consideration; if she will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [55384]

Clare Short: The Human Rights and Democracy Committee is a Management Committee composed of Representatives of European Union Member States. Commission Services in charge of dealing with Human Rights and Democracy activities funded by Chapter B7-7 of the European Union Budget, have to consult or inform this Committee about the most important decisions they are entitled to take relating to this domain.

The main roles of the Committee are to be consulted on the annual version of the Human Rights and Democracy Multi-annual Programming Document elaborated under the responsibility of the Directorate-General External Relations; to approve Human Rights and Democracy projects identified by EuropeAid Co-operation Office for which the financial contribution is more than one million euro, (the Committee is simply informed when the amount is less than one million euro); to exchange views with Commission services about any geographical or thematic issues that have an impact on Human Rights and Democracy projects and programmes; to consider evaluations of the activities financed from Chapter B7-7 of the European Union Budget. Details of all projects currently overseen by the Committee are available on the website: http://europa.eu.int/comm/europeaid/projects/ddh_en.htm.

The Committee has met six times in the last 12 months. The UK is represented by officials from DFID and the FCO, as well as from the UK Permanent Representation to the EU. Travel costs for DFID officials to attend meetings of the Committee are met by the European Commission. Other costs incurred for attending this Committee totalled £424.00 (four hundred and twenty-four pounds) in the past twelve months.

Together with Member States, the Commission is currently conducting a review to bring existing legislation on the conduct of comitology committees into line with Council Decision 1999/468/EC, to

"simplify the requirements for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission".

As an obligation to this Decision, the Commission undertook to publish an annual report on the working of committees. The first report was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 26 February 2002 (Com (2001) 783 Final).

As part of the review process, the UK Government has encouraged the Commission to produce and maintain an electronic database of every comitology committee, its agendas and recent actions, to be accessible through its website.

EU Aid

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures her Department is taking to increase EU aid to poor people in the poorest countries. [59642]

Clare Short: We published a revised strategy for improving the poor performance of the European Community development programme in August 2001, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. We welcome the positive steps that have recently been taken, including establishment for the first time of an EC Development Policy with poverty reduction as the central objective. The Commission are also delegating significant new responsibilities to their offices overseas in order to improve communication with developing country partners and cut delays. The Government is working with other member states, the Commission and the European Parliament to try to ensure that these measures begin to have an impact on the ground and allow the European Community to make a much more significant contribution to achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. We are also working to try to reach agreement that a much greater share of EC aid should be allocated to low income countries where it will have the greatest impact on poverty reduction. In 2000, only 38 per cent. of EC aid was spent in low-income countries compared to 70 per cent. in 1990.

Our objective is to reverse this decline in order to secure radical improvement in the effectiveness of EC aid. Not all member states, Commissioners or MEPs support this objective.

The Government will continue to push for allocations based on developmental needs to countries committed to reducing poverty through all the channels available to us including the 2003 budget negotiations and the revision of the Asia and Latin America Regulation.

Correspondence

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many letters were received by each Minister in her Department in each month since June 1997. [59310]

Clare Short: The Cabinet Office, on an annual basis, publishes a report to Parliament on the volume of Members' correspondence received by departments. The Report for 2001 was published on Friday 24 May. Copies of previous reports are available in the Library of the House.

Information on Correspondence received from members of the public is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost

Bali Summit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff from her Department will travel to Bali to participate in the mini-summit for discussion of environmental issues. [57652]

Clare Short: Three officials from my department will be attending the Fourth Preparatory Committee meeting for the World Summit on Sustainable Development (WSSD). In addition, two DFID officials who specialise in water and private sector issues will be accompanying the delegation in the first week to assist in specific meetings.

Sierra Leone

Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid the UK has allocated to Sierra Leone in each of the last five years. [59200]

Clare Short: The UK's total development assistance to Sierra Leone over the last five years, including non-DFID debt relief, was as follows:

	£(m)
1996–97	10.8
1997–98	3.3
1998–99	9.2
1999–2000	30.0
2000–01	35.1

Finalised figures for 2001–02 are not yet available.

Press Releases

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many press releases have been issued by her Department in each month of 2002. [59478]

Clare Short: The information requested is given in the table:

	2002
January	5
February	4
March	1
Apr	1
May	2
Total	13

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many press releases were issued by her Department (a) in each month between May and December 1997 and (b) in each year from 1998 to 2001 inclusive. [59477]

Clare Short: The information is shown in the table:

Afghanistan

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on what date her Department received reports and representations from the International Committee of the Red Cross regarding the conditions of fighters held in Shibergan prison in Afghanistan; and what action her Department has taken. [58829]

Clare Short: My Department has not received reports or representations from the International Committee of the Red Cross regarding Shibergan prison in Afghanistan. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is pursuing this issue.

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent action the Government have taken to protect women in Afghanistan. [59081]

Clare Short: In Afghanistan women have begun to return to work and girls are going back to school. Two women hold office in the Afghan Interim Administration (AIA) and 11 per cent. of seats in the Loya Jirga are guaranteed for women. The UK is working closely with the AIA and the rest of the international community, to ensuring women's full and effective participation in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life throughout Afghanistan. To date this includes an allocation of $1 million to the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) for a programme to support Afghan women's leadership through awareness raising, capacity building and gender mainstreaming; as well as local level, quick impact recovery projects supporting women. We are also providing support directly to the Ministry for Women.

Occupied Palestinian Territories

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of food shortages in the Occupied Palestinian Territories; and what aid is being provided by the UK Government. [59352]

Clare Short: We have recently provided £500,000 to the World Food Programme, and our contributions to UNRWA's Emergency Appeals—£5 million this year—help meet the food needs of the refugee population. We are closely monitoring the situation and stand ready to do more.

Debt Sustainability

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the impact of changes in commodity prices on debt sustainability and the HIPC Initiative. [58631]

Clare Short: At the Annual Meetings of the World Bank and IMF in Ottawa last November, we raised this concern and asked Bank and Fund staff to revisit the debt sustainability analyses of all commodity dependent low-income countries, including the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC). The IMF and World Bank analysis, published last month, shows that, although the situation varies from country to country, the external debt indicators for most HIPC countries have deteriorated, and a result several HIPC countries now face unsustainable debt burdens. Following UK pressure, the World Bank and IMF Boards have agreed to provide additional relief countries in this situation. This was reconfirmed at the Spring Meetings last month.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of HIV/AIDS on debt sustainability in developing countries. [58632]

Clare Short: When assessing developing countries' debt sustainability, in the context of the Heavily indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative, the IMF and World

Bank work with governments in the countries themselves to produce detailed forecasts of export growth, GDP growth and new borrowing. These forecasts take account of all the various factors affecting the countries' economic situation, including the impact of HIV/AIDS, and the need for concessional borrowing to finance their poverty reduction strategies.

Kashmir

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with the Governments of (a) India and (b) Pakistan regarding developments in Kashmir. [59853]

Clare Short: I have not had any recent discussions with either the Government of India or Pakistan about development in Kashmir.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent advice her Department has issued to British NGOs working in Kashmir. [59854]

Clare Short: My Department does not routinely issue advice on conditions in countries where UK based NGOs are operating. Advice or guidance on such issues is provided by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Children's Rights

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to assist those countries which have signed up to the Convention on the Rights of the Child to protect children's rights to freedom from violence. [59404]

Clare Short: We seek to reduce the poverty of children by working to address the causes of deprivation in their communities. Support for children's rights to protection from violence, exploitation and abusive labour is central to our work towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. DFID's plans for tackling child poverty and supporting the rights of children are set out in "Breaking the cycle of child poverty", published earlier this month. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

UNGASS Document

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what efforts her Department is making to ensure that the commitments made in the UNGASS, World Fit for Children, outcome document are implemented in the countries her Department works in. [59405]

Clare Short: DFID's plans for tackling child poverty are set out in our publication "Breaking the Cycle of Child Poverty", which was launched at the UN Special Session and is available in the Library of the House. Our policies for the reduction of poverty are set out in our published country strategies. The UN General Assembly Special Session on Children reaffirmed the UN commitment to meeting the Millennium Development Goals, which is the central objective of DFID policy.

UNESCO

David Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department's priorities are for UNESCO, including the UK's share of UNESCO's assessed budget. [58566]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to our Institutional Strategy Paper for UNESCO, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. It is also available on our website, www.dfid.gov.uk.

Refurbishment Projects

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the refurbishment projects that (a) are in progress and (b) will start within the next six months; and what action is being taken to ensure that these will procure certified timber. [59760]

Clare Short: DFID is, in the next three months, due to commence a major refurbishment of our East Kilbride office. The detailed specifications for these works are currently being established, but the contractors have been instructed as they were for the refurbishment of 1 Palace Street, that all timber and veneers are to be sourced from sustainably managed forests, in accordance with the relevant DEFRA guidelines. My Department will also ensure that appropriate checks are carried out to ensure that these requirements are met, as they were in 1 Palace Street, despite false claims to the contrary.

Liberia

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many Liberians have fled their country following conflict between the Liberian Government forces and the rebel Liberians United for Reconciliation and Development. [58103]

Clare Short: Since the start of this year, UNHCR estimate that around 24,000 Liberians have sought refuge in neighbouring countries as a result of fighting between the Liberian army and rebel forces. Most of these have entered Sierra Leone (some 14,000), though around 6,000 have gone to Guinea, and 4,000 to Cote d'Ivoire.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance she has offered to the (a) United Nations and (b) Cote d'Ivoire to deal with refugees fleeing Liberia. [58102]

Clare Short: Since the start of this year, DFID has contributed £2 million to UN agencies and to the International Committee for the Red Cross for their work with refugees and displaced people in the West Africa. We have provided no support directly to the Government of Cote d'Ivoire.

Malawi

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had on the situtation in Malawi. [59647]

Clare Short: I and my officials are in ongoing discussions with all relevant institutions about the situation in Malawi.

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she has reviewed the decision to freeze Britain's £12.5 million of bilateral aid to Malawi. [59648]

Clare Short: DFID has allocated £70 million for Malawi in 2002–03. Of this £25 million is set aside for direct budget support. Budgetary support is currently suspended as the Government of Malawi has failed to carry out a number of agreed economic and financial reform measures crucial to progression in poverty reduction in Malawi. I am currently considering redirecting the first tranche of funds set aside for budgetary support to provide additional fund assistance to Malawi.

Palestinian Authority

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid has been made available to the Palestinian Authority to assist in reconstruction and regeneration. [59643]

Clare Short: World Bank-led teams have recently completed a damage assessment following the IDF incursions in the West Bank during April. The physical infrastructure rebuilding costs amount to $360 million. We have agreed to provide technical support for the reconstruction of Jenin camp. Our on-going programmes in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and our enhanced support to the United Nation Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian refugees, help address a wide range of Palestinian development needs.

External Consultants

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much expenditure her Department has incurred in each year since 1997 on employing external consultants to deal with the press or public relations of her Department. [59476]

Clare Short: DFID provided £120,000 in 1998 for work by a public relations consultancy to raise awareness of malaria as part of the Roll Back Malaria initiative led by the World Health Organisation.

HIPC

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid is being provided to HIPC by the UK as a proportion of GDP; and if she will make a statement. [59727]

Clare Short: Bilateral debt relief provided by the UK in 2001 accounted for 0.024 per cent. of Gross National Income (GNI), out of total official development assistance of 0.32 per cent. of GNI. In addition, we provided £23 million in 2001–02 to an international Trust Fund managed by the World Bank which finances relief on multilateral debt.

Somalian Refugees

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, how many Somalian refugees are believed to be camped in (a) Kenya and (b) Ethiopia [58100]

Clare Short: The latest figures from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees indicate there are (a) 129,800 Somalian refugees in Kenya and (b) 50,906 Somalian refugees in Ethiopia. The Kenya figure does not include approximately 10,000 people who have crossed the border into Kenya at Mandera this month.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Written Questions

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the written questions asked of him between (a) 1 to 30 June 2001, (b) 1 to 31 July 2001, (c) 1 to 30 September 2001, (d) 1 to 31 October 2001, (e) 1 to 30 November 2001, (f) 1 to 31 December 2001, (g) 1 to 31 January 2002, (h) 1 to 28 February 2002, (i) 1 to 31 March 2002 and (j) 1 to 30 April 2002 that had not received a substantive answer by 30 April; and if he will state (i) the name of the hon. Member asking the question and (ii) the reasons the question had not received a substantive answer. [54081]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 2 May 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend, Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. Cook) on 2 May 2002. For the Home Office, the number of outstanding questions for each month between June 2001 and April 2002 as at 30 April 2002 is shown in the table. The table also shows those that were still outstanding on 12 September 2002.

		Outstanding PQs
Month	Total PQs	At 30 April 2002	At 12 September 2002
1–30 June 2001	136	0	0
1–31 July 2001	495	0	0
1–30 September 2001	0	0	0
1–31 October 2001	427	4	0
1–30 November 2001	641	9	4
1–31 December 2001	343	13	7
1–31 January 2002	661	42	13
1–28 February 2002	555	53	13
1–31 March 2002	512	106	19
1–30 April 2002	705	421	13

We recognise that our performance in answering Parliamentary Questions needs to be improved and we are working closely with directorates and our business change and Information Technology (IT) partners to improve the situation.

Departmental Secondments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff in his Department have been seconded to jobs in the (a) private and (b) public sector in each of the last four years. [31783]

Hilary Benn: Secondments are part of the Interchange initiative, which promotes the exchange of people and good practice between the Civil Service and other organisations. All sectors of the economy are involved: Voluntary, Education, Health, Public and Private. Interchange provides opportunities for civil servants to learn new skills, widen their experience and develop ideas. It also brings in skills and experiences from other sectors.

The number of Home Office staff seconded out to private and public sector organisations is set out in the table. Information for 2001–02 is not yet available.

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Private sector	2	3	11	—
Public sector	*162	*80	*94	—

* The figures given for Home Office staff seconded to the public sector include posts overseas.

IT Contracts

Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total expenditure of his Department on IT systems and support in each year from May 1997 to date; how many IT contracts have been let in each of those years; of the other main contracting party in each of those contracts, how many have been (a) companies whose registered office is in (i) England and Wales, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Northern Ireland and (b) foreign companies; and what are the names of the companies falling within category (a). [33676]

Hilary Benn: To obtain information on the total Information Technology spend for the years requested would involve disproportionate cost. However, the following information on high value Information Technology Information Systems (IT)/(IS) expenditure is available.

1. Total expenditure (at £10 million and only)

Year	Expenditure
1997	23,599,999
1998	25,000,000
1999	29,000,000
2000	25,666,666
2001	66,466,666

The significant increase in expenditure in 2001 was due to the letting of the Sirius contract at £25 million and the letting of a contract to Bull for IT hardware and infrastructure support for over £10 million.

2. Contracts let/year (at £10 million and only)

Year	Contracts let
1997	0
1998	1
1999	2
2000	1
2001	2

3. How many suppliers have been registered in:

England and Wales	3
Scotland	0
Northern Ireland	0
Foreign Companies	1

4. What are the names of the suppliers registered in England and Wales:

Sirius Consortium (ICL/Global Crossing/PricewaterhouseCoopers Bull/Integris (now Steria))

Disclosure of Interests

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules apply to the disclosure of interests on the part of those serving on public bodies which are responsible to his Department. [56464]

Beverley Hughes: All executive and advisory non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) are required to adopt a board members' code, based on guidance produced by the Cabinet Office, and they should have a register of interests.

The following table lists the NDPBs sponsored by the Home Office and in each case indicates what the relevant Code of Practice is and where it is available.

Name of body	Code of Practice	Where available
Executive NDPBs
Central Police Training and Development Authority (CENTREX)	Yes. A register of interests is being established which will be open to public scrutiny.	Available on request from Central Police Training and Development Authority, Bramshill, Hook, Hampshire RG27 0JW.
Commission for Racial Equality (CRE)	Yes with a register of interests.	Available for inspection on request at the CRE's London office.
Community Development Foundation	Yes with a register of interests. Policy on disclosing interests also contained in Standing Orders.	Standing Orders available on request from Community Development Foundation.

Misuse of Drugs Professional Panel	No. Currently in abeyance.
Misuse of Drugs Tribunal	No. Currently in abeyance.
Office of the Surveillance Commissioners	No.
Police Arbitration Tribunal	No.
Police Discipline Appeals Tribunal	No.
Other NDPBs
Boards of Visitors to Penal Establishments	No. Members abide by the Prison rules, which contain provisions for disqualifying from membership, any person interested in any contract for the supply of goods or services to a prison.

Immigration

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many full time immigration officers will be working at the Port of Felixstowe after 1 July. [69983]

Beverley Hughes: The port of Felixstowe will not close, from an immigration point of view, until a new office at or near Ipswich has been established. The four immigration officers currently employed at Felixstowe have been transferred to Harwich on 14 July 2002. Asylum screening will continue to be carried out at Felixstowe until the new facility at Ipswich is operational. Whilst screening is conducted one immigration officer per day will attend Felixstowe from Harwich.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which immigration office will administer the Port of Felixstowe after 1 July. [69982]

Beverley Hughes: Felixstowe has always been administered from the East Anglia Headquarters at Harwich and this will continue to be the case.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if immigration officers will provide a 24-hour presence at the Port of Felixstowe after 1 July. [69972]

Beverley Hughes: Felixstowe staff did not provide a 24-hour service at the Port. The period from 2100 to 0700 was covered by officers based at Harwich. Staff from Harwich will now provide remote cover for the full 24-hours attending when required.

UK Nationals (Zimbabwe)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many United Kingdom nationals resident in Zimbabwe have returned to the United Kingdom to settle in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [69789]

Beverley Hughes: The requested information is not available.

It is not possible to measure how many United Kingdom nationals resident in Zimbabwe have returned to the United Kingdom to settle. As holders of British passports, United Kingdom nationals are free to enter, and to remain in, the United Kingdom without requiring leave to do so they are not subject to immigration controls.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Ann McKechin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to improve the service offered by the Public Inquiry Office of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate at Croydon. [72009]

Beverley Hughes: The aim is to improve substantially the service to the Public Enquiry Office callers and as far as possible reduce the waiting time and long queues.

The Public Enquiry Office Croydon is currently in the process of recruiting an additional team of 17 staff, increasing its same day service capabilities. There are plans to rebuilt the entrance into Lunar House to provide better access to all of those who need to come to Croydon. It is hoped that building work may commence towards the end of this year. Moreover the Public Enqiry Office has improved its signage and website information so that callers are more informed of the service provided and all of the other options available to them.

Asylum

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason Mr. Mohammed Mahmood of Southend, reference M1051379, has not been notified of the outcome of his asylum application; and if he will make a statement. [72157]

Beverley Hughes: I regret that remedial action following the discovery of the existence of a double file has delayed formal notification of the decision in this case. I will write to the hon. Member to explain the present position.

Foreign Students

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review regulations relating to the employment of foreign students as seasonal workers in agriculture. [73054]

Beverley Hughes: Paragraphs 104–09 of the Immigration Rules (HC395) provide for the entry and employment of foreign students under the Seasonal Agricultural Workers Scheme (SAWS). The recent Home Office White Paper "Secure Borders, Safe Haven" signalled, in paragraph 3.25, our intention to review the operation of this scheme. A consultation document was published on 29 May 2002, is available on the Home Office website and has been sent to a wide range of organisations with an interest in the scheme. In addition, officials have held meetings with key stakeholder groups. The consultation ended on 23 August 2002. Any changes to the scheme resulting from the consultation will be announced in due course.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how much and what proportion of his 2002–03 Departmental Expenditure Limit had been spent by 31 May; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [61753]

Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 11 July 2002, Official Report, column 1197W.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Rape

Mr. Gale: To ask the Solicitor-General what proportion of allegations of rape made to the police were brought to trial by the Crown Prosecution Service in each of the last five years. [68798]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 15 July 2002]: There are no wholly reliable or national figures which touch on the precise statistics that the hon. Member seeks.

Some information about the extent to which reported cases reach trial may be found in the Report on the Joint Inspection into the Investigation and prosecution of cases involving Allegations of rape, published in April 2002 by HMCPSI and HMIC. The Inspection included examination of a sample of 1,741 reported complaints of rape. The offender was charged in 467 of these cases. Therefore, of the 1,741 reports of rape, some 26 per cent. resulted in a charge or summons.

The Inspectorates' analysis does not show how many of those 467 prosecutions proceeded to trial or to guilty plea. However, the Inspectorates' Report also analysed 88 rape cases that did proceed to court. Of these 88, approximately 56 per cent. proceeded to trial (35 defendants were found not guilty after a trial and 14 were convicted after a trial). A further 39 defendants, or approximately 44 per cent. pleaded guilty without the need for a trial, which amounts to a conviction rate (including guilty pleas and those convicted after a trial) of 60.8 per cent.

The 1,741 crime reports were drawn from ten Police Forces, and the 88 rape cases that proceeded to court were drawn from nine of these ten Police Forces. The cases were initially recorded as rape for the period 31 December 2000 or before (each Police Force was asked to provide up to a specified number of cases). In view of the limited nature of the file sample, it would be unwise to extrapolate national statistics from these figures.

I take very seriously the need to ensure that all parts of the criminal justice system adopt best practice when dealing with rape cases. In response to the Thematic Review, the Crown Prosecution Service, Home Office and Court Service have drawn up an Action Plan to improve practice in the investigation and prosecution of offenders, and to ensure better treatment of victims and witnesses. The Plan was published on 22 July.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Solicitor-General what proportion of rape cases brought to trial by the Crown Prosecution Service resulted in the conviction of the accused in each of the last five years. [68799]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 15 July 2002]: The answer is set out at the table attached. The figures include guilty pleas and convictions after trial. The data for 2001 will not be available until Autumn this year.

Persons[1] tried for rape[2] at the Crown Court and numbers and proportion found guilty

England and Wales, 1996 to 2000

	Persons tried[3]	Persons found guilty	Proportion found guilty
1996	1,125	575	51%
1997	1,249	615	49%
1998	1,518	674	44%
1999	1,464	654	45%
2000	1,373	593	43%

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EU Committees (Scottish Executive Representation)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on economic outward-processing arrangements for textiles is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [70916]

Stephen Timms: There are currently no plans for this Committee to meet. There have been no representatives of the Scottish Executive on this Committee in the past. A Department of Trade and Industry Official has represented the UK.

Somalia

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the supply of military equipment to Somalia from the UK. [68820]

Nigel Griffiths: Companies exporting arms and other items controlled for strategic reasons from the UK to Somalia require an export licence from the Department of Trade and Industry's Export Control Organisation.

In line with United Nations (UN) sanctions, no exports of military equipment to Somalia are permitted apart from items of humanitarian end-use approved by the UN Sanctions Committee. UNSCR 733 (1992) imposed an arms embargo on Somalia covering "all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia until the Council decides otherwise". UNSCR 1356 (2001) amended the scope of the embargo to allow the export of humanitarian exports and protective clothing approved by the UN Sanctions Committee. UNSCR 1425 (2002) widened the scope of the embargo to prohibit "the direct or indirect supply to Somalia of technical advice, financial and other assistance, and training related to military activities."

All relevant export licence applications for Somalia are rigorously assessed on a case-by-case basis against the consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria and the UN arms embargo; taking into account the particular circumstances prevailing at the time and other relevant previously announced Government policies.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the overseas trips on departmental business that have been undertaken in each of the last five years by officials in her Department; and what the (a) cost, (b) purpose and (c) result was in each case. [68731]

Ms Hewitt: All overseas travel by officials in the Department is undertaken in accordance with principles set in Chapter 8 of the Civil Service Management Code and the detailed rules and guidance set out in the Department's Guide to officials. The detailed information requested about individual trips is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the staff of her Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66904]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, on 5 July 2002, Official Report, column 622W.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Job Location

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, how many jobs under the remit of his Department in (a) the core department, (b) non-departmental public bodies, (c) executive agencies and (d) independent statutory bodies, organisations and bodies financially sponsored by his Department and other such organisations, are located in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, excluding Greater London, (iii) Greater London, (iv) Wales, (v) Northern Ireland and (vi) overseas broken down by (A) whole-time equivalent jobs and (B) the percentage per individual department, body or organisation.

Mr. McCartney [pursuant to the Written Answer on 24 July 2002, Official Report, vol. 389, col. 1589–90W]: The information is in the table.

DEFENCE

Iraq

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in respect of the attack by allied aircraft on 19 July in the Qadissiya province of Iraq, how many salvos were fired during the mission, what hostile acts the target area had been responsible for in provoking the attack and how many of the people injured and killed were deemed to be military personnel. [73684]

Mr. Ingram: On the night of 18 July, when the incident in question occurred, coalition aircraft responded to multiple attacks on them by Iraqi air defence weapons, including anti-aircraft artillery and missiles, by releasing precision guided munitions.

Coalition aircraft conduct patrols of the Iraqi no fly zones in support of UN SCR 688 which demanded that Saddam Hussein end the brutal repression of his own people. The pilots conducting these wholly legitimate patrols are regularly shot at by Iraqi air defences. They are authorised to respond in self-defence to efforts to shoot them down. This is the only basis on which weapons have been released over Iraq since Operation Desert Fox in December 1998.

The coalition targets Iraqi air defence facilities that pose a threat to its forces patrolling the no fly zones. Exceptional lengths are taken to ensure civilian casualties are kept to the absolute minimum possible, including the employment of very carefully controlled targeting procedures and precision guided munitions. It is in Saddam's interests to distort the truth in his attempts to convince the world that the coalition is responsible for causing widespread suffering to the Iraqi civilian populace. Saddam would readily persecute these people, as he has done in the past, if we did not patrol the no fly zones. We are not prepared to abandon these people.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Area-based Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each area-based initiative for which his Department is responsible the amount originally budgeted for in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02, stating in each year what funds budgeted for were not spent and if they were carried forward. [71463]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Lord Chancellor's Department is responsible for one designated Area Based Initiative; the roll out of Community Legal Services Partnerships (CLSPs). CLSPs are voluntary groupings made up of providers and funders of advice and help services and are not funded by the Lord Chancellor's Department. However, CLSPs are supported by regional staff of the Legal Services Commission. The total cost of these staff has been £3.5 million for each of the two years, 2000–01 and 2001–02. As this support varies according to need between CLSPs it is not possible to answer the question precisely for each local area.

Immigration Appellate Tribunal

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to open additional IATs. [73048]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Currently there are no plans to open new Immigration Appeal Tribunal (IAT) premises. At present all IAT hearings are conducted from Field House in London. However, there are extensive plans to open new Adjudicator hearing centres as part of the Immigration Appellate Authorities' (IAA) expansion programme. The IAA has been tasked with increasing its capacity from the current 4,500 asylum appeals per month to 6,000 cases per month from November 2002.

Centres are planned for Newport, Stoke-on-Trent, North Shields, Bradford and Manchester, opening between November 2002 and June 2003. In addition to the new locations, the hearing capacities of existing centres in Birmingham and Hatton Cross are being increased. The precise timescales for the expansion programme remain subject to lease and planning considerations.

The capacity of the IAT will also need to increase, but this will not require accommodation outside its London base.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he proposes to open the new IAT in Leicester. [73047]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Currently there are no plans to open new Immigration Appeal Tribunal (IAT) premises. At present all IAT hearings are conducted from Field House in London.

However, as part of the Immigration Appellate Authorities' (IAA) programme of expansion, a new administrative support centre is to open in Arnhem House in Leicester during November 2002. The IAA has been tasked with increasing its capacity from the current 4,500 asylum appeals per month to 6,000 cases per month from November 2002.

The centre will operate in tandem with the existing Loughborough centre, providing back office functions in support of the expanded network of IAA hearing centres.

Fines (Enforcement)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to improve the enforcement of fines imposed by the courts. [73228]

Yvette Cooper: The Government are committed to improving the enforcement of financial penalties. Following the transfer of lead responsibility of warrant execution from the police to Magistrates' Courts Committees in April 2001, my Department has been taking forward a programme of work aimed at improving enforcement. Magistrates' Courts Committees have also been given nearly £10 million extra from April 2002, ring-fenced for enforcement purposes.

The White Paper, "Justice for All", published in July, heralded new legislative proposals aimed at improving enforcement rates. The proposals could include giving court staff a range of discretionary powers to manage the collection of fines on behalf of the court. While those facing genuine difficulties should have access to support and advice, defaulters who refuse to co-operate with the court would face greater sanctions, including for example increasing the fine if the offender fails to pay on time.

Meetings

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he next plans to meet Mr. Duncan Webster and Mr. David Wilkinson. [73050]

Yvette Cooper: I met Mr. Duncan Webster and Mr. David Wilkinson on 4 September 2002. I have no current plans to meet them again, but I would be happy to do so.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Parliamentary Scrutiny

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the President of the Council what proposals he has to improve parliamentary scrutiny of ministerial decisions which are made using the Royal Prerogative. [72954]

Robin Cook: As the Ministerial Code makes clear, Ministers are accountable to Parliament for their decisions and actions, including decisions which are made using the Royal Prerogative. If the hon. Member has any proposals to improve parliamentary scrutiny of ministerial decisions, which are made under the Royal Prerogative, I would be willing to consider them.

The introduction of Westminster Hall and the greater flexibility available to select committees should already have increased the House's ability to scrutinise all aspects of Ministers' work, and will continue to do so in the future.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Departmental Report

Mr. Beith: To ask the Solicitor-General what the cost was of publishing her Department's annual report for each of the past five years. [70481]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 18 July 2002]: The cost of publishing the Law Officers' Departments' annual report in each of the last four years was as follows:

1999	4,327
2000	4,485
2001	6,849
2002	7,618

In 1998 the Law Officers' Departments' annual report was published as part of the Lord Chancellor's Annual Report and the cost is not separately available for that year.

In addition, the Crown Prosecution Service, the Treasury Solicitor's Department and the Serious Fraud Office publish Departmental Annual Reports. The costs are as follows:

Crown Prosecution Service

1998	22,695
1999	22,387
2000	18,600
2001	24,340
2002	34,000

Treasury Solicitor's Department

1997–98	11,647
1998–99	11,746
1999–2000	9,505
2000–01	9,910

1997–98	44,902
1998–99	22,235
1999–2000	21,140
2000–01	20,833
2001–02	25,093

In addition, the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers published a document entitled "The Attorney General's Review of the Year 2001–02". Although not formally an Annual Report, it explained the work of the Law Officers over the last year. Its cost was £9,234.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports sent to the IND in 2001 went missing; and of these, how many have subsequently been found. [64237]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 25 June 2002]: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. However, a measure of the number of passports which could not be returned to their owners is the lost passport letter. Since September last year, strict controls have been in place on the way such letters are used; as a consequence more effective searches have been carried out and the number of letters issued has fallen by around 50 per cent. per month (from an average of 45 per month to about 20). Of those searches completed, less than 1 per cent. of passports cannot be found. Even so further initiatives are in place to improve the handling of passports.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the efficiency of the IND. [64239]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 25 June 2002]: We aim to consider 70 per cent. of all new general and settlement cases on initial consideration within three weeks. Due to an exceptionally large increase in the number of immigration cases in the latter part of 2001 the turnaround time increased but has now been reduced to four weeks. We are working to return performance to three weeks very shortly. However, cases which cannot be dealt with at the initial consideration stage are taking up to nine months to consider. We are looking to reduce this timescale as a priority case over the next six months. We have also reviewed our processes to speed up the consideration of cases and are looking at options for utilising additional resources within The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND).

Since the beginning of June, queue management changes in the Public Enquiry Office (PEO) in Croydon have resulted in bringing the public faster into the building when it opens. Plans are underway to open a second entrance into the building and to relocate other callers to another Croydon office in a further effort to improve access.

Immigrant Dispersal

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the policy of dispersing immigrants to Wales from the South-East of England. [63338]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 20 June 2002]: As at the end of March 2002, 1,020* asylum seekers including dependants were being supported in National Asylum Support Service (NASS) accommodation in Wales. In addition 160* asylum seekers including dependants in receipt of subsistence only support are resident in Wales. NASS has appointed a Regional Manager in each of its regions. Regional Managers are responsible for monitoring the effectiveness of the support provided to asylum seekers in their region.

* Figures rounded to nearest 10. We cannot say categorically that all dispersals were from the south-east of England.

Visa Applications

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about granting visas to Egyptian students in the past 2 months; and if he will make a statement. [65235]

Beverley Hughes: I have received no such recent representations.

Asylum Seekers

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are receiving cash-only support; and if he will make a statement. [72930]

Beverley Hughes: As at the end of March 2002, 30,740* asylum seekers (including dependants) were receiving subsistence only support[1] from the National Asylum Support Service (NASS).

Statistics on the number of asylum seekers supported by NASS are available on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration.1.html.

[1] Subsistence only support changed to cash only support in April 2002.

*Figures have been rounded to the nearest 10.

Figures exclude cases where the asylum seekers support has been ceased.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 June 2002, Ref 62529 on asylum seekers, when he expects to publish the research examining the reception policies of (a) Sweden, (b) Denmark, (c) the Netherlands and (d) Germany. [66107]

Beverley Hughes: The research commissioned by the Home Office on the reception policies of Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands and Germany will be published by the end of 2002. This date is provisional, subject to the work being completed on schedule by the research contractors and to Research, Development and Statistics (RDS) publication procedures (including peer review).

Retail Crime

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 May 2002, to the hon. Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Lepper) Official Report, column 605W, on retail crime, if he will list for each regional crime reduction director, the amount spent on business crime in 2001–02. [71306]

Mr. Denham: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink) on 22 July 2002, Official Report, columns 862W.

Motorcyclists

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact on motorcyclists of the proposed establishment of law enforcing arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [30826]

Mr. Denham: 'Policing a New Century: a Blueprint for Reform' made no specific reference to motorcyclists. One of its themes, however, was the effective tackling of anti-social behaviour. The anti-social use of motorcycles has been a particular issue and growing concern in some areas, for example where the motorcycles have been raced around estates, across public footpaths or over public parks.

The Police Reform Act was introduced by the Government to take forward the proposals in 'Policing a New Century. Amongst its provisions, the Government have given the police new powers to deal with the anti-social use of motor vehicles, including motorcycles. It is already an offence under the Road Traffic Act 1988 to drive inconsiderately on public roads or off-road without consent. The Act now provides an addition that if a vehicle committing one of these offences is being driven in such a way that it is causing or is likely to cause alarm, distress or annoyance to members of the public, a constable in uniform will be empowered to stop and seize it. A constable will be able to enter premises other than a private dwelling to effect the seizure. The owner will be able to retrieve the vehicle on payment of removal and storage charges. Detailed arrangements will be made by regulation and will ensure that the owner is not required to pay when the vehicle was used without his consent.

The new power will enable the police to deal with motorcycle nuisance more effectively by putting an immediate stop to such anti-social behaviour.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the (a) dates, (b) location and (c) sources were of attributable (i) articles, interviews or contributions for the media, books or other journals and

(ii) speeches or presentations made in the public domain, by departmental special advisers since March 2001; who in his Department authorised the activity; and on what date this activity was recorded with the departmental Head of Information. [72251]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister (Mr. Blair) on 24 July 2002, Official Report, column 1373W.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Waste Disposal

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) how many waste disposal incinerators in the UK have planning permission but are not yet operating; and where they are sited; [73485]

(2) how many planning applications for waste disposal incinerators are awaiting determination by planning authorities in the United Kingdom; and where they are sited. [73486]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

Information about individual planning applications in England is not reported to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister or held centrally, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The position in other parts of the UK is a matter for the devolved administrations.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Public Services

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how the work of the (a) Neighbourhood Renewal Unit, (b) Social Exclusion Unit and (c) Regional Co-ordination Unit will be co-ordinated within his new Department; and what impact this will have on the joined-up delivery of inclusive public services at a regional level. [63100]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The Social Exclusion Unit and the Regional Co-Ordination Unit were both previously based in the Cabinet Office. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will also include, among other responsibilities, the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit. As Minister of State for Social Exclusion, Regional Co-ordination, Neighbourhood Renewal and Minister for Women and Equality, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green will ensure a co-ordinated approach on these policy areas.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many and what proportion of the public service agreements of his Department set out in the document "Public Services for the Future 1998" have been met; and if he will make a statement. [68717]

Mr. Leslie: The relevant 1998 and 2000 PSA targets were transferred to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister from the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions following the recent Machinery of Government changes. Therefore, a complete list of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's PSA targets is available in the DTLR Annual Report 2002 published on 10 June. The report provides details of progress against PSA targets including those which have been met.

Empty Properties (London)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the empty residential properties in each London borough in the ownership of his Department and its agencies, giving (a) the type of accommodation, (b) how long each property has been vacant and (c) what the intended future use is of the property. [69493]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister currently owns no empty residential properties in any of the London boroughs.

Housing Regeneration

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much (a) public and (b) private money has been invested in housing regeneration in each of the last five years. [69379]

Mr. McNulty: As regeneration is not limited to housing projects, details of expenditure cannot be broken down as requested.

Public funding for housing regeneration is provided through a variety of programmes. The Housing Corporation has a target for housing regeneration, which is 65 per cent. of Approved Development Programme (ADP) grant approvals for each year; in 2001–02 86 per cent. of approvals were for regeneration. Housing also plays an integral part in many specific regeneration programmes, such as New Deal for Communities.

Public funding for housing regeneration is also provided through local authority housing capital expenditure. However, this is not broken down to provide details of all regeneration expenditure. The following information is available from Housing Investment Programme returns:

Housing Capital Expenditure

Total Housing Capital Expenditure	2,366	2,511	2,418	2,777	3,448

Private sector funding for housing regeneration is levered in through a number of avenues, including through the private finance initiative (PFI), and through large-scale voluntary transfer (LSVT) of local authority housing. We have no overall figures for the level of private money invested in housing regeneration.

Housing Funding

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what changes to levels of housing funding for each region there have been between 2001–02 and 2002–03. [70804]

Mr. McNulty: A regional breakdown of the main funding stream for housing provided by central government in these two years are set out below. The figures cover Housing Revenue Account Subsidy (including the Major Repairs Allowance), Housing Investment Programme allocations to local authorities and the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme.

Planning

Keith Vaz: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many planning matters were being considered by Ministers on 22 July. [73245]

Mr. McNulty: At any one time Ministers have under consideration a large number of planning matters including ones concerning the operation of the system, the development and application of planning policy and decisions on called-in planning cases or recovered appeals. Major national issues on 22 July would have included the planning aspects of the statement to the House on 18 July by the Deputy Prime Minster on "Sustainable Communities, Housing and Planning" and taking forward the proposals for reform of the planning system set out in the policy statement "Sustainable Communities—Delivering through Planning" published the same day. Just over 2,100 cases were under consideration at various stages of the planning process, in the Government Offices, the Planning Inspectorate or directly before the First Secretary of State for decision.

Government Business (Overseas)

Chris Grayling: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many days he has spent on Government business overseas in the past 12 months. [65670]

The Deputy Prime Minister: In the twelve months since 1 July 2001, I have spent 34 working days overseas on Government business, deputising for the Prime Minister in the run-up to the World Summit on Sustainable Development.

Social Services

Clive Efford: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what has been the average percentage increases in social services budgets in London boroughs; and what were the increases in (a) social services SSAs and (b) revenue support grants (i) for each local authority and (ii) for London as a whole in each of the last five years. [69151]

Jacqui Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The tables below provide the amounts and percentage increases in social services budgets, personal social services standard spending assessment and revenue grants paid by this Department for each local authority in inner and outer London and for London as a whole, for each of the last five years. The percentage increases do not reflect the changes in functions, and are not therefore, on a like for like basis. Budget figures are not available yet for 2002–03.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the staff of his Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66909]

Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon Member to the reply given to him by my hon Friend, Member for Paisley South (Mr. Alexander) on 5 July 2002, Official Report, column 622W.

Design Champion

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 March 2002, Official Report, column 1223W, on the Design Champion, which two projects the departmental Design Champion is sponsoring. [73639]

Beverley Hughes: My noble Friend Lord Filkin (the Departmental Design Champion) is sponsoring the new Home Office in Marsham Street, Westminster, and is considering the selection of a second project. He will make this known when a decision has been made.

Retail Crime

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the correlation between retail crime and street crime; [54570]

(2) if he will make a statement on his assessment of the correlation between retail crime and drug abuse. [54566]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Brighton Pavilion (David Lepper) on 23 August 2002, Official Report, column 19W.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what change there has been in the Partnership Development Fund for crime reduction in the last year. [71218]

Mr. Denham: The Partnership Development Fund aims to build the capacity of Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships to manage the implementation of local projects and strategies to deliver and sustain crime and disorder reduction in their area. The fund enables Crime Reduction Directors located at Government Offices in the Regions and in the National Assembly for Wales to target resources locally. Allocations have been made to Directors totalling £15.54 million in this current financial year.

Street Crime

Mr. Cameron To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the responsibilities of Ministers in his Department relating to specific initiatives and in particular police areas in respect of street crime. [65218]

Mr. Denham: As Minister of State for crime reduction, policing and community safety and children and young people, I have specific responsibility for the street crime initiative within the Home Office.

I and nine other Ministers from across Government Departments were asked by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister (Mr. Blair) in May to act as "sponsor" Ministers for the 10 police force areas covered by the street crime initiatives. Their role is to work with the areas' street crime partnerships to ensure that local systems for dealing with street crime victims and offenders are working effectively.

The 10 street crime sponser Ministers are:

The right hon. Baroness Blackstone: Avon & Somerset
The right hon. Lord Falconer: Greater Manchester
Hazel Blears: Lancashire
John Denham: London
Yvette Cooper: Merseyside
Ruth Kelly: Nottinghamshire
Barbara Roche: Thames Valley
The right hon. Lord Rooker: West Midlands
Stephen Twigg: South Yorkshire
Hilary Benn: West Yorkshire.

Crime Reduction

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what change there has been in the partnership development fund for crime reduction in the last year. [69813]

Mr. Denham: The Partnership Development Fund aims to build the capacity of Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships to manage the implementation of local projects and strategies to deliver and sustain crime and disorder reduction in their area. The fund enables Crime Reduction Directors located at Government Offices in the Regions and in the National Assembly for Wales to target resources locally. An allocation has been made to Directors totalling £15.54 million in this current financial year.

Equipment Leasing

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the equipment leasing arrangements entered into by his Department in each of the last four years; and what the cost is to public funds in each case. [39084]

Beverley Hughes: The Department does not hold detailed information on expenditure for all equipment leasing arrangements. To provide a full answer would incur disproportionate cost, however, the Department's main leasing arrangements are for the supply of photocopiers and fax machines, the majority of which are provided by Canon and Xerox. I am able to provide these details as follows:

Year	Canon	Xerox	Total
2000	1,420,112	15,168	1,435,280
2001	1,932,127	24,765	1,956,892

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 30 April from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs. Vida Obiri Yebdah Burgess. [68196]

Beverley Hughes: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I provided to him on 15 July 2002, Official Report, column 108W.

Mr Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter to him dated 5 June from the right hon Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Liaqat Ali. [72147]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 17 July 2002.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend East of 17 June about Mr. Faut Altunyurt (Ref A 183001). [71350]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 22 July 2002]: I wrote on behalf of my right Hon Friend the Home Secretary to the hon Member on 30 September 2002.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Blackpool, South dated 13 December 2001, ref 925/2. [65619]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 1 July 2002]: I replied to the hon. Member for Blackpool South on 27 September 2002.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Anabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which Scottish newspapers the post of Director-General of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate has been advertised. [68848]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 11 July 2002]: The post of Director General of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate was advertised in the following media:

Sunday Times
The Guardian and Observer
The Voice
New Nation and Asian Times
Caribbean Times
African Times
Eastern Eye.

Odgers Ray and Berndtson, the consultancy service used to administer the campaign, also advertised the post via the Internet.

No newspapers exclusive to Scotland were targeted during this recruitment campaign.

Open Source Software

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is towards using open source software; and what percentage is used in his Department. [69316]

Beverley Hughes: The choice of software to meet the business needs of the Home Office now largely rests with its strategic ISIT suppliers who are contracted, largely under the Private Finance Initiative (PFI), to meet business requirements and provide value for money solutions, including the consideration of open source solutions. In the main, the Home Office no longer chooses specific software. Within our business requirements the Home Office ensure that any technical choices should meet relevant government software standards and provide for interoperability with our public and business partners. The Home Office supports and will respond where appropriate to Office of Government Commerce competition initiatives which encourage the availability of choice in the software marketplace. The Government's policy for Open Source Software was published in July 2002 and is available at the following web address http://www.govtalk.gov.uk

Current suppliers to the Home Office are not known to extensively use, or have plans for implementing, open source software. None of the major non-PFI delivered projects utilise open source software.

Victims of Crimes

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from the public concerning the position of victims of crimes. [66337]

Hilary Benn: The Home Office receives regular correspondence from victims of crime. Home Office Ministers and officials also have regular contact with Victim Support and other organisations representing victims of crime and take victims' views fully into account when developing policy.

Police

Dr. Spink asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police sub-stations were open in each constabulary in each of the last five years; [62365]

(2) how many police stations were open to the public 24 hours per day in each constabulary in each of the last five years. [62367]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon Member to the reply given to the hon Member for Maidenhead (Theresa May) on 22 July 2002, Official Report, column 829W on the number of functioning police stations in police forces in each year since 1997.

Information on how many stations are open 24 hours per day is not collected centrally.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average daily number of mobile traffic units operating radar guns in the Metropolitan Police area has been for the last 12 months for which figures are available. [31022]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Radar guns are a type of hand-held mobile speed detection device for use at the roadside. There are also laser devices used in the same way. The Government does not collect information about the use of such devices. The Metropolitan Police estimate that on any given day there are at least seven mobile hand-held speed detection devices for roadside use taken out in police patrol vehicles across London.

Substance Abuse

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding is available through his Department for (a) education on, and (b) prevention of, volatile substance abuse. [73372]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Information about the dangers of volatile substance abuse is provided as part of drug education in schools. This is funded by the Department of Health, for whom volatile substance abuse is also a priority. The Department will, however, be issuing £4.5 million in 2002–03 to support the delivery of Young People Substance Misuse Plans. These plans are developed by all Drug Action Teams to outline how services will be expanded so that all young people requiring drugs services receive them. This will incorporate education and prevention of volatile substance misuse.

Sangatte Protocol

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many illegal immigrants have been returned to France since June 1997 under the terms of the Sangatte Protocol. [63189]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 20 June 2002]: An agreement was signed with France dated 20 April 1995 in relation to the taking back of passengers who are refused admission on arrival in the United Kingdom ("the 1995 Agreement").

That agreement covers, among other things, the arrival of persons through the Channel Tunnel and therefore has the effect of qualifying the Sangatte Protocol. But it also relates to passengers travelling between France and United Kingdom via the Channel ports. The 1995 Agreement provided that, in relation to asylum seekers, it would be superseded by the relevant provisions of the Dublin Convention once that Convention came into force. The Dublin Convention came into force on 1 September 1997. Therefore, from that dates in relation to those claiming asylum, the provisions of the Dublin Convention prevail in so far as that Convention determines which State is responsible for deciding the claim.

Figures for illegal entrants returned to France under the 1995 Agreement from June 1997 are not available, but locally collated management statistics from 2001 onwards indicate that, in 2001, 6,828 passengers who arrived at the port of Dover who did not claim asylum and did not qualify for entry to the United Kingdom, were returned to France under the 1995 Agreement. In the first quarter of 2002 that figure was 2,385.

Commonwealth Games (Policing Costs)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out his timetable for deciding whether further special grants will be paid to Greater Manchester Police in respect of the cost of policing the Commonwealth Games. [41411]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 8 March 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 14 May 2002, Official Report, column 603W.

Entitlement Identity Card

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the efficacy of computer technology in matching fingerprints. [72119]

Mr. Denham: With the introduction of the National Automated Fingerprint Identification System (NAFIS), all of the fingerprint bureaux of England and Wales now have the ability to access, store and search national databases of both "ten-prints" from arrestees and marks from scenes of crime. The ability to automate the processing of fingerprints is a huge efficiency gain for the Police Service, where previously this was an extremely labour intensive process.

While the main advantage of NAFIS is speed of search, human expertise is still required. At the forefront of fingerprint detection is the multi-disciplined team of photographers, biologists and chemists who are tasked to enhance the retrieval of fingerprint at crime scenes, and the fingerprint Officers who verify matches and make the identification of marks from scenes of crime.

Response times using NAFIS have meant that arresting officers can now definitively identify persons in custody and associate them with any previous criminal history, in under an hour. Scenes of crime mark searching have equally benefited from the introduction of NAFIS and it is possible for fingerprint bureaux to obtain the responses to searches against the entire National database in under an hour.

Trunk Radio Systems

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the possible health implications of the use of the Terrestrial Trunk Radio Systems within the airwave network; and what reports he studied in order to reach conclusions from his assessment. [23182]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 17 December 2001]: British Telecom operate the Terrestrial Trunk Radio (TETRA) systems that form part of the infrastructure which supports the Airwave network. Network operators in the United Kingdom are obliged by law to ensure that all of their installations are compliant with Health and Safety legislation. This legislation is enacted to ensure that all workers and members of the public are protected, in line with National Radiological Protection Board recommendations. There are no unique features of the TETRA systems used in support of the Airwave network that would require special assessment.

The Home Office takes an active interest in Airwave health and safety issues and is sponsoring a programme of work to address the recommendations of independent scientific experts. These recommendations relate to the mobile radio part of the nextwork, which uses TETRA technology. Details of this work are available on the Home Office website.

Security Industry Authority

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Security Industry Authority will enforce training standards for (a) door supervisors, (b) wheel clampers and (c) other sectors within the security industry. [58172]

Mr. Denham: We expect that training and competency standards for door supervisors and wheel-clampers will be published in April 2003, with those for other sectors following at later dates. Enforcement of those standards will begin with the introduction of personal licensing on a phased basis from late 2003.

Performance Targets

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 4 March 2002, Official Report, column 49W, on performance targets, if he will list the targets set since May 1997, including the new and revised versions of those targets amended; which have been achieved; what the target date is for each target; and if he will make a statement. [44477]

Beverley Hughes: Tables detailing the target set since May 1997 in the 1998 and 2000 spending reviews (SR) respectively have been placed in the Library.

Public Service Agreement Targets were set in the 1998 Comprehensive Spending Review and the 2000 Spending Review. These targets, and performance against them, are published every year in the Home Office annual reports and are available routinely on the Home Office website. Progress made in 2001–02 will be reported to Parliament in this year's Annual Report.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Southern Africa (Food Needs)

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department, in liaison with other donors, is doing to address long-term food security needs in Southern Africa; and if she will make a statement. [69474]

Clare Short: DFID has committed £14 million to help agricultural recovery in the coming maize season in Zambia, Malawi and Zimbabwe. Jointly with other donors, we are providing sector assistance for agriculture in Malawi and Mozambique. We are also supporting work by the Southern Africa Development Community to facilitate analysis and understanding of food security in the region, to improve national capacity for vulnerability assessment, and to reduce contraints to intra-regional trade in food.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Standing Committee on feedingstuffs is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [70572]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that, as from 21 February this year, the Standing Committee for Animal Nutrition, which was responsible forfeedingstuffs, was replaced by the Animal Nutrition Section of the Standing Committee on the Food Chain and Animal Health in accordance with EC Regulation 178/2002. The United Kingdom is normally represented on the Committee by officials from the Food Standards Agency and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate of the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs. The Scottish Executive is kept fully informed and consulted about issues before the Committee, and there is no bar to representatives of the Scottish Executive attending as part of the UK delegation, should the subject matter required this. The Animal Nutrition Section of the Standing Committee is next due to meet on 13 and 14 November 2002.

HEALTH

Mental Health Services

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds in mental healthcare facilities there were in (a) St Helens and Knowsley Health Authority, (b) Merseyside, (c) the North West and (d) England in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997, (iii) 1998, (iv) 1999, (v) 2000 and (vi) 2001; and what the projected amounts are for (1) 2002 and (2) 2003. [71283]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The information requested is not available centrally in the form requested. The table shows the number of National Heath Service mental health beds in the north west region and England for 1996–97 to 2000–01.

The NHS Plan published in July 2000 included extra annual investment of over £300 million by 2003–04 to fast-forward the implementation of the mental health national service framework published in September 1999.

Local services are engaged in the implementation of new service models such as early intervention, assertive outreach and crisis resolution, which aim to provide alternatives to in-patient care.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisation is responsible for the disposal of the remaining NHS mental hospital sites in Epsom. [59090]

Jacqui Smith: NHS Estates, an executive agency of the Department is the accountable body for disposals of land in the Secretary of State for Health's ownership, which has been declared surplus to National Health Service requirements.

The agency therefore has responsibility for the disposal of the remaining hospital sites in the Epsom Cluster namely, Horton, West Park and St Ebba's.

The sale of Horton hospital is expected to be concluded soon.

West Park and St Ebba's have been marketed as part of the one off sale of the Secretary of State for Health's retained estate as provided for in the NHS Plan. However discussions have been opened with the parents and relatives group regarding the possible re-development of St Ebba's as a village community for mental health reprovision.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) mental health nurses, (b) doctors specialising in mental health care there were and what was (i) the estimated shortfall in mental health nurses and (ii) the estimated shortfall in doctors specialising in mental health care in (A) St Helens and Knowsley Health Authority, (B) Merseyside, (C) the North West and (D) England in (1996), (2) 1997, (3) 1998, (4) 1999, (2000) and (6) 2001; and what the projected amounts are for (x) 2002 and (y) 2003. [71284]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The number of nurses working in mental health between 1996 and 2001 is shown in table 1. The estimated need for additional nurses was included in the NHS Plan and manifesto targets for increasing nurse numbers. Both targets have been met ahead of schedule.

The number of doctors working in mental health is shown in table 2. The need for additional consultants in mental health is recognised in the NHS Plan target for 7,500 more consultants by 2004 than there were in 1999. This target has been broken down by strategic health authority (StHA), and indicative requirements for increases by speciality have been included. The indicative increase for consultants working in mental health within Cheshire and Merseyside StHA, which includes St Helens & Knowsley Health Authority, in 2004 will be 23 or 34 per cent.

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet with (a) the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy and (b) local patient groups to discuss the specialist mental health physiotherapy team at Oxleas NHS Trust. [70393]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 July 2002]: I have no plans to meet with the Chartered Society of Physiotherapists or local patient groups to discuss the specialist mental health physiotherapy team at Oxleas National Health Service Trust.

I understand that Oxleas NHS Trust has had discussions on this matter with Bexley, Bromley and Greenwich Community Health Councils and the trust's user council and has also informed other interested parties including primary care trusts, hon. Members and a range of NHS and other non-statutory providers.

Oxleas NHS Trust has also had several meetings with a representative of the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy and are arranging a further meeting with the chief executive of the society to discuss this issue further.

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the role of multidisciplinary services for the treatment of mental health patients; [70388]

(2) if he will make a statement on the role of specialist physiotherapy services in the implementation and delivery of the National Health Service Framework on Mental Health. [70390]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 July 2002]: The national service framework for mental health emphasises the importance of a multi-disciplinary approach to care and treatment. There is good evidence that regular physical activity reduces the risk of depression and has positive benefits for mental health including reduced anxiety, enhanced mood and self-esteem. This is important for people with severe mental illness who may be at particular risk of physical ill health.

However, decisions about the configuration of services are a local matter, in the context of national guidance, following Shifting the Balance of Power. Primary care trusts (PCTs) are responsible for commissioning services for their populations and are accountable to their strategic health authority (StHA) for discharging this function effectively.

With regard to more specialised services that, by their very nature, are provided from relatively few providers, PCTs will increasingly have collaborative commissioning arrangements with other PCTs. This will enable them to pool expertise and ensure sufficient dedicated capacity to develop effective health needs assessments, and plan and secure delivery of services.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 2002, Official Report, column 468W, on mental health, what impact the work referred to has had on recruitment and retention of staff in mental health services. [68293]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 11 July 2002]: As yet, it is too early to say what impact this work will make. But, we will examine the effect of these initiatives in order to assess their impact.

This work will build on the major recruitment we have already seen in mental health services. Between September 1997 and September 2001 there has been an increase of 1,670 whole time equivalent (wte) qualified psychiatric nursing staff, 420 wte psychiatrists, 2,030 wte occupational therapists, 1,040 wte clinical psychologists and 150 wte psychotherapists.

Care Homes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to allow new care homes to be commissioned before a full inspection takes place while there is a backlog of registrations and bed shortages; and if he will make a statement; [72078]

(2) what the average waiting time is between a new care home seeking a registration for the purposes of the care home regulations and an inspection taking place; [72079]

(3) what priority is given to new establishments seeking first registration for the purpose of the care home regulations; and if he will make a statement; [72076]

(4) how many new establishments are awaiting a first registration for the purposes of the care home regulations; and if he will make a statement. [72077]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The National Care Standards Commission is currently processing three types of registration application; (i) applications made under the previous regulatory authority and transferred to the Commission as a part-processed application; (ii) applications made to the Commission since 1 April 2002; and (iii) applications from existing homes previously exempt from registration. The first two categories of application are treated as a priority.

New care homes cannot operate legally unless and until they have completed the registration process to the satisfaction of the Commission, including the filing of appropriate documentation, reference checking, site visits and interviews to confirm the fitness of the home and its managers. The process can take three to four months and ensures the protection of vulnerable adults and children. A home will be inspected twice per year: once during an announced inspection and once during an unannounced inspection. There is no connection between the time a home completes the registration process and is inspected—this will depend on individual area office inspection programmes.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much correspondence his Department has received from (a) care home owners and (b) hon. Members with regard to delays in the vetting of care home staff applications by the Criminal Records Bureau. [71042]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 18 July 2002]: The Department received eight letters concerning delays by the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) in processing applications for criminal records checks. Of these one was from a care home provider and seven were from hon. Members.

Measures are being taken to overcome the early operating difficulties experienced by the CRB, which have led to delays in responding to applications for disclosures. We are determined that the CRB will be in a position as soon as possible to meet the high standards of service that it has made clear it will deliver to its customers. The short-term implications for particular service areas using the CRB service are being closely monitored.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those care standards for care homes which take effect in each year from 2002. [68444]

Jacqui Smith: The national minimum standards for care homes apply from 1 April 2002, unless otherwise stated in any standard. Those standards which have not already come into force or will not apply to provision which existed before 1 April 2002 are as follows:

Care homes for older people

20.1: Will not apply to pre-existing provision until 1 April 2007
21.5: Will not apply to pre-existing provision
23.2: Will not apply to pre-existing provision
23.3: Will not apply to pre-existing provision until 1 April 2007
23.4: Will not apply to pre-existing provision until 1 April 2007
23.10: Will not apply to pre-existing provision
23.11: Will not apply to pre-existing provision until 1 April 2007
25.3: Will not apply to pre-existing provision
27.3: Will not fully apply to pre-existing provision before 1 April 2003, following statutory guidance issues by Ministers
28.1: Applies from 2005
31.2: Applies from 2005

Care homes for younger adults (18-65)

24.3: Will not apply to pre-existing provision until 1 April 2007
24.11: Disability Discrimination Act Part 3 requirements do not apply until 1 April 2004
25.3: Will not apply to pre-existing provision until 1 April 2007
25.5.ii: Applies from 1 April 2004
25.6: Will not apply to pre-existing provision
25.8: Will not apply to pre-existing provision
27.2: Applies from 1 April 2004
27.4: Applies from 1 April 2004
32.6: Applies from 2005
32.7: Applies from 1 April 2005
35.5: Does not apply fully until 2004
37.2.ii: Applies from 2005
37.2.iii: Applies from 2005

Care homes for children

24.6: Does not apply fully until 2003
29.4: Applies from January 2004
29.5: Applies from January 2005
34.3: Does not apply fully until January 2005

However, in the light of continuing concern about the possible impact of certain standards, we believe it is right to look again at those physical environment standards which are the most demanding in terms of changes to the fabric of the home.

A consultation document was issued on 16 August. This covers national standards for care home for both older people and younger adults (18-65). The amendments proposed in the consultation document would change a number of standards so that pre-existing care homes will not be expected to meet higher standards than those they already meet or met on 1 April 2002.

The standards proposed for amendment are as follows:

Care homes for older people

1.2: users' guide
20.1/20.4: communal space
21.3: assisted baths
22.2: passenger lifts
22.5: doorways
23.3/23.4: single room floor space
23.11: single rooms

Care homes for younger adults

1.2: users' guide
24.2: living space
24.9: wheelchair access
25.3: single rooms
25.5: shared bedrooms
27.2/27.4: toilets & bathrooms
28.2: shared space

In addition, as part of the consultation, we will accept views on other standards that relate to environmental issues. In line with Government policy all national standards will be reviewed within three years of their introduction.

Care Costs

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what arrangements his Department has made to ensure that the cost of a state-funded placement does not exceed the total of the NHS registered nurse contribution and social services department personal care and hotel payment; [71201]

(2) how many additional nurses will be required to undertake the registered nursing contribution assessments of state-funded placements in care homes; [71192]

(3) what assessment his Department has made of the changes in fee levels paid by local authority social services departments on the rates paid under each of three bands for nursing contributions. [71198]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 July 2002]: None. Nurses working in the National Health Service will be responsible for carrying out assessments with their local authority partners. It is for all local health and social care economies to plan how they intend to manage this and the ongoing reviews of people's care.

The Department has disseminated some key principles governing the practice of commissioning nursing care in care homes from April 2003. These are on the Department's website at www.doh gov.uk/jointunit and are designed to help smooth the transfer during the introduction of NHS funded nursing care. The Department is continuing to discuss with the provider organisations and with NHS and social services interests the extent to which these might be further refined. Ultimately, this will be a matter for local agreement according to the principles set out in Building Capacity and Partnership in Care, published in October 2001. The substantial additional resources that the Government has put in to social services has enabled local authorities to increase the fees that they pay for care in care homes, by as much as 10 per cent in some places.

Local authorities continue to be responsible for the nursing care of residents that they support. From April 2003, funding responsibility for care from a registered nurse will transfer to the NHS.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out for each year how much of the increase in personal social services funding over the spending periods (a) 1998 to 2002 and (b) 2002 to 2006 is accounted for by an increased allocation for intermediate care. [71194]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 July 2002]: The NHS Plan, July 2000, announced that the development of intermediate care services was to be a Government priority, supported by significant additional investment. Details of the additional funding for intermediate care were given in Health Service Circular 2001/001: Local Government Circular (2001) 01, Intermediate Care, published in January 2001.

Decisions on funding for future years, covered by the Spending Review 2002, 2003–04 to 2005–06, are still being taken. Further details will be announced formally at the time of the local government settlement in the autumn.

Councils can decide how much of the additional funds made available for personal social services in recent years through the standard spending assessment and relevant grants such as the promoting independence grant, carers grant and the building care capacity grant are used for intermediate care. When allocating resources to local councils we aim to leave it to councils to choose how best to allocate these resources taking account of local circumstances and priorities.

Since 1997 we have increased the resources available to social services departments by on average 3 per cent. per annum in real terms; and we will be increasing the level of funding by on average 6 per cent. per annum in real terms over the next three years, 2003–04 to 2005–06.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate his Department has made of the proportion of state-funded residents falling into each of the three nursing contribution bands; [71197]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of state-funded care home residents who will be eligible for a registered nurse contribution assessment from 1 April 2003; [71193]

(3) when assessments of state-funded residents for their entitlement to a nursing contribution (a) commenced and (b) will be completed. [71199]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 July 2002]: At 31 March 2001, there were 71,845 residents of independent nursing homes who were supported by local authorities. From 1 April 2003, a similar number will be jointly supported with National Health Service funding of their care from a registered nurse.

Currently, those who fund their own care have been assessed and approximately 19 per cent. fell in the low band, 58 per cent. in the medium band and 22 per cent. in the high band of nursing needs. Preliminary information from a small survey of 355 residents conducted earlier this year indicates that the nursing needs of supported residents are not dissimilar to these.

Detailed guidance was issued in September 2001 under cover of HSC 2001 17: LAC(2001)26. NHS nurses should have been involved in the assessments of everyone needing registered nursing care since 1 April 2002, including those who need care from a registered nurse in a care home. All health and social care communities should agree the priorities for ensuring that the remainder of assessments and, if appropriate, determinations, are completed. Primary care trusts should assign individuals provisionally to an appropriate band based on the social services care plan and any records of assessment. Trusts and councils will be aiming to have all assessments completed in time for implementation by April 2003.

Hospital Food

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 13 November 2001, Official Report, column 682W, on nutrition (1)(a) how many and (b) which of the six key targets under the Better Hospital Food Programme by (i) region and (ii) health authority will have been fully delivered by the end of (A) December 2001, (B) February 2002 and (C) April 2002; [63043]

(2)(a) how many and (b) which of the key targets under the Better Hospital Food Programme were fully delivered by the end of (i) March and (ii) June 2002 in each (A) region and (B) health authority. [69022]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 11 July 2002]: Details of the numbers of hospitals meeting the key targets of the Better Hospital Food initiative by June 2002 are shown in the table. Figures available for periods prior to June 2002 were based on forecast information from National Health Service trusts. No information about the position at the end of March 2002 was collected.

The better hospital food programme, announced in the NHS Plan and launched in May 2001, is a long-term initiative aimed at improving the quality and availability of food in hospitals. It is backed by the provision of an extra £38.5 million.

The NHS Plan made it clear that the variability in the quality of hospital food across the country is not acceptable. The standards set out in the better hospital food programme are designed to reflect changes in preferences and lifestyles over the past few years, provide patients with better access to meals/drinks and ensure that patients get the help they need through the housekeeper programme.

The NHS has made a great deal of progress with the implementation of the better hospital food programme. Where progress has been made with introducing the programme, patients are already noticing and appreciating the difference. The current position means that each day nearly 100,000 patients can access catering services around the clock; some 55,000 now get two new snacks twice a day and some 60,000 enjoy the new dishes designed by leading chefs.

However we are aware of a number of cases where sufficient progress has not been made, and we have set up teams to work directly with these hospitals to ensure that remedial action is taken.

To assist in this £2.1 million has recently been allocated to a number of NHS trusts and primary care trusts to enable them to further develop house-keeper services and to accelerate the progress already made in improving the range and quality of food services available to patients.

Our plans are for further and sustained improvements to the standard and range of hospital food which will in turn mean that clinical benefits of improved nutrition are also realised with consequential benefits for patients and the NHS as a whole.

Committee Mandates

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the mandate of the EU Scientific Committee on medical products and medical devices is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the United Kingdom representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [63637]

Ms Blears: The mandate of the Scientific Committee on Medicinal Products and Medical Devices is to consider scientific and technical questions relating to Community legislation concerning medicines for human and veterinary use without prejudice to the specific responsibilities of the Committee for Proprietary Medical Products and the Committee on Veterinary Medicinal Products in the context of the evaluation of medicines. The Committee also considers scientific and technical questions relating to Community legislation concerning medical materials and equipment.

The Committee normally meets five times each year. In the last 12 months the Committee met on 1 October 2001, 18 January 2002 and 17 June 2002.

The United Kingdom's representative on the Committee is David Williams, Senior Pro-Vice Chancellor at the Royal Liverpool University Hospital. The European Commission pays the travel expenses for the Committee representatives. The costs to UK public funds are therefore the accommodation costs for the delegate attending meetings. Such costs are not readily available and would incur disproportionate cost to identify.

The Committee considers a wide range of scientific and technical issues relating to medicinal products and medical devices. Subjects raised at the last meeting of the Committee included discussion of an interim report on PVC in medical devices for infants and the effects of Xylitol and other Polyols on Caries development. Agendas for Committee meetings can be accessed on the European Commission's website. A summary of the Committee's discussions is posted to the European Commission's website after each meeting and further details and documents are available from the European Commission on request.

CJD

Mr Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the theoretical risk of human beings contracting new variant CJD as a result of eating sheep and goat meat (a) under current regulatory arrangements and (b) if intestine were added to the list of specified risk material. [64248]

Ms Blears: I am advised by the Foods Standards Agency, that an agency sponsored risk assesment of the theoretical risk of eating sheep meat indicates that, if BSE were present in sheep, current precautionery measures could reduce the risk by very approximately one third. It is also estimated that the addition of intestines to the current list of specified risk material could double the impact of these measures. In June 2002 the Agency recommended to the European Commission that sheep intestine be added to the list of specified risk material as a precautionary measure against the theoretical risk of BSE in sheep. The issue will be considered by the European Scientific Steering Committee who classify sheep and goats together in terms of the potential risk from BSE.

MMR

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been (a) undertaken by his Department and (b) carried out by non departmental public bodies responsible to his Department in the past year on potential health hazards of the use of the MMR vaccine. [63935]

Ms Blears: The Department has not undertaken any research itself, but has funded both the public health laboratory service (PHLS) and national institute for biological standards and control (NIBSC) to undertake research studies on safety issues of the combined, measles, mumps and rubella vaccine.

NIBSC recently completed a study to compare the sensitivities of polymerase chain reaction (PCR) methods used in a number of international laboratories. This study was designed to compare the sensitivities of assays used by NIBSC and others in order to validate their abilities to detect measles ribonucleic acid (RNA) in the tissues of children with inflammatory bowel diseases (IBD) and autism. This work has recently been submitted for publication.

The Department has also provided further funding to extend this work. The new study will bring together a number of clinical units who are providing tissue samples from patients diagnosed with IBD and autistic spectrum diseases. These samples will be tested for measles RNA at NIBSC and will also be sent to different laboratories to compare the sensitivities of the methods used. The results from this study will be published as soon as they are completed.

With Departmental funding, the PHLS have carried out a study that looked for evidence of associations between MMR vaccination, bowel problems and developmental regression in children with autism. They used a data linkage system, established by PHLS, which links clinical notes with independant computerised vaccination records in the former Thames regions. The results have been published in peer reviewed scientific journals (Taylor B, Miller E et al (2002) Measles, mumps and rubella vaccination and bowel problems or developmental regression in children with autism: population study BMJ, 324 393-396). The research group has also looked at a number of other putative adverse events after MMR vaccine using this linkage system: gait disturbance, invasive bacterial infection, aseptic meningitis and purpura.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the MRC will conduct an epidemiological comparison survey one year after the vaccines were administered between (a) children who have had a single antigen vaccine or none at all and (b) with children who have had the MMR vaccine; [66752]

(2) If the MRC will commission a study of children whose parents claim they have been damaged by the MMR vaccine in an attempt to replicate the findings by Dr Wakefield. [66753]

Ms Blears: The Medical Research Council (MRC) does not, as a rule, commission research but welcomes high quality applications for support in any scientific area which will further our understanding of autism and especially those areas which were highlighted in the recent MRC review of autism.

Applications are judged in open competition with other demands on funding. Awards are made according to their scientific quality and importance to human health.

All research on MMR is reviewed by the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation, the Government's independent expert committee.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by his Department since 1 January; and what the (i) cost and (ii) saving has been in each case. [64636]

Mr. Lammy: Between 1 January 2002 and 23 September 2002, the Department introduced 361 statutory instruments. Eighty-one of these were amending statutory instruments.

Information of the cost and saving of each statutory instrument is not collected centrally, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. However, regulatory impact assessments, where produced, are available in the Library.

NHS Direct

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in Morley and Rothwell constituency have used NHS Direct; and what the constituency average in England is. [66806]

Jacqui Smith: NHS Direct West Yorkshire covers 22 constituencies and has handled 488,000 calls since January 2001. During this period, NHS Direct West Yorkshire handled around four thousand calls from people in the Morley and Rothwell constituency.

Throughout England, people living in 534 constituencies have access to NHS Direct services. Since January 2001, NHS Direct has handled over eight million calls from people living in England. The constituency average in England is around 15,000 calls per constituency.

Delayed Discharges

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many delayed discharges there were in (a) Derbyshire and (b) England in the last three months. [67434]

Jacqui Smith: Information from Quarter 4 of 2001–02 on the numbers of delayed discharges, at national and regional level shows that there were 38 delayed discharges in Derbysire, and 5,473 delayed discharges in England.

Learning Disabilities

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients with learning disabilities will leave institutional care in the next three years who will require support in the community from London local authorities; and what additional resources have been identified as being required to meet this future demand. [69169]

Jacqui Smith: In the autumn 2001 position statement, all local authorities were asked to identify the number of patients with learning difficulties currently living in long stay National Health Service hospitals, and their forecast numbers up to 2003–04.

In autumn 2001, there were 179 people identified in London councils living in NHS long stay hospitals. Forecasts show that 40 would leave institutional care in 2001–02, 45 in 2002–03 and 93 in 2003–04.

Health authorities have been funded to care for the people with learning disabilities currently living in the old long stay hospitals. They are expected to work with local authorities in planning the transfer of residents and resources to support them to the community by a mutually agreed date. They should agree with the receiving local authority the care to be provided and any financial arrangements so that current and future responsibility for providing and meeting or contributing to the cost of that care is clear.

One of the five priorities for the use of the revenue element of the learning disability development fund is completing the reprovision of the remaining long-stay hospitals to enable people to move to more appropriate accommodation by April 2004. Of the £20.589 million available in 2002–03, £5.029 million has been allocated to London authorities. It is for them to decide how much of this they wish to spend on enabling people to move out of the long stay hospitals.

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the projected numbers of individuals with learning disabilities requiring residential or living placements (a) for each London borough and (b) for London as a whole for the most recent three years for which figures are available. [69167]

Jacqui Smith: Information on projected numbers of people with learning difficulties requiring, or likely to require, residential or other forms of accommodation are not currently collected by the Department.

The Government's strategy for improving services for people with learning disabilities and their families is set out in the white paper Valuing People: A New Strategy for Learning Disabilities for the 21st Century (Cm 6086) which was published in March 2001. Key to the implementation of the changes outlined in the white paper are learning disability partnership boards which are now established in each local authority area and which include social services departments.

The partnership boards are currently required to complete a housing strategy by the winter of 2002–03. Advice issued to partnership boards suggests that their planning should include projections of future demand, which should entail assessing current and past demand as part of their future projections.

Disabled People

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent meetings he has had with voluntary organisations that give assistance to disabled people to discuss improving services for the disabled. [68180]

Jacqui Smith: I take the Department's Ministerial lead on disability and I have recently met with:

Leonard Cheshire, a charity provider of services for disabled people, on 4 February

The Chartered Society of Physiotherapy on 11 February

The Voluntary Organisations Disability Group (VODG) on 21 March

SENSE, a voluntary organisation working for deafblind people and their families, on 15 April

Additionally, my noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State met with EmPOWER on 18 June to discuss their wheelchair initiative and he also spoke at their conference on 22 April.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State has met recently with Bert Massie, Chairman of the Disability Rights Commission, on 26 June. He also met with the British Lung Foundation and the British Thoracic Society on 5 March to discuss respiratory disease, which includes severe disabling lung disease.

Nurses

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) foreign nurses have been employed and (b) British nurses have refused employment in each health authority in the last year for which figures are available. [69220]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not held centrally.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether verbal summaries of the submissions were given to the sub-group on salt of the Scientific Advisory Committee of the Food Standards Agency. [69980]

Ms Blears: Subgroup members received copies of all the submissions. The subgroup secretariat provided a verbal summary, by way of introduction, as each submission came up for discussion by the subgroup.

Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what measures he is taking to ensure public engagement in the recommendations made by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation; [70254]

(2) if he will publish the agendas of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation in advance; [70252]

(3) what plans he has to hold Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation meetings in public; [70255]

(4) if he will list the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation sub-committees and their members; [70253]

(5) what plans he has to reform the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation; and if he will make a statement; [70248]

(6) what discussions he has had with (a) Patient groups, (b) healthcare professionals, (c) public health consultants and (d) the pharmaceutical industry on the reform of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation; [70251]

(7) what plans he has for public consultation on the process and composition of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation. [70250]

Ms Blears: The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation have recently launched a website (www.doh.gov/jcvi/index.htm) where a list of members, together with their declarations of interest are published.

The Government has no plans to reform the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation but I have asked that the Committee consider publishing the agendas of meetings on the website in advance and also consider having meetings open to the public.

I have just confirmed that a lay member be appointed to the Committee and an announcement about the appointment will be made shortly. The appointment was made in accordance with the Commissioner for Public Appointments' Guidelines on appointments to public bodies.

Dyslexia

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research his Department has undertaken on the causes of (a) ADHD and (b) dyslexia. [70153]

Jacqui Smith: The Department's policy research programme has not commissioned any research on dyslexia and hyperactivity. However the National Health Service research and development programme, under the direction of Sir John Pattison, has commissioned two studies which are now complete; The effects of dietary supplementation with polyunsaturated fatty acids in attention deficit/hyperactivity disorder Professor Harry Zietlin), Eastern Regional Office, July 2000, and Visual, auditory and biochemical function in neuro-developmental disorders: dyslexia, AD/HD and related schizophrenic disorders (Dr. A Richardson), London Regional Office, December 1999.

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department defines dyslexia as (a) a medical and (b) an educational/learning disorder. [70154]

Jacqui Smith: The World Health Organisation ICD-10 classification of mental and behavioural disorders in children and adolescents lists developmental dyslexia under the heading 'specific reading disorder' and is further classified under 'specific disorders of psychological development' and not under 'medical conditions'. We do not regard dyslexia as a medical condition but a specific disorder of psychological development.

Learning difficulties such as dyslexia fall within the scope of the Special Educational Needs Code of Practice, published by the Department for Education and Skills in November 2001.

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Department is taking to treat diagnosed (a) children and (b) adults with (i) ADHD and (ii) dyslexia. [70152]

Jacqui Smith: Attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) is mainly a condition of childhood which can continue into later life. The assessment and treatment of ADHD is usually undertaken by child psychiatrists often with the help and contribution of other members of multidisciplinary child mental health services. However, it is becoming increasingly common for paediatricians to diagnose and manage ADHD. It is recommended that interventions should be focused on the behaviour of the child; family interactions, classroom problems and learning difficulties should also be offered. Even children diagnosed as having hyperkinetic disorder, which is the more severe and specific end of the spectrum, where the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has recommended the use of methylphenidate, a treatment programme should not usually rely on medication alone.

Learning difficulties such as dyslexia fall within the scope of the Special Educational Needs Code of Practice, published by the Department for Education and Skills in November 2001.

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been diagnosed with (a) ADHD and (b) dyslexia. [70151]

Jacqui Smith: Information is not collected in the form requested. However a survey of the mental health of children and adolescents in Great Britain by the Office of National Statistics for the Department of Health, published in 2000, found the prevalence of hyperkinetic disorders which includes attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) as being 1.5 per cent. of children in England aged 10-15.

It also examined the prevalence of specific learning difficulties in children with a mental disorder and vice versa. The survey defined specific learning difficulty as the failure to achieve academic progress in reading (therefore including dyslexia) and spelling despite conventional instruction, adequate intelligence and sociocultural opportunity.

Children with a mental disorder were found three times more likely than those with no disorder to have a specific learning difficulty: 12 per cent. compared with 4 per cent. However there was little difference in the proportions of children with specific learning difficulty by type of disorder for example emotional disorder, conduct disorder, ADHD and less common disorders.

Devolution

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the EU Advisory Committee on cancer prevention is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [70574]

Ms Blears: I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave him on Thursday 19 September 2002, Official Report, vol. 390, col. 361-62W.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the EU Committee on the action programme on rare diseases in the framework of the action plan for public health is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [70595]

Ms Blears: The next meeting of the EU Committee for the Community Action Programme on Rare Diseases is expected to take place in the autumn of 2002. The Department has lead responsibility for representing the United Kingdom at meetings of this Committee. It consults the Devolved Administrations to ensure that points made represent all parts of the United Kingdom, including the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the EU Pharmaceutical Committee is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [70601]

Mr. Lammy: The Pharmaceutical Committee usually meets in plenary at least twice a year and is next due to meet on 13 November 2002. An ad hoc "Information to Patients" stakeholders meeting took place on 24 September 2002 and a special meeting of the Pharmaceutical Committee was convened for 2 October to discuss the derogation clauses for parallel imports in the future Accession Treaties. The United Kingdom is represented jointly on the European Pharmaceutical Committee by two senior public health officials from the Medicines Control Agency and from the Department. Medicines control, with the exception of responsibility for enforcement of the Medicines Act 1968 and related legislation, has not been devolved. The UK members of the Pharmaceutical Committee represent UK-wide interests on the Committee and work in co-operation with the Scottish Executive and other Devolved Administrations as required.

European Cities Against Drugs

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason no city in Scotland was nominated for membership of European Cities Against Drugs. [70896]

Ms Blears: Neither the United Kingdom Government nor the Scottish Executive is linked to the European cities against drugs movement, and no UK cities have been nominated for membership. The Government believes that there is a place for appropriate harm minimisation measures, in particular to reduce the rising number of drug-related deaths, as part of the overall national drugs strategy. Harm minimisation measures are opposed by the European cities against drugs movement.

Area-based Initiatives

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each area-based initiative for which his Department is responsible the amount originally budgeted for in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02, stating in each year what funds budgeted for were not spent and if they were carried forward. [71461]

Ms Blears: The Health Action Zone (HAZ) initiative is the only Department sponsored area based initiative.

In 2000–01 the funding allocated to HAZs amounted to £120 million. Added to this was £30 million carried forward from 1999–02 making a total of £150 million available to the HAZs. This sum was underspent by £3.3 million which was carried forward into 2001-02.

In 2001-02 the funding allocated to HAZs amounted to £61 million. Added to this was £3.3 million carried forward from 2000–01, making a total £64.3 million available to the HAZs. This sum was underspent by £134,000 which was carried forward into 2002–03.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes are taking place in audiology services to support the introduction of digital hearing aids. [71760]

Jacqui Smith: The modernising hearing aid services project is introducing not just digital hearing aids but modern and improved service provision.

In addition to the 20 pilot sites involved in the project an additional 30 new sites are joining the project this financial year. The project management team works with each site to prepare it for the move to a modernised service.

Sites must have the appropriate infrastructure, information technology equipment and trained staff, before they can fit digital hearing aids. Digital hearing aids require different service delivery models because they incorporate information technology based assessment and fitting procedures.

Know-How Campaign

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to extend the Sun Know-How campaign. [71656]

Ms Blears: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend for Walsall South (Mr. Bruce George) on Tuesday 16 July 2002, Official Report, vol. 389, col. 210W.

Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authorities

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the incidence was per 1,000 population of (a) under-16 pregnancies, (b) 16 to 18 years old pregnancies, (c) under 16s having abortions and (d) 16 to 18 years olds have abortions in (i) the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority, (ii) Hampshire and (iii) the South East in each year since 1996; and if he will make a statement. [72030]

Ms Blears: Data on teenage pregnancy is usually presented as rates for under 16 year olds and under 18 year olds. These are also the ages to which targets in the Government's teenage pregnancy strategy relate. The data for these age ranges, and for the areas and years requested, are shown in the tables. Figures for 2001 will not be available until February 2003. The data have been provided by the Office for National Statistics.

Under 16 conceptions and abortions: rate per 1,000 women aged 13–15 by area of usual residence[1], 1996–2000

[1] Boundaries as at 1 April 2001.
[2] Figures for 2000 are provisional.
[3] All figures relate to boundaries at 1 April 2001. Based on these boundaries, Hampshire County excludes Isle of Wight Unitary Authority (formed in 1995), Portsmouth Unitary Authority (formed in 1997) and Southampton Unitary Authority (formed in 1997). Hampshire County therefore comprises the following local authorities: Basingstoke and Deane, East Hampshire, Eastleigh, Gosport, Hart, Havant, New Forest, Rushmoor, Test Valley and Winchester.

A comprehensive, cross-Goverment teenage pregnancy strategy was launched by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister in 1999. This sets a target to halve the under 18 conception rate by 2010 and aims to increase the participation of teenage parents in education and training to reduce their long term risk of social exclusion. Early signs of the strategy's impact are encouraging with figures for 2000 showing a 6 per cent. reduction from 1998 in both under 18 and under 16 conception rates.

The reduction in the under 18 conception rate for the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and South East Hampshire area exceeds the national figure with a decline from 1998 of 14 per cent.

Teenage Pregnancy

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on the advice given by general practitioners to pregnant under-16s; and if he will make a statement. [72239]

Ms Blears: The Government's teenage pregnancy strategy recognises the importance of helping young people resist pressure to have early sex while seeking to ensure that those who are sexually active have easy access to high quality advice on contraception, sexual health and pregnancy. General practitioners (GPs) have a key role to play in providing this advice.

Best Practice Guidance on the Provision of Effective Contraception and Advice Services was issued in 2000, setting out the criteria against which services should be commissioned and provided. All GPs are expected to work to the principles of the guidance. These are that services should encourage early uptake of pregnancy testing, provide non-judgmental advice, referral to antenatal care when appropriate or, where abortion is the agreed option, quick referral to National Health Service abortion services.

GPs who hold a conscientious objection to abortion should make their views known to the patient and enable them to see another doctor without delay, if that is their wish. However, even a GP who conscentiously objects should still give advice to patients and perform the preparatory steps to arrange an abortion, where the request meets the legal requirements.

The legal framework for young people under 16 to consent to treatment, including abortion, was set out in the House of Lords ruling in 1985 in the case of Gillick v West Norfolk and Wisbech Health Authority and the Department of Health and Social Security.

A young person under 16 can consent treatment without parental involvement providing the health professional is satisfied that they are competent to understand fully the implications of any treatment and to make a choice of the treatment proposed.The health professional must establish that a number of different criteria are met, including that the young person cannot be persuaded to tell their parents, or to allow the doctor to do so; they are very likely to begin or continue having intercourse with or without contraceptive treatment; and that the young person's best interests require the health professional to give contraceptive advice, treatment or both without parental consent.

Second Opinion Appointed Doctors

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish (a) the criteria for the appointment of doctors as second opinion appointed doctors under the Mental Health Act 1983 and (b) the appointment procedure for these positions. [72134]

Jacqui Smith: In order to be eligible for appointment to the second opinion appointed doctor's panel, doctors must meet the following criteria:

General Medical Council registered
Member of the Royal College of Psychiatrists or equivalent qualification recognised by the Royal College of Psychiatrists
Registered on the Royal College of Psychiatrists Continuing Professional Development Programme
Consultant status in psychiatry for at least five years
Evidence of mental health practice in the last two years
Two good references from practising consultant psychiatrists who have worked with the applicant within the last two years
Availability to work at a minimum of 10 different locations
Currently practising
Age limit-below 65 years

The procedure for appointment is summarised as follows: interested doctors are asked to submit an application, curriculum vitae and two references, which are scrutinised by a panel comprising three persons, usually Commissioners, at least one being a consultant psychiatrist.

This panel makes draft proposals on appointments, which are referred to the Commission's executive management team and then the board for consideration and final ratification.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) dates, (b) locations and (c) sources were of attributable (i) articles, interviews or contributions for the media, books or other journals and (ii) speeches or presentations made in the public domain, by departmental special advisers since March 2001; who in his Department authorised the activity; and on what date this activity was recorded with the departmental Head of Information. [72247]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister on Wednesday 24 July 2002, Official Report, vol. 389, col. 1373W.

National Care Standards Commission

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who the members are of the National Care Standards Commission; and what recent statements they have made about the quality of services regulated under Part II of the Care Standards Act. [72302]

Jacqui Smith: The National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) became fully operational and took up its regulatory responsibilities on 1 April 2002.

The Chair of the NCSC Board, Ms Anne Parker OBE, was formerly chair of the Carers National Association. In addition, there are a further 14 non-executive board members. These are:

Ms Roslyn Emblin
Mr. Michael Hake
Mr. Bryan Heiser
Baroness Valerie Howarth, OBE
Mr. Simon Kirk
Professor Jim Mansell
Mr. Derek Mead
Mr. Shaukat Moledina
Professor Howard Parker
Ms Susan Sayer, OBE
Ms Lucianne Sawyer
Professor John Spiers
Mr. Glynn Vernon
Mr. Peter Westland, CBE

Further information about the board members, including a register of their interests, is available on the Commission's website.

I am unaware of any specific statements made recently by any board member regarding the quality of services regulated under Part II of the Care Standards Act 2000.

Minimum Wage

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of employees working within the NHS earn (a) the development rate national minimum wage for workers aged 18 to 21 inclusive, (b) the national minimum wage for workers aged 22 and over, (c) between the national minimum wage and £4.50 per hour, (d) between £4.50 and

£4.80 per hour, (e) between £4.80 and £5 per hour and (f) less than £5 per hour; and if he will make a statement. [72653]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the table.

The Government are committed to tackling low pay in the National Health Service—this year extra resources were targeted to give proportionally more pay to the lowest paid NHS staff, giving a new minimum hourly rate in the NHS of £4.47 from April 2002 for staff on national conditions of service.

Children's Food

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress the Food Standard Agency has made in drawing up a code of practice on the marketing of foods to and for children. [73412]

Ms Blears: The Food Standards Agency has met with consumers, enforcement authorities, public interest groups and industry on a number of occasions to try to establish consensus on elements of best practice that would facilitate development of guidance on the promotion of foods to children. However, the Agency has decided to carry out some further research before taking the discussions further.

The Agency has already published, in November 2001, the results of an independent study into parents' and children's attitudes to promotional activity. The next step, this autumn, will be to commission an extensive review of research into the effects of promotional activity on the eating behaviour of children. The Agency expects to publish the results of this review next year and will then restart discussions with stakeholders.

Alternative Medicine

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent initiatives he has taken to make wider use of complementary and alternative medicines and treatments and practitioners in the Health Service. [73498]

Ms Blears: The Department is committed to a National Health Service which is run by its front-line professionals. Decisions on provision of complementary and alternative medicine (CAM) will therefore be made by local NHS staff, taking into account the needs of patients, the evidence base, and the effectiveness of regulation of those who provide CAM.

We are co-funding a two-year collaborative project led by Westminster University to identify and develop good practice in the clinical governance of CAM within primary care. The project is being carried out in partnership with the Prince of Wales' Foundation for Integrated Health, which is running a parallel project to identify good practice in the use of CAM in a range of primary care trusts.

To help improve the evidence base we have included CAM in our programme to strengthen research capacity, and bids from academic institutions to host research in this field are currently being considered. We also recently issued a call for research proposals on the role of CAM in the care of cancer patients.

Musgrove Park Hospital

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of improvements in service at Musgrove Park hospital, Taunton since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [73270]

Ms Blears: Since 1997, Government initiatives to improve the performance of the National Health Service have resulted in significant developments in the quality of services provided to local people by Taunton & Somerset NHS Trust, which has responsibility for Taunton & Somerset Hospital, Musgrove Park. In 1997, 88 per cent. of inpatients were seen within 10 months, that has since increased to 92 per cent., in 1997–98 the number of patients seen and treated was 63,000 and in 2001–02 that increased to 73,000. There are now no outpatients waiting longer than 26 weeks for a first appointment. We have also recently announced an allocation of £2.3 million to further reduce waiting times. By March 2003 there will be no patients waiting in excess of nine months for inpatient treatment and 13 weeks for an outpatient appointment.

In addition since 1997 new services have been introduced bringing considerable benefits for patients. These include a breast care unit, an admissions unit, a magnetic resonance imaging scanner. Capital investment schemes in 2001–02 include a new cardiac catherisation laboratory, a third ophthalmic theatre, and an orthopaedic theatre and ward.

NHS IT Procurement

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the OJEC advertisements were placed for the south-west regional procurement process for NHS IT. [73122]

Ms Blears: The advertisement for the south-west regional information technology procurement was placed in February 2000.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the south-west regional procurement process for NHS IT was initiated. [73123]

Ms Blears: The formal initiation of the south-west procurement project took place in December 1999.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what independent evaluation has been made of the single procurement process for electronic patient record systems for NHS trusts in the south-west; and if he will make a statement. [73124]

Ms Blears: In early 2002 a review of the south-west project was carried out by a team from the National Health Service information authority. The review used the approach recommended by the Office of Government Commerce in its gateway review process.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trusts in the south-west have signed contracts with a minimum value of £1 million for hospital-wide electronic patient record systems through the south-west regional procurement process for NHS IT; and how many contracts of this minimum value are expected to be signed in the next three months. [73125]

Ms Blears: No trust involved in the south-west regional procurement has yet signed a contract for hospital-wide electronic patients' record systems. It is expected that the two consortia in the regional procurement process will award contracts by March 2003. At this point, over 20 trusts will sign contracts in excess of £1 million.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of financial savings that have been achieved since the commencement of the single procurement process for NHS IT in the south-west; and what his next estimate is of future savings for the currrent and five financial years. [73128]

Ms Blears: The south-west project estimates that the savings gained through the shared procurement process will be excess of £1 million. At this stage it is too early to estimate the savings in the resulting contracts, but it is anticipated that these savings will be significant.

Genetically Modified DNA

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health with reference to the research findings published by the Food Standards Agency on the transfer of GM DNA from food to bacteria in the human gut, (a) what level of GM DNA was present in the commercial samples fed to participants in the research, (b) what proportion of the GM DNA was complete rather than in fragments, (c) to what extent the research looked at whether GM DNA passed through the gut and into the blood stream and blood cells, (d) what reference was made to the experiment on mice, post 1997, documenting the ability of GM DNA to pass through the gut wall into the bloodstream, the liver and spleen and (e) which scientific experts concluded from this research that humans were not at risk. [73190]

Ms Blears: $3x10^{12}$ copies of the transgene were present in the 454g commercial sample fed to the participants. Survival of the genetically modified (GM) deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) was variable. $4.2x10^{7}$ and $2.7x10^{8}$ copies of the full-length fragment was detected in the digesta from two of the seven ileostomy patients. Nevertheless, intact DNA was not shown to be transferred to intestinal tract bacteria. The aim of the research, which has been peer reviewed, was to study the fate of ingested DNA in the gastrointestinal tract. Transfer of GM DNA into the bloodstream did not fall within the scope of the project. Scientists carrying out the work have drawn their own independent conclusions on the results. The broad implications of the studies on gene transfer will be discussed at an open meeting of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes in November.

Biotechnology Research Projects

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what biotechnology research projects in (a) agriculture and (b) biomedics have been supported by the Department; and what level of public investment has gone into them in each of the last three years. [73240]

Ms Blears: The Department has no responsibility for agriculture. The main Government agency for biotechnology research is the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, and the main Government agency for biomedical research is the Medical Research Council. Both are funded by the Department of Trade and Industry via the Office of Science and Technology, and information about their work can be seen at their websites, which are www.bbsrc.ac.uk and www.mrc.ac.uk respectively.

NHS Plan (Newcastle)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 May 2002, Official Report, column 262W, on the NHS Plan (Newcastle), what requests were received from each source for intermediate care funding in the Northern and Yorkshire Region; how much they were for; which were (a) approved and (b) rejected; and what share of the national allocation was granted to the Northern and Yorkshire Region. [56621]

Jacqui Smith [holding Answer 15 May 2002]: The Northern and Yorkshire Region received 27 bids for intermediate care capital funding. The following schemes were successful in the first phase:

Leeds Health Authority
Selby and York Primary Care Trust
Darlington Primary Care Trust
North Durham Health Care National Health Service Trust
Carlisle and District Primary Care Trust
Gateshead Primary Care Trust
Hartlepool Primary Care Trust
Sunderland Teaching Primary Care Trust
North Tyneside Primary Care Trust
Middlesbrough and Eston Primary Care Trust
Wakefield West Primary Care Trust

The following schemes were unsuccessful in the first phase:

Airedale Primary Care Trust
Bradford City Primary Care Trust
North Bradford Primary Care Trust
Calderdale Primary Care Trust (2 bids)
Eastern Hull Primary Care Trust (2 bids)
Eastern Wakefield Primary Care Trust
Harrogate area
Huddersfield Central Primary Care Trust (2 bids)
Newcastle Integrated Older People Service
Newcastle Social Services
North Tees Primary Care Trust
South Tyneside Primary Care Trust
Scarborough area

I announced the allocation of the first phase of £46 million to 80 projects on 6 March 2002. To date a total of £58 million has been allocated to intermediate care capital to 90 projects. Of the £58 million allocated, the Northern and Yorkshire Region received £7.75 million, which is 13.4 per cent. of the total amount. It may be possible to fund further bids from the Northern and Yorkshire region as part of a further phase of funding yet to be allocated.

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire of 9 May 2002, Official Report, column 346W, how many occupational therapists were in post in each health authority at March 2001 per head of population. [56632]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 16 May 2002]: Between 1997 and 2001 the number of occupational therapists employed in the National Health Service increased by 2,390 or 20 per cent. Further increases in the NHS Plan period and beyond will help to improve the ratio of occupational therapists per head of population. Our latest projections, based on numbers expected to come out of training, and trends in retirements, occupational therapists working outside the NHS and other factors remaining broadly the same, suggest that there will be over 21,000 occupational therapists working in the NHS by 2009.

Workforce information is collected annually as at 30 September. The number of occupational therapists per head of population by health authority as at 30 September 2001 is shown in the table.

Law Enforcement Agencies

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what law enforcement agencies and prosecuting authorities designated with legislation there are within the responsibility of his Department; and what complaints procedure is available for each. [57105]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 16 May 2002]: There are no prosecuting authorities nor law enforcement agencies designated by law for which the Secretary of State for Health is responsible.

The Solicitor's Office, Department of Health, prosecutes cases investigated by the directorate of counter fraud services, and its National Health Service equivalent the NHS counter fraud services, the medicines control agency and the medical devices agency. The investigators and prosecutors all derive their powers to act for and on behalf of the Secretary of State who is granted general functions by means of statutory powers.

Consequently the investigators and prosecutors are not separately designated by law because they derive their powers from legislation and functions granted to the Secretary of State.

Mobile Telephone Masts

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect on medical devices of the presence nearby of mobile phone masts. [64153]

Ms Blears [holding answer 24 June 2002]: The Medical Devices Agency have not received any reports of telecommunications masts or base stations (similar to masts but located on building rooftops) causing interference to medical devices. We have undertaken work to assess the possible risk from these installations, the most recent being last March where in collaboration with a National Health Service trust and British Telecom measurements were taken on a proposed rooftop installation for the current cellular network. The results indicated that the field strength had dropped to virtually undetectable levels at distances greater than 25 metres from the antenna and that the risk to medical devices being used in adjacent buildings was negligible.

Previous measurement results obtained in other hospitals are listed in the Device Bulletin DB9702, March 1997.

Community Equipment Service

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress with establishing the community equipment service and its financing. [64293]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 27 June 2002]: There are many long-established community equipment services in England run by councils and National Health Service trusts. The initiative to integate these services at a local level by 2004 and to increase the number of people benfiting from them by 50 per cent. by the same date is progressing. Additional funding to enable equipment services meet the NHS Plan targets has been made available to the NHS and to social services through their baseline allocations between the years 2001–02 and 2003–04. This work is supported by the national integrating community equipment services team, the members of which work with local itegratration lead officers and who are a source of good practice guidance.

NHS Maternity Units

Mr. Wiltshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list NHS maternity units in descending order of (a) the ratio of midwives in post to the total number of births and (b) the ratio of the full complement of midwives to the total number of births in 2001. [67458]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 5 July 2002]: The figures are shown in the table in descending order and they represent for each trust the ratio of midwives in post and complement in September 2000 to deliveries in 2000-01 in that trust. Women who are cared for during pregnancy by midwives from one trust may later give birth in a unit in another trust. Relevant information is only available by trusts rather than units.

Notes:
[1] Establishment midwife figures are the sum of the staff in posts figures as at 30 September 2000 and the 3 month vacancy figures as at 31 March 2001 so will not necessarily give an accurate reflection of the actual establishment.
[2] Headcount establishment figures are the sum in post headcount and the 3 month vacancies whole-time equivalents, headcount vacancy figures are unavailable.
[3] Deliveries at Royal London (RNJ) are attended by midwives employed by Tower Hamlets (RRG) and have therefore been excluded.
[4] Figures are rounded to three decimal places.
[5] Due to rounding totals may not equal the sum of component parts.
[6] Figures exclude learners and agency staff.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list NHS maternity units in descending order of the percentage of Caesarean deliveries in 2001. [67460]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 5 July 2002]: The table showing the percentage of deliveries by caesarean section by trust in descending order fo2000 to 2001, taken from the data published in the National Health Service Maternity Statistics, England Bulletin 2002/11 published in April 2002 has been placed in the Library.

NHS Direct

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases have been dealt with by NHS Direct; how many calls have been abandoned; how many call centres are operational, and where they are; what the runnings costs are of each call centre; and if he will make a statement. [72499]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Since its launch in March 1998, NHS Direct has handled 13 million calls. Approximately 7 per cent. of calls made to NHS Direct are abandoned without the caller speaking to a nurse.

There are 22 call centres in operation throughout England. Where they are located and the running costs for each site is outlined in the table.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 20 November 2001, Official Report, column 255W, what progress has been made in setting up the NHS Direct performance management framework; and if he will make a statement. [72600]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The first version of the NHS direct performance framework was launched in March 2002. The framework is based on the principle of continuous quality improvement and outlines responsibilities and tools for service delivery and the monitoring of performance and improvement at all levels of the organisation—from the individual to the national service. The framework also outlines a set of key performance targets for NHS Direct, areas for the development of clinical indicators and areas for the development of internal management measures.

Sausage Casings

Mr. Liddington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Natural Sausage Casings Association was first consulted by the Food Standards Agency about its proposed ban on the use of sheep intestines in food. [68501]

Ms Blears [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The Food Standards Agency advise me that the Natural Sausage Casings Association (NSCA) was one of around 1,000 interested parties consulted on the report of the core stakeholder group on BSE and sheep, on 23 May this year. This report, which suggested that the Agency should recommend to the European Commission that intestine from all sheep be added to the current list of specified risk material, was made to the Agency's Board who considered it at their meeting on 13 June. The full detailed response of the NCSA and of their representatives, together with a summary of all the other responses to the consultation was made available to the Board.

Eating Disorders

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his written answer of 13 February 2002, Official Report, column 486W, whether the figures for finished consultant episodes with a primary diagnosis of eating disorder for 2000–01 have been adjusted for shortfalls in data; and if he will make a statement. [68296]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 11 July 2002:] Pursuant to the written answer of 13 February 2002, Official Report, column 486W, the figures for finished consultant episodes with a primary diagnosis of eating disorder for 2000–01 have now been adjusted for the shortfalls.

There were 1973 finished consultant episodes in National Health Service hospitals with a primary diagnosis of eating disorder in 2000–01. This figure does not represent all people with an eating disorder, as many do not require admission to hospital.

Nursing Home Personnel (Information Searches)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason (a) the DfES, (b) his Department and (c) other relevant information records are searched in addition to the Criminal Records Bureau's under the care standards regulations for checking nursing home owners and managers. [69408]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 17 July 2002]: Care homes look after some of the most vulnerable people in our society. In the past there have been far too many instances of abuse and neglect in care homes. We believe it is vitally important to ensure that the proprietors and managers of these homes are of good character and able to discharge their responsibilities fully.

The Care Homes Regulations 2001 require a criminal records check through the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) for care home owners, managers and staff. As part of its checks the CRB will automatically check the Protection of Children Act register, and the Protection of Vulnerable Adults register once this becomes operational.

People who are unsuitable to work with children and vulnerable adults will not necessarily have committed a criminal offence. Regulations 7, 9 and 19 of the Care Homes Regulations 2001 require that registered providers, manager and staff must be fit people. It is, therefore, necessary for a range of records to be checked in order to ensure the fitness of care home owners and managers and to ensure that care home residents are properly looked after and that they are protected from abuse or neglect.

NHS Leadership Centre

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the cost has been in severance pay and other related costs arising out of the decision of the former Director of the NHS Leadership Centre to step down from her post in December 2001; [71075]

(2) whether the former Director of the NHS Leadership Centre is working in an executive capacity in (a) the NHS and (b) his Department. [71076]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 July 2002]: The individual concerned was employed by Royal United Hospitals Bath National Health Service Trust. Her secondment to the Department was terminated on 2 May 2002. Her contract of employment with the NHS trust was terminated on the 22 August 2002. She received no severance payment in connection with her decision to stand down from her position as head of the leadership centre nor in connection with the termination of her contract of employment.

Family Doctors

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the amount of general practitioner hours which could be freed up by cutting the amount of paperwork required of family doctors. [71153]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 18 July 2002]: The Department has worked with the Cabinet Office public sector team to achieve the outcomes contained in the joint reports Making a difference: reducing general practitioner (GP) paperwork I and II published in March 2001 and June 2002.

Estimates, based on advice from practising general practitioners (GPs), suggest that if all the outcomes of these two reports are fully implemented the potential annual savings will amount to 10.3 million GP appointments freed, 3.4 additonal hours saved and up to 80,000 additional requests for medical information removed.

Parliamentary Questions

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to Question 59418 from the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham. [71040]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on Wednesday 24 July 2002, Official Report, vol. 389, col. 1423–24W.

Inappropriate Medication

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 July 2002, Official Report, column 1037W, on inappropriate medication, how many people died from (a) suffering adverse reactions and (b) being prescribed inappropriate medication in each (i) health authority and (ii) region in each of the last five years. [71946]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Reports of suspected adverse drug reactions (ADRs) to medicines are collected by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) and the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) through the spontaneous reporting scheme, the yellow card scheme. There are approximately 20,000 reports of ADRs reported to the MCA and CSM through the yellow card scheme each year, of which approximately 3 per cent. report a fatal suspected ADR.

There are four regional monitoring centres (RMCs) that act locally on behalf of the CSM to collect reports of ADRs and to stimulate ADR reporting through local initiatives. These are CSM Mersey, CSM Wales, CSM Northern and CSM West Midlands. The table shows the total number of suspected ADR reports and reports with a fatal outcome received via the Yellow Card Scheme from 1997 to 2001. It includes the number of suspected ADR reports and reports with a fatal outcome received in each of the RMCs. A breakdown of ADR data by health authority is not available. Data from the yellow card scheme cannot be used to measure the frequency of an ADR in a particular region or health authority as ADR reporting is associated with an unknown and a variable degree of under reporting.

It is important to note that submission of a suspected ADR report does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the drug. Many factors have to be taken into account in assessing causal relationships including temporal association, the possible contribution of concomitant medication and the underlying disease.

Separate figures are not available on adverse reactions resulting from patients being prescribed inappropriate medication.

Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the financial allocation to the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority has been made on the basis of the combined allocation of its two predecessor health authorities in each year since its creation; and what those levels were; [71891]

(2) what progress he has made in working with IW Stakeholders to recognise island factors in the process of financial allocations for local health services. [71892]

Ms Blears [holding answer 22 July 2002]: The issue of any additional costs associated with being an island was considered by the advisory committee on resources action (ACRA) in September 2002. ACRA concluded that the arguments presented in a local consultancy report on behalf of Isle of Wight health bodies did not constitute a convincing case. It recommended that there should be no adjustment to the Isle of Wight's target under the resource allocation formula. Ministers accepted ACRA's recommendation.

The initial allocations for 2001-02 were made on an aggregated basis of the two former health authorities. The 2002-03 allocation was made on a combined population of the merged authority. These figures are shown in the table.

Isle of Wight HA, Portsmouth & South East Hampshire HA and Isle of Wight, Portsmouth & South East Hampshire HA allocations 2001-02 and 2002-03

Health Authority	2001–02	2002–03
Isle of Wight HA	£108,678,000	—
Portsmouth & South East Hants HA	£397,591,000	—
Isle of Wight, Portsmouth & South East Hants HA	—	£561,429,000

From 2003-04 the intention is that allocations will be made directly to primary care trusts.

Local Consultations

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information and guidance he issues to strategic health authorities, NHS trusts and primary care trusts about involving the public in Local Consultations on the provision of health care and social services; and what plans he has to develop this. [72192]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 23 July 2002]: Section 11 of the Health and Social Care Act 2001 places a duty on National Health Service Trusts, Primary Care Trusts (PCTs) and Strategic Health Authorities (StHAs) to make arrangements to involve and consult patients and the public in planning of service provision, involvement in the development of proposals for changes and involvement in decisions about changes to the operation of services.

Currently, work is in progress to develop guidance to support NHS organisations deliver this new requirement. The draft guidance is being developed and overseen by a reference group including representatives from: the local government association, the NHS confederation, Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales (ACHCEW), the society of community health councils staff, cancer link, Wolverhampton CVS, NHS leadership centre, directorates of health and social care, NHS Estates, general practitioners, PCTs and StHAs. In addition, many NHS organisations have contributed to the development of the draft document by providing examples of good practice and commenting on a recent draft version—to ensure that the final document enables effective policy development and a range of involvement strategies.

We also intend one of the key initial NHS demonstrators for fulfilling section 11 requirements will be for all NHS organisations to be signed up to, and working within, a geographically relevant local compact. The voluntary and community sector also have a key role to play in working with their local NHS organisations to enable as many people as possible to become involved in local NHS decision making processes to help ensure that patient and the public are at the centre of NHS decision making.

EU Scientific Committee on Veterinary Measures

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the mandate of the EU Scientific Committee on veterinary measures relating to public health is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the United Kingdom representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [63639]

Ms Blears: The mandate for the Scientific Committee on Veterinary Measures relating to Public Health is to answer scientific and technical questions, posed to it by the European Commission, concerning consumer health and food safety, and relating zoonotic, toxicological, veterinary and notably hygiene measures applicable to the production, processing, and supply of food of animal origin.

The committee has met five times in the last 12 months. It is composed of independent experts, one of whom is British.

The committee is accountable solely to the European Commission, which pays the travel and subsistence costs. There are no additional costs to United Kingdom public funds. The minutes of its meetings and the opinions it produces are posted on the Commission's web site.

Acute Hospitals

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what services are included in the definition of core services with respect to an acute hospital in the NHS. [57295]

Mr. Hutton: There is no national definition of core services with respect to an acute hospital in the National Health Service. Each local service will reach agreement on where services can best be provided, and any substantial variation in services must be the subject of full public consultation.

Non-NHS Hospitals

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the usage of private, non-NHS hospitals by PCTS. [64338]

Mr. Hutton: In October 2001, the Department carried out a survey of the use of the independent sector for acute elective care between April and September 2001 by National Health Service organisations, including primary care trusts. A poor response rate means that the survey results are not reliable. A further survey to obtain information about the second half of 2001–02 is currently in progress.

Mixed Sex Wards

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 624W, on mixed sex wards, what information he collates on the amount of mixed sex accommodation in the NHS; what information has been collated since 1997; and if he will place such information in the Library. [68770]

Mr. Hutton: Since 1997, it has been a requirement for trusts to report annually to health authorities on forecast compliance status of the overall trust as at December 2002. Each trust measures their progress with compliance against the three objectives as stated in my previous answer.

Trusts are free to publicise their position.

East Lancashire NHS Trust

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce the decision on whether to establish a new NHS trust in East Lancashire following the consultation on hospital trusts merger. [69159]

Jacqui Smith: The proposal to establish the new trust in East Lancashire was approved on 29 July. The new organisation will be known as the East Lancashire Hospitals National Health Service Trust and will assume formal responsibility for services currently provided by the NHS trusts in Blackburn and Burnley with effect from 1 April 2003.

Local hon. Members were informed of this decision and I also wrote to my hon. Friend on 7 September following his letter to me dated 1 July on the same subject.

Vaccination Programme

Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the Government have spent on the vaccination programme in each year since 1972. [69236]

Ms Blears: The information is not collected in the format requested. To provide a detailed response would incur disproportionate costs.

NHS Executive

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff were employed in the NHS Executive at 1 April; and what proportion of those staff have clinical contact with NHS patients. [69702]

Mr. Lammy: The NHS Executive as a separate part of the Department did not exist at 1 April 2002.

We cannot give a proportion of these staff who have clinical contact with National Health Service patients as we do not collect this data.

Weston General Hospital

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department will reach a decision about whether to build an extension at Weston General Hospital for accident and emergency cases. [71222]

Ms Blears: No bid has been submitted by the Weston Area Health Service Trust for an extension to Weston General Hospital for accident and emergency cases. The trust did submit a bid for a diagnostic and treatment centre to be developed in the existing newly built extension at the hospital at a cost of £2.1 million. On 15 August we announced investment of £39 million for ten more diagnostic and treatment centres in the next two years which will in total treat over 25,000 extra cases a year, the Weston Area Health NHS Trust was one of these.

Neonatal Services

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 15 July 2002, when he expects to publish the report on Neonatal Services; and if he will answer the written questions from the hon. Member for Castle Point, refs: 67662, 67671, 67672, 67668, 67675, 67663, 67664, 67673, 67674, 67669, 67670 and 67661. [71245]

Jacqui Smith: A review has been undertaken of provision for neonatal services which addresses the issues raised by the hon. Member. I am considering the report following from this review and expect to determine the next steps in this process shortly.

The hon. Member's written questions were replied to on Monday 15 July 2002, Official Report, vol. 389, col. 120W.

Newborn Babies

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is introducing to improve intensive care facilities for Newborn Babies. [71765]

Jacqui Smith: A review has been undertaken of provision for neonatal services which addresses the issues raised by the hon. Member. I am considering the report following from this review and expect to determine the next steps in this process shortly.

Cancer Treatment

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 229W, on cancer, what the average time has been over the last three years that cancer patients have waited from an urgent referral to the start of the treatment; and if he will make a statement. [70386]

Ms Blears [holding answer 22 July 2002]: The information requested is not available. We are putting in place monitoring arrangements to track the percentage of patients waiting less than two months from urgent general practitioner (GP) referral to treatment for all cancers by 2005. Date is currently available on the percentage of patients waiting.

Less than two weeks from urgent GP referral for suspected cancer to first outpatient appointment, 93.8 per cent of patients were within two weeks in 2001, and 95.3 per cent so far in 2002.

Less than one month from urgent GP referral to first treatment for children's and testicular cancers and acute leukaemia, 99 per cent patients with acute leukaemia, 93.5 per cent with testicular cancer and 100 per cent of children with cancer were treated with the target time so far in 2002.

Less than one month from diagnosis to first treatment for breast cancer 94.4 per cent of patients were treated within the target time so far in 2002.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 152W, on the NHS Cancer Plan, if he will list the members of the working group; if he will publish the recommendations of the group; and what the evidential basis was for the group's recommendations. [67772]

Ms Blears: The membership was:

Dr. Graham Winyard—NHS Executive: Medical Director Chairman

Dr. Val Chisty—Assistant Director of Public Health: West Midlands Regional Office, Department of Health

Dr. Ruth Carnall—Chief Executive: West Kent Authority

Miss Barbara Dicks—Chair of the RCN Cancer Nursing Society: Royal Marsden Hospital

Mr. Len Fenwick—Chief Executive: Freeman Group of Hospitals NHS Trust

Dr. Howard Freeman—General Practitioner: London

Dr. Clive Harner—Consultant Department of Radiotherapy and Oncology: Royal Marsden Hospital

Professor Bob Haward—Professor of Cancer Studies: University of Leeds

Dr. Arthur Hibble—Chairman: RCGP Cancer Group

Professor David J Kerr—Professor of Clinical Oncology: University of Birmingham

Mr. David Kirby—Patient Representative

Dr. Azim Lakhani—Central Health Outcomes Unit: Public Health Division

Mr. David Lye—Director of Purchaser Performance Management: West Midlands Regional Office, Department of Health

Mr. Colin McIlwain—Waiting Times: National Health Service Executive

Ms. Jane McKessack—General Health Services: National Health Service Executive

Dr. Rajan Madhok—Director of Public Health: Gateshead and South Tynesdie Health Authority

Mrs. Becky Miles—National Cancer Alliance

Mrs. Jackie Murray—Regional Cancer Co-odinator: Northern and Yorkshire Regional Office, Department of Health

Mr. Graeme Poston—Directorate of General Surgery: Royal Liverpool University Hospital

Dr. Tim Riley—Head of Outcomes and Effectiveness—National Health Service Executive

Dr. David Rosin—Consultant Surgeon: St Mary's NHS Trust

Mr. J H Shepherd—Consultant Gynaecological Surgeon and Oncologist: St Bartholomew's Hospital

Mrs. Gill Oliver—Director of Patient Services: Clatterbridge Centre for Oncology NHS Trust

Professor Mike Richards—Sainsbury Professor of Palliative Medicine: St Thomas' Hospital

Professor Irving Taylor—BASO President: University College London Medical School

A copy of the group's report has been placed in the Library.

Eye Scans

Noman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the potential health implications resulting from (a) repeated iris scans and (b) repeated retina scans. [71796]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 22 July 2002]: The use of iris or retinal scanning systems in order to verify the identity of an individual is a relatively new development. This Department and the Health and Safety Executive are not aware of any evidence that repeated scanning is likely to be a health and safety problem for users. Existing health and safety law requires employers wishing to market and use this technology to undertake an adequate risk assessment of its safety so that appropriate control measures can be specified and used as necessary.

Patient Journey Times

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average time is a patient travelled to reach (a) a NHS dentist and (b) a general practitioner in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [72382]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested is not held centrally.

Inflammatory Bowel Disease

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of recent research into Inflammatory Bowel Disease; what plans he has to act on the findings; and if he will make a statement. [72182]

Mr. Lammy: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) issued guidance on infliximab for Crohn's Disease in May 2002. The Department has not made a separate assessment of recent research into Inflammatory Bowel Disease (IBD).

It is anticipated that the NICE guidance will help the estimated 5 per cent of patients who have severe Crohn's Disease. Infliximab has not been recommended by NICE as a possible treatment for sufferers of ulcerative colitis.

The Medical Research Council funds several projects on basic mechanisms regulating the function of the gastrointestinal tract in normal and disease function, dietary regulation of intestinal function, cellular and molecular mechanisms of gastrointestinal diseases and neuroendocrine control of the gut. Increasing our understanding of how the intestine functions will facilitate the development of therapeutic agents to treat acute intestinal inflammation and chronic diseases such as Crohn's and IBD.

NHS Treatment Entitlement

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 17 July 2002, ref. 69433, who meets the cost of treatment by general practitioners of persons who are not entitled to NHS treatment; how many people who are not entitled to NHS treatment have been treated at NHS expense in the last year for which information is available; and what steps he takes to ensure recovery of the costs. [72551]

Ms Blears: General practitioners may not provide National Health Service treatment other than emergency or immediately necessary treatment to persons who are not eligible for inclusion on their patient lists. They may however treat such patients privately. No data are held on the incidence or costs of such treatment.

Avon and Wiltshire Mental Health Partnership NHS Trust

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the Avon and Wiltshire Mental Health Partnership NHS Trust has not received funding for the Salisbury Alcohol and Drugs Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement. [71791]

Ms Blears [holding answer 22 July 2002]: Avon and Wiltshire Mental Health Partnership National Health Service Trust has received funding, both mainstream and ring fenced monies, however, decisions on the funding of individual alcohol and drug treatment services are made at local level.

I understand that an accounting error has led to a shortfall in relation to the service in Salisbury and that this is being addressed by the South Wiltshire Primary Care Trust and Avon and Wiltshire Mental Health Partnership NHS Trust.

Asthma

Ms Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent reports into the causes of asthma his Department has commissioned; what assessment his Department has made of these reports; and if he will make a statement. [71399]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: We have commissioned no recent reports into the causes of asthma. We have, however, sponsored extensive research on asthma and respiratory disease-related issues.

Our current research programme concentrates on practice improvement. The National Asthma Campaign (NAC), the leading voluntary organisation with an interest in asthma, manages the National Health Service research and development programme on asthma management. This has supported 33 projects throughout the United Kingdom at a total cost of £4.9 million since 1996. The strategy aims to create a research based health service in which reliable and relevant information is used to make decisions on health policy, clinical practice and management of services.

The overall spend on asthma research for the Medical Research Council (MRC) and Department was almost £4 million in 1999–2000 and £12.2 million including other respiratory disorders. The Departmental spend on directly commissioned research projects on asthma since 1997 is an estimated £7.24 million.

The Department's Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants has produced an interim statement on the effects of air pollution on asthma. This was in response to a series of articles published by the Independent on Sunday that claimed that air pollution caused asthma. The interim statement is available on the Committee's website at www.doh.gov.uk/comeap

A subgroup of the Committee has also now been set up to review the subject in more detail, and will report in 2003. The Department will consider this report carefully when it is published. The overall spend on asthma research for the MRC and the Department was almost £4 million in 1999–2000, and £12.2 million including other respiratory disorders. The Department's spend on directly commissioned research projects on asthma since 1997 is an estimated £7.24 million.

MRSA

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many MRSA incidents have been (a) voluntarily and (b) mandatorily reported in each NHS region since 1996 (i) in total and (ii) as a ratio to the population in that region. [72149]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 July 2002]: We are unable to supply these data as information on incidents which are defined as three or more patients with the same strain in the same hospital in one calendar month is no longer compiled. The following table shows the number of bacteraemia reports per 100,000 head of population for each region. Data for the voluntary reporting system are available from 1996 but are known to be incomplete. Mandatory reporting was introduced in April 2001 and the first year's data are provided.

Correspondence

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the leter of 10 June 2002 from the hon. Member for Twickenham on Lynde House. [71798]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on Monday 12 August 2002.

Newborn Hearing Screening

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will place in the Library the lists of sites considered for the second phase of the newborn hearing screening programme; [72602]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 17 June 2002, Official Report, column 164W, on newborn hearing screening, how many sites will provide newborn screening by the end of (a) 2002, (b) 2003 and (c) 2004, and when the funding for each stage of this process will be committed. [72489]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 23 July 2002]: A list of the sites considered for the second phase of the newborn hearing screening programme will be placed in the Library.

Twenty-three sites are currently providing newborn hearing screening. We expect to bring on a further 16 sites by the end of March 2003, with approximately 30 additional sites during the financial year 2003–04. The remainder of sites are expected to come on stream by the end of the financial year 2004–05.

Departmental Jobs

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many jobs under the remit of his Department in (a) the core department, (b) non-departmental public bodies, (c) executive agencies and (d) independent statutory bodies, organisations and bodies financially sponsored by his Department and other such organisations, are located in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, excluding Greater London, (iii) Greater London, (iv) Wales, (v) Northern Ireland and (vi) overseas, broken down by (A) whole time equivalent jobs and (B) the pecentage per individual department, body or organisation. [72735]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Teenage Pregnancy

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the teenage pregnancy rate in Taunton was at the latest date for which figures are available. [73271]

Ms Blears: The under 18 conception rate for the Taunton Deane District Council area was 40.2 per thousand for the period 1998–2000, the latest period for which data have been published by the Office for National Statistics. Teenage pregnancy rates are usually measured by the under 18 conception rate. The teenage pregnancy strategy has set a target to halve the national rate by 2010.

The corresponding rates for Somerset County, the south west region and England were 38.0, 37.4 and 44.9 respectively.

Heroin

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) studies and (b) pilots have been undertaken since 1972 into the impact on (i) crime levels and (ii) health indicators of prescribing heroin. [66662]

Ms Blears: There is very limited United Kingdom research in the area of heroin prescribing. Given the current use of injectable methadone in the UK and also a smaller number of opiate addicted individuals currently receiving injectable heroin, potentially there are difficulties in recruitment to suitably sized and rigorous research studies. Those studies that have been reported from the UK since 1972 do not give definitive results as to the effect of heroin treatment on health and crime but indicate potential benefits and risks.

Hartnoll et al (1980) reported a London study carried out in the early 1970's comprising injectable heroin and oral methadone treatment in patients assessed as dependent on heroin. There were no differences between the two groups in health outcomes at 12 months and no consistent differences in levels of crime identified though there were methodological problems in comparing the two groups appropriately.

McCusker et al (1996) reported the introduction of heroin prescribing to one of three English community drug teams but no conclusions could be drawn about the impact of the heroin treatment and outcomes due to the methodology used.

Battersby et al (1992) in a descriptive study of injectable opiates are reported to have shown reductions in illicit drug use and criminality with little improvementshown in health, also raising some concerns about continued unsafe injecting practice.

Metrebian et al (1998) studied the use of either injectable heroin or injectable methadone for those doing badly on oral methadone. This suggested that the use of injectable methadone could be a viable alternative to injectable heroin in some and that the use of injectable opiate treatment in those who had failed oral treatments could lead to improvement in those who remained in treatment, in health and levels of criminal activity. They concluded that injectable heroin is not necessarily the drug of choice given the availability of injectable methadone.

The more recently reported Swiss and Dutch studies are not directly applicable to the UK context, the Swiss study being in effect a feasibility study. However, both have produced results indicating the possibility of benefits for health and crime, for a minority of patients who are carefully selected long term opiate addicts who have failed in other treatments including oral methadone treatment.

No pilots have been identified that contribute to assessing the impact of injectable heroin on health and crime.

Treatment (Postcode Prescribing)

Mr. Andrew Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent representations he has (a) made and (b) received about the non-prescribing of NICE approved treatment by primary care trusts on financial grounds; and if he will make a statement; [71916]

(2) what recent representations he has (a) made to and (b) received from primary care trusts and other NHS trusts about the continuation of postcode lottery in the prescribing of treatment; and if he will make a statement. [71917]

Mr. Lammy The Department has made no such representations and according to the Department's records, none have been received recently from primary care trusts (PCTs) and other National Health Service trusts about the alleged continuation of postcode prescribing of treatments.

PCTs are under a statutory obligation, set out in directions, to provide appropriate funding for treatments recommended by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence.

PCTs have been made aware of these statutory obligations. I have not made any representations about alleged non-compliance with them, nor according to the Department's records, have any such representations been received.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Territories (Statistical Information)

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 July 2002, Official Report, column 175W, on overseas territories, to what extent the overseas territories differ in their system for the collection and publication of statistics; and which publish details within these statistics that constitute national income accounts. [71569]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 22 July 2002]: There is no common method used throughout the UK Overseas Territories for the collection and publication of statistical information. Of the economically significant Overseas Territories, Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands, St. Helena and Turks and Caicos Islands regularly produce and publish details within these statistics that constitute National Income Accounts. Gibraltar has recently published a compendium of statistics after a gap of several years.

Sheikh Salah Shahada

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government on the death of Sheikh Salah Shahada and others on 22 July. [73380]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I spoke to the Israeli Ambassador on 23 July to express the concern of the Government and the House about the Israeli attack in Gaza and the deaths of innocent civilians. I said it was unacceptable and counterproductive, as my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary had earlier told the House. HM Ambassador in Tel Aviv conveyed the same views to the Israeli Prime Minister's office.

Data Protection

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times the revised certificate he signed last December with respect to Section 28 of the Data Protection Act 1998 has been used by the Intelligence Service and GCHQ in relation to (a) the right of access to personal data and (b) the disclosure of personal data to the Service or GCHQ; and if he will make a statement. [74481]

Mr. Straw: The certificates I signed pursuant to section 28 (2) of the Data Protection Act 1998 relating to SIS and GCHQ provide evidence that the exemption from those provisions of the Act that are specified in the certificate are required for the purpose of safeguarding national security. The certificates identify the personal data to which they apply by means of general descriptions and are expressed to have prospective effect, in accordance with section 28 (3). The certificates are used in the context of any legal challenge to the application of the section 28 exemption, such as appeals brought before the Information Tribunal under section 28 (4) or 28 (6). There have been no appeals against the certificate in respect of SIS and there have been two against the certificate in respect of GCHQ, which are still extant.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many subject access requests have been received by the Intelligence Service and GCHQ since the right of access afforded by the Data Protection Act 1998 came into effect; how many of these requests were from data subjects who were not employed or contracted to the Service; and whether any request for access has resulted in personal data being obtained by data subjects. [74480]

Mr. Straw: The Secret Intelligence Service has received 80 requests for subject access since the Data Protection Act 1998 came into force. Of those, 37 were from individuals not employed by or under contract to the Service. GCHQ has received 25 requests from individuals not employed by or under contract to GCHQ, of which 2 were from former employees. Personal data has been provided by both agencies to data subjects in both categories in response to requests in accordance with Section 7 of the Act.

Chagos Islands

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Ilois people had UK passports issued to them under the terms of the Immigration and Nationality Act 1971; and how many were issued in (a) Mauritius, (b) the Seychelles, (c) London and (d) other places. [74657]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The current legislation under which passports are issued is the British Nationality Act 1981, as amended by the British Overseas Territories Act 2002.

The number of British passports issued to Chagossians in Mauritius and the Seychelles is 98 and 63 respectively. An additional 80 passports have been issued in Pretoria. Details of ethnic origin would not be recorded for British passports issued elsewhere and therefore numbers are unavailable.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are being considered by BIOT officials for the Ilois people to visit the Chagos Islands, including Diego Garcia; and if he will make a statement. [74655]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A planned trip in October 02 to enable a group of Chagossians to visit the outer islands of the Chagos Archipelago could not go ahead due to the withdrawal of the vessel by the shipping company. We are ready to consider reinstating the voyage next year once the cyclone season (Nov–April) is over.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what applications he has received from the USA to construct new aircraft hangars on Diego Garcia; and if he will make a statement. [74654]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The issue of possible upgrades to facilities at Diego Garcia has been discussed at annual talks between the UK and US governments. The details of these governmental talks are confidential and exempt under section 1a of The Code of practice on Access to Government Information, "Information whose disclosure would harm national security or defence".

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what the Government's policy is on the future status of the British Indian Ocean Territory; [74191]

(2) what options are being considered by the Government after the expiration of the agreement granting the United States joint military use of Diego Garcia. [74193]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The British Government has a treaty commitment to allow the US to use BIOT until at least 2016, and then for a further 20 years unless prior notice is given. We have told the Government of Mauritius that the Chagos Islands will be ceded to Mauritius when they are no longer required for defence purposes, subject to the requirements of international law.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is on the claims of Mauritius and the Seychelles to the Chagos Archipelago of British Indian Ocean Territory. [74192]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The British Government has sovereignty over the Chagos Islands. Mauritius is the only other state to have a claim to sovereignty. The British Government has told the Government of Mauritius that the Chagos Islands will be ceded to Mauritius when they are longer required for defence purposes, subject to the requirements of international law. Seychelles makes no claim to sovereignty over the Chagos Islands.

Western Sahara

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held at the UN concerning a referendum of Saharwi people on the future of the Western Sahara. [74662]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The future of Western Sahara has been discussed at the UN recently in both the Security Council and the General Assembly.

On 30 July 2002 the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1429. This extended the mandate of the UN's peacekeeping force in Western Sahara (MINURSO) until 31 January 2003. It underlined the validity of the Settlement Plan, which provided for a referendum on the future of Western Sahara, while noting the differences between the parties in its implementation. It supported the efforts of the Secretary General and his Personal Envoy to find a political solution to the dispute. The Council expressed its readiness to consider any approach that provided for self determination and urged the parties to cooperate fully with them.

The Fourth Committee of the General Assembly recently debated the question of Western Sahara and agreed a resolution by Consensus debated on 4 October 2002. That resolution noted the Security Council's recent resolutions, including 1429. It urged the parties to continue their cooperation with the Secretary General and his Personal Envoy with a view to reaching a mutually acceptable political solution.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement of 23 July 2002, Official Report, column 960, if he will place in the Library details of his information about the similar amount to the $11 million paid on or about 23 December 1988 paid 18 months before. [73716]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I can add nothing to that which I gave my hon. Friend on 23 July 2002. It is a longstanding Government policy not to comment upon intelligence matters. As I said to my hon. Friend in the House on 23 July 2002, I am informed that after the bombing of Pan Am 103, all reports of PFLP-GC funding that emerged were investigated and none was found to have any connection to the Lockerbie attack.

EU General Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the outcome was of the General Affairs Council held on 23 July; what the Government's stance was on each issue discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [73529]

Peter Hain: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary represented the UK at the July Council. The Council adopted the "A" points listed in document 12354/1/02 PTS A 44 and noted the Resolutions, Decisions and Opinions of the European Parliament listed in document 10110/02.

Presidency Priorities

The Presidency presented its work programme, with emphasis on completing enlargement negotiations with up to 10 countries by Copenhagen. Greece, which will preside over Council discussions with defence implications, briefed on ESDP priorities, particularly progress towards the Headline Goal.

Enlargement

The Presidency presented its programme, underlining its commitment to respect the targets set by the European Council. This involves aiming to resolve all remaining non-budgetary aspects by September, with the objective of the Brussels European Council naming the countries that could conclude negotiations by the end of 2002 and taking decisions which will enable the EU to inform the candidates early in November about the financial aspects of the package. The UK strongly supports this approach.

Seville European Council: Follow-up

The Council adopted revised rules of procedure, incorporating the changes agreed at Seville and setting out the role and future areas of activity of the General Affairs and External Relations Council. The UK welcomes the reforms agreed at Seville. The Commission noted its intention to complete by September, as requested at Seville, a study on options for resolution of the transit issue affecting Kaliningrad.

Work in other Council Formations

The Presidency briefed, in particular noting the first discussion in the 15 July Agriculture Council of the mid-term review of the CAP, the debate in the 12 July ECOFIN on negotiations with Switzerland on taxation of savings and in the 19 July ECOFIN on the draft 2003 budget.

Zimbabwe

The Council confirmed that Zimbabwe was continuing to fail to respect its obligations in democracy, human rights and rule of law. The Council, with strong UK support, decided to extend the list of those in the ruling party and government affected by the EU measures set out in the 18 February Common Position. This will include all remaining Cabinet Ministers, Politburo Secretaries, Deputy Ministers, Assistant Secretaries of the Politburo and the wife of President Mugabe. The Council condemned the Mugabe government's land reforms as a major cause of the humanitarian crisis and urged Zimbabwe to implement the process agreed at Abuja in September 2001 and to review its land reform as proposed by UNDP in early 2002. The EU will continue to supply humanitarian aid to the people of Zimbabwe.

Southern Africa

The Council discussed the humanitarian crisis in the region, noting the EU's contribution of €130 million in food and humanitarian aid. It called on the governments in the region to work with the international community to address the underlying causes of the crisis.

Conflict Prevention

The CFSP High Representative and Commissioner Patten briefed on EU priorities in Conflict Prevention. The Council adopted Conclusions welcoming this work, and tasking the Political and Security Committee to keep it under review.

Middle East

Council Conclusions welcomed the outcome of the EU/US/UN/Russia ("Quartet") meeting on 16 July and stressed the need for parallel work on economic, political and security issues. The Council underlined the need for a roadmap towards the goal, within 3 years, of a final settlement between Israel and the Palestinians. The Council endorsed the appeal by the Quartet for Israel to lift closures, withdraw their forces to positions held before 28 September 2000, resume transfer of revenues due to the Palestinian Authority and to stop settlement activity. The Council condemned the recent terrorist acts against Israeli civilians. The Council urged Israel to refrain from unjustified deportations.

Western Balkans

Conclusions called for protection of the rights of refugees and internally displaced across the region, for enhanced co-operation between states, noted progress in the FRY, including the recent understanding between the FRY and UNMIK in Kosovo, and noted forthcoming elections in Macdeonia and Bosnia.

Afghanistan

Conclusions welcomed the outcome of the Loya Jirga and the new transitional government, and welcomed Turkey's assumption of command of the international force (ISAF). The Council noted the recent appointment of Fransesc Vendrell as EU Special Representative.

India/Pakistan

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary briefed colleagues on his recent trip to India and Pakistan. Ministers underlined the importance that the elections in Pakistan and in Jammu and Kashmir to be held later in the year be free and fair. They invited SG/HR Solana to make this clear during his forthcoming visit to the region.

World Summit on Sustainable Development

The Presidency briefed on preparations for the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to take place in Johannesburg from 26 August to 4 September 2002. The Council adopted Conclusions on the key messages for an EU Communication strategy for Johannesburg and on EU initiatives based on the Conclusions of the Seville European Council.

Madagascar

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the political situation in Madagascar; and what recent action has been undertaken by representatives of Her Majesty's Government to protect free elections and the furtherance of democracy and defence of democratic institutions in Madagascar. [74157]

Mr. Macshane: On 24 September, Marc Ravalomanana, the President of Madagascar, announced that he would be dissolving the National Assembly and holding legislative elections before the end of the year. He sought international assistance to ensure that the elections would be held in a free and transparent manner.

UK election observers will form part of a 62 strong EU Election Observer team that will monitor the legislative elections. A contingent of 14 observers will arrive four weeks in advance of the elections to monitor the campaign, the investitures and official registration of candidates. The remainder of the team will arrive a week before the election date.

Our Embassy, along with EU colleagues, the US and major donors in Madagascar, will continue to work constructively with the Government of Madagascar to promote democratic governance and transparency.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 9 August from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. E. Stephen. [74563]

Mr. Macshane: A reply was sent on 19 September. I apologise for the delay.

MOX Fuel

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library details of the representations made to the United Kingdom from en route countries in respect of the return shipment of rejected MOX fuel from Japan to Sellafield. [73552]

Mr. Macshane: The New Zealand High Commissioner called on the FCO on 12 July to make a formal representation regarding the return shipment of MOX fuel from Japan to Sellafield. This was an oral rather than written representation. There have been no other representations from en route countries in respect of this shipment.

Nigeria

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Nigeria about the decision under Sharia law to stone to death Amina Lawal. [74324]

Mr. Macshane: During her recent visit to Nigeria my noble Friend the Minister for Africa, the Baroness Amos, raised with President Obasanjo HMG's concerns about the harsh sentences imposed under the Sharia penal codes. She emphasised the strength of feeling against them in the UK and reiterated HMG's opposition to the death penalty in all circumstances.

The British High Commission in Abuja, together with EU partners, follows all such cases closely and keeps in close contact with local human rights organisations. The High Commission regularly raises our concerns about the sentences with the appropriate authorities.

The Federal Government has made clear its opposition to the extreme Sharia penalties. It has declared them discriminatory and unconstitutional. Exercise of the Sharia penal code is, however, entirely under the control of the relevant States. The Federal justice system only comes into play if the defendant appeals to the Federal Appeal Courts.

Gibraltar

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the dates were of the 16 ministerial level meetings held under the Brussels Process between November 1984 and February 1999. [73981]

Peter Hain: Between November 1984 and February 1999, ministerial level meetings took place on: 26–27 November 1984; 5–6 February and 6 December 1985; 13–14 January, 27–28 November and 2 December 1987; 10 June 1988; 6–7 February 1989; 26 February 1990; 12 February 1991; 4 May 1992; 1 March 1993; 19–20 December 1994; 19 June 1995; and 22 January and 10 December 1997.

Since the relaunch of the Brussels Process in July 2001, three Brussels Process ministerial meetings have been held: on 26 July and 20 November 2001 and on 4 February 2002.

Mongolia

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Government of Mongolia over the case of Ms B. Khanddolgar, Editor-in-Chief of the UG newspaper, recently imprisoned for alleged slander; and if he will make a statement. [74510]

Mr. MacShane: The editor of the Mongolian "Ug" newspaper was sentenced to one year's imprisonment after publishing a story claiming that a private citizen had contracted AIDS following alleged affairs with Russian border guards. The allegations proved false. "Ug" issued an apology, but the citizen had already been killed by her partner. This was the fourth time that "Ug" had been taken to court facing similar charges.

In discussion with ministers, editors and journalists in Mongolia last month I made clear the importance the government attaches to freedom of expression and for the need to check facts carefully and avoid publishing allegations made for sensationalist or sectarian purposes.

Export Licences

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Strategic Export Controls report 2001. [74664]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, East and Mexborough (Mr. Jeff Ennis) on 19 July 2002, Official Report, column 611W.

The 2001 Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls was published on 19 July. The annual reports were an innovation of this Government and have opened our policy to unprecedented public scrutiny. We maintain one of the most effective and transparent export licensing system in the World.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the applications for the export of military equipment to (a) the United States and (b) Israel which have been turned down since May 1997. [73563]

Nigel Griffiths: I have been asked to reply.

Details of all relevant applications for the export of items on the Military List, where the end users were in the United States of America and Israel, which were refused between 2 May 1997 and 31 December 2001, are published by destination in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls. Copies of the 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2001 Annual Reports are available from the Libraries of the House.

Between 1 January 2002 and 15 July 2002, 42 Standard Individual Export Licence (SIEL) applications and 1 Open Individual Export Licence (OIEL) application were refused in full, for items on the Military List, where the end users were in Israel. During the same period 5 SIEL applications and no OIEL applications were refused in full, for items on the Military List, to end users in the United States of America.

Iraq

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps (a) have been taken since 1991–92 and (b) are being taken to ensure the compliance of Iraq with Paragraph 30 of the United Nations Security Council Resolution 687; and if he will make a statement. [74665]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A Tripartite Commission was set up under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross to establish the whereabouts of Kuwaiti and other nationals still missing since the occupation of Kuwait. So far, the Iraqis have provided information sufficient to close only three files. 605 Kuwaiti and other nationals are still unaccounted for. Since January 1999 Iraq has refused to attend Tripartite Commission meetings, and has thereby effectively obstructed progress. The UK, along with other members of the Tripartite Commission, continue to meet regularly. Despite our and others' efforts to convince Iraq of the humanitarian nature of this issue, Iraq still refuses to co-operate with the process.

Beryllium

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department had with the Department for Trade and Industry regarding the decision to license the export of beryllium to (a) India and (b) Iran in 2001. [74698]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Views expressed by any individual department involved in the licensing process fall under the description of "internal discussion and advice" the disclosure of which would in this case harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion. The information is therefore being withheld on the basis of Exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Sri Lanka

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what refreshment provisions are available to members of the public at the British Embassy in Sri Lanka. [74114]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: All members of the public who are waiting in the visa waiting room in our High Commission in Colombo have access to a chilled water dispenser. The visa and consular section in the British High Commission has just been awarded its second Charter Mark for excellence in customer services. The Charter Mark was obtained in 1998 and the award retained on re-inspection earlier this year.

Afghanistan

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Afghanistan Government's strategy for its fight against drugs; and what the UK's role was in the development of this strategy. [73786]

Mr. Macshane: The Afghan Transitional Administration has made clear its determination to break Afghanistan's social and economic dependence on drugs. On 4 September President Karzai reiterated in a radio broadcast to the Afghan people his personal commitment to the implementation of the ban on drug cultivation, processing and trafficking introduced in January. The Afghan government has already carried out an eradication programme.

The UK is co-ordinating international anti-narcotics assistance to Afghanistan. In consultation with the Afghan Government, other donors and international (especially UN) agencies, the UK has developed a strategy for the long term elimination of drugs from Afghanistan. It identifies four key areas where the international community should focus its support: providing alternative livelihoods for opium poppy farmers; improving Afghan drug law enforcement capacity; building up the capacity of Afghan drug control institutions; and reducing drug demand in Afghanistan.

East Timor

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indonesian authorities over the conduct of General Wiranto during the East Timorese ballot in 1999. [73423]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK has not raised with the Indonesian authorities the specific case of General Wiranto. The EU has however urged the Indonesian government to extend the jurisdiction of their Ad Hoc Tribunal to cover all human rights violations perpetrated in East Timor before, during and after the ballot in 1999.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Saville Inquiry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost to the Saville Tribunal was of the temporary relocation of proceedings in London. [74178]

Mr. Desmond Browne: The estimated cost of the temporary relocation to London of the Bloody Sunday Inquiry is £15 million.

Terrorist-related Activity

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Irish Republicans who have been charged with terrorist-related activity since 1972 have been members of Sinn Fein. [74277]

Jane Kennedy: Statistics are not recorded on the political party affiliation of persons charged with terrorist related offences.

Police Service

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recommendations were made by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary following completion of his review into the performance of the PSNI Special Branch. [74175]

Jane Kennedy: Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary has not yet completed his review of the Special Branch of the Police Service of Northern Ireland. He is scheduled to make a presentation of his findings to the Northern Ireland Policing Board on 6th November.

Electoral Identity Card

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional financial and staff resources will be put in place to ensure the provision of the statutory electoral identity card prior to the elections to the Northern Ireland Assembly on 1 May 2003. [74286]

Mr. Desmond Browne: £750,000 has already been allocated to provide for the electoral identity card and a member of staff has been seconded from the Northern Ireland Office to act as a project manager in implementing all the requirements of the Electoral Fraud (Northern Ireland) Act.

The arrangements for the production of the card are the responsibility of the Chief Electoral Officer. An advert inviting tenders from experienced and competent service providers for the provision of the card was entered in the Official Journal of the European Community (in line with Government procurement guidelines) on 9 September. Tenders are returnable by 4 November.

The Government is committed to providing those people who require one with an electoral identity card in time for the Assembly election on 1 May 2003. In order to achieve this target the Chief Electoral Officer's staffing and resource requirements will be kept under review.

Criminal Justice Website

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the objectives are of the Criminal Justice Web Site; what steps he has taken to publicise its launch; how many media outlets reported the event; and how many hits were made in the first month. [74169]

Mr. Desmond Browne: The objectives of the Criminal Justice System Northern Ireland website are:

To provide a "one-stop shop" for information on all criminal justice matters.

To increase public awareness by providing access to all the criminal justice agencies on one site.

To provide a resource for the public and criminal justice practitioners in Northern Ireland and elsewhere.

Each criminal justice agency is responsible for promoting the website within its own organisation and amongst its contacts and partners. In addition, the Northern Ireland Office issued a press release to all the main local media outlets on 2 August 2002.

One media outlet reported the event.

The site received 21,856 hits in the first month, August.

DNA Analysis

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) instructions were drawn up for and (b) safeguards were used by PSNI officers in the Newtownabbey area to protect against right to privacy violations in the use of DNA analysis to re-examine forensic evidence collected in unresolved murder investigations; what the results were of these examinations; and what his assessment is of this experiment. [74170]

Jane Kennedy: The Police in Newtownabbey are conducting a self-inspection of unresolved murders applying forensic technology, including DNA, as appropriate. Any DNA results obtained will be examined against the DNA database. The management of the DNA database is governed by legislation, including the European Convention on Human Rights.

The investigations are ongoing so it is not possible to provide an assessment at this time.

DEFENCE

Secondments

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of staff were employed by his Department on secondment from the private sector in (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2001. [45258]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 10 April 2002, Official Report, column 19.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff were seconded between (a) BP, (b) Shell, (c) Enron, (d) Exxon-Mobil, (e) Conoco, (f) Texaco and (g) TotalFinaElf and his Department in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) April 2001 to the latest date for which figures are available. [33208]

Dr. Moonie: No staff have been seconded between the Ministry of Defence and any of these companies during the period from 1999 to the present.

Private Military Companies

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what deployments include the use of private military companies' services (a) in Britain and (b) abroad; what the additional cost is of using mercenary troops rather than British troops; and if he will make a statement. [38798]

Mr. Ingram: The Green Paper entitled Private Military Companies: Options for Regulation published on 12 February 2002, highlights the problem of defining a private military company. It notes that their services may include provision of forces for combat, but much more usually, services such as advice, training, logistic support, supply of personnel for monitoring roles, and de-mining operations. In practice, a wide spectrum of people and companies may be involved in the supply of military and security services.

The Ministry of Defence does not employ commercial contractors to provide forces for combat or armed guards. The MOD does, however, utilise the services of commercial contractors where appropriate and cost effective in a number of areas on deployments both in the United Kingdom and abroad.

Contracted services are primarily in the areas of logistic support services, e.g. provision of accommodation, catering and maintenance. We also employ local host nation support (e.g. for food supplies and locally employed cleaning and interpreters). Similarly commercial contractors may also be employed to provide advice, support, training and maintenance on equipment supplied to the forces.

Such services are provided on the majority of UK deployments in some form, and are contracted separately by individual commands. This information is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans the Government have to use private military companies' services; in which sectors of the armed forces these will be used; and if he will make a statement. [38797]

Mr. Adam Ingram: The Government has no plans to engage the services of commercial contractors to provide forces for combat, but will continue to use commercial contractors to provide a range of services, both in the United Kingdom and overseas, wherever it is appropriate and cost effective to do so.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many private military companies he estimates exist in the UK; and how many UK nationals he estimates are employed by these companies. [73953]

Mr. Ingram: The Green Paper entitled Private Military Companies: Options for Regulation published on 12 February 2002, highlights the problem of defining a private military company. In practice, a wide spectrum of people and companies may be involved in the supply of military and security services.

The Paper notes that services of private military companies may include provision of forces for combat, but much more usually, services such as advice, training, logistic support, supply of personnel for monitoring roles, and de-mining operations.

Given this wide range of activities combined with the definitional problems, there are numerous sectors of industry that could potentially provide such services. It is therefore not possible to make such an estimate.

Medical Services

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) Army, (b) Royal Navy and (c) RAF budgets were for medical provisions in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [57971]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 22 May 2002]: The costs of the Defence Medical Services (DMS) in the years for which figures are available are shown in the table below. Information for the years 1992–1993 to 1997–1998 is reproduced from the House of Commons Defence Committee (HCDC) Seventh report "The Strategic Defence Review: Defence Medical Services" published on 27 October 1999. The final outturn for 1998–1999 shown in the table was the same as the estimated figure contained in the HCDC Report. For the years 1999–2000 onwards, we have obtained figures from Surgeon General's Department (SGD) (covering SGD and the four medical agencies), single Service Medical Directorates General, HQ British Forces Germany, the Institute of Naval Medicine and the Centre for Aviation Medicine. The budgets for primary care have been disaggregated down to unit level and these figures could therefore only be provided at disproportionate cost. Some historical figures cannot be provided as contemporary records are no longer available.

Royal Navy, Army and RAF expenditure on medical provision in financial years 1992–1993 to 2001–2002

£M COST OF DMS	N/A	N/A	330.6	333.0	257.7	273.5	291.5	320.16	332.88	348.89

1. Expenditure for 1992–1993 and 1993–1994 cannot be provided since figures ceased to be published in the Statement on the Defence Estimates after 1991 when budgets were disaggregated and contemporary records are no longer available.
2. Figures for 1994–1995 and 1995–1996 are the cost of the DMS estimated by Defence Cost Study 15(DCS15). The figures contained in the DCS15 report included primary care costs, estimated at £83.5 million for 1994–1995 and £81.1 million for 1995–1996. These have been removed here to allow accurate comparison with the figures for the subsequent years.
3. Figures for 1996–1997 to 2001–2002 comprise the costs of the Surgeon General's Department and the four medical agencies (the Defence Secondary Care Agency, Defence Dental Agency, the Medical Supplies Agency and the Defence Medical Training Organisation), the single Service Medical Directorates General, the Institute of Naval Medicine, the Centre for Aviation Medicine and British Forces Germany. Except for British Forces Germany, the figures exclude primary care costs. Figures for Germany cover secondary care for Army and RAF personnel and primary care for Army personnel from 1996–1997 to 2000–2001 and both Army and remaining RAF personnel in 2001–2002.
4. Except where advised above, primary care costs cannot be provided without disproportionate effort as they are disaggregated and are embedded in individual units' budgets.
5. It should be noted that although the Ministry of Defence has changed accounting systems to include full Resource Accounts in financial year 2001–2002 (which include costs of fixed assets etc, not reported previously), the figures contained in the table have been adjusted to allow comparison with the previous years.

Sunset Clauses

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Bills introduced by his Department in the last five years have contained sunset clauses; and what plans he has for the future use of such clauses. [49613]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence has introduced only one Bill (which became the Armed Forces Act 2001) in the last five years that contains a sunset clause. The clause relates to the annual requirement to continue in force the Army and Air Force Acts 1955 and the Naval Discipline Act 1957 and provides for the three Service Acts to be continued in force until no later than the end of 2006. The expectation is that by then Parliament will have enacted a further Armed Forces Act, which will extend the lives of the Service Acts for a further five years. This accords with the procedure which Parliament has adopted for this legislation in the past.

Criminal Offences

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many criminal offences have been (a) created and (b) abolished by his Department since 1997. [55437]

Mr. Ingram: One offence has been created in legislation sponsored by the Ministry of Defence since 1997. The Armed Forces Act 2001 included powers, in relation to persons subject to Service law, to test for alcohol or drugs after a serious incident and created the offence of failing to provide a sample in such circumstances. No offences have been abolished since 1997.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will answer the question from the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South of 26 February, Reference Number 38796, on private military companies; and if he will make a statement. [65761]

Dr. Moonie: I replied to the hon. Member on 22 July 2002, Official Report, column 748W.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will answer the Question from the hon. Member for Portsmouth South of 26 February, Reference Number 38798, on private military companies; and if he will make a statement. [65760]

Mr. Ingram: I replied today.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will answer the question from the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South of 26 February, reference number 38797, on private military companies; and if he will make a statement. [65751]

Mr. Ingram: I replied today.

Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the statistics that are collected by his Department by English parliamentary constituency; and if he will make a statement. [67094]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 8 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the letter sent to him by the National Statistician dated 8 July 2002.

Headline Goal

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the Common Foreign and Security Policy's Headline Goal; and if he will make a statement on when the forces will be available for use. [73208]

Mr. Hoon: The Helsinki Headline Goal has been broken down into 144 capability targets, of which 104 had been met following the Capabilities Improvement Conference in November 2001. Of the 40 shortfalls, about half may be resolved by improved management of existing forces. For the rest, a European Capability Action Plan (ECAP) was launched after the conference, comprising multinational panels tasked with suggesting possible solutions. Where a permanent solution is not possible by the end of 2003, interim solutions should be addressed. The European Council in Laeken in December 2001 agreed that the European Union was now able to conduct some crisis management operations and would be in a position to take on progressively more demanding operations as the assets and capabilities at its disposal continue to develop. There is no intention to create a standing EU force: existing national or multinational forces will be made available to the EU on a case by case basis when required for an operation.

Contracts

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the 10 biggest contracts awarded, in terms of initial estimated total cost since 1 May 1997, and provide in each case (a) the expected completion dates on contracts being let and (b) the expected completion dates achieved. [73948]

Dr. Moonie: The ten biggest contracts by value awarded by the Ministry of Defence since 1 May 1997 are as follows:

BOWMAN Fully Integrated Communications and Information System

A contract for the provision of the BOWMAN fully integrated communications and information system, including manufacture of equipments; test, evaluation and acceptance of the platforms to incorporate them; delivery of converted and commissioned platforms and buildings; provision of integrated logistics support; and supply of documents and publications was placed with General Dynamics United Kingdom on 13 September 2001. The expected completion date is 31 March 2009.

Main Building Redevelopment

A Private Finance Initiative (PFI) contract was placed in May 2000 with Modus Services Plc for the redevelopment of the MOD Main Building in London to provide the modern flexible working environment needed to provide effective direction and support to the armed forces. The contract also covers short term decant arrangements as well as the long term provision of a wide variety of services to both the redeveloped Main Building and the Old War Office Building. The contract will be complete in 2030, with reoccupation of Main Building in 2004.

Type 45

A contract was placed in December 2000 with BAE SYSTEMS Electronics Ltd for the demonstration and first of class manufacture phase of the Type 45 programme, covering the design and build of the first three Type 45s plus up to six ship sets of certain major equipment. The original contract acceptance date, based on three ships, is 30 September 2009.

PAAMS

A contract was placed in August 1999 with EUROPAAMS by France on behalf of the United Kingdom, France and Italy for full scale engineering development and initial production of the PAAMS system. The contact covers equipments and missiles required for each of the three nations' "First of Class" ships. The expected completion date is June 2007.

Joint Services Command and Staff College

A PFI contract was placed in June 1998 with Defence Management (Watchfield) for the provision of academic training and support services for students and officers from the United Kingdom Armed Forces and Armed Forces from abroad. The contractor also provides college and ancillary facilities, including married quarters, single living accommodation and construction of some new facilities. The new facilities have been completed and the expected completion date for the remainder of the contract is 31 August 2028.

United Kingdom Fixed Telecommunications

A ten year PFI contract was signed with British Telecommunications Ltd on 25 July 1997 for a strategic rationalisation of the means of delivery and operation of end to end fixed telecommunications service requirements within the United Kingdom, providing for value for money through economies of scale and other measures, whilst ensuring continued operational effectiveness. The expected completion date is 24 July 2007.

Army Foundation College, Harrogate

A thirty year PFI contract was let in February 2000 with Defence Training Services for the provision of vocational training, estate and store management, domestic services and transport at the Army Foundation College in Harrogate. The contract also provides for a comprehensive rebuild of the facilities on the site. The College provides a route of entry into the Army for young people and provides a 42 week course providing Military and Vocational training.

Management and Operation of the Atomic Weapon Establishments

A contract was signed in 1999 with AWE Management Ltd. for the management and operation of the Atomic Weapon Establishments at Aldermaston and Burghfield. The expected completion date of contract when let was 31 March 2010.

C17 Leasing

A contract was let with the McDonnell Douglas Corporation for the lease of four C17 Globe master III aircraft for a seven year period. The expected completion date at the time of contract was September 2008.

Administrative and Non-operational Support Transport Vehicles (the White Fleet)

A Public Private Partnership contract for a ten year period until 31 August 2011 was placed on 26 January 2001 with Lex Defence Management Ltd. The contract includes the provision of administrative and non-operational support transport vehicles, including fleet management, short term hire, vehicle provision, maintenance, repair and disposal, for the United Kingdom excluding Northern Ireland.

As all ten contracts are still running it is not yet possible to provide completion dates achieved.

Defence Intelligence Staff

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the budget of the Defence Intelligence Staff is; how many persons are employed in this section; what the aims and objectives of the DIS are; and if he will make a statement. [73955]

Mr. Ingram: The budget of the Defence Intelligence Staff (DIS) for the financial year 2002–2003 is as follows:

	£ million
Resource Control	173.85
Capital Control	12.754

There were 3,969 permanent staff employed by the DIS on 31 March 2002. This figure excludes contractors and reservists.

As part of the Ministry of Defence, the principal task of the DIS is to provide defence intelligence support from a wide range of sources, both secret and public, to the preparation and conduct of military operations, the formulation of defence policy and the Equipment Capability programmes. In addition, the DIS contributes from the defence intelligence perspective to the work of the Joint Intelligence Committee, other Government Departments, NATO and the EU Military Staff.

The DIS includes two agencies, the Defence Geographic and Imagery Intelligence Agency (DGIA) which provides imagery intelligence and geographic support and the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre (DISC) which provides intelligence and security training. Both agencies publish Annual Reports and Accounts which include Key Targets and details of performance against them in accordance with statutory requirements.

Further information about the Defence Intelligence Staff can be found on the MOD's website, www.mod.uk.

US Military Assistance

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the extent of US military assistance by forces resident in the UK to civilians in respect of (a) civil emergencies and (b) exchange and familiarisation of personnel. [74641]

Mr. Ingram: There is no formal arrangement for United States Visiting Forces (USVF) to assist United Kingdom civil authorities in respect of civil emergencies or for the exchange and familiarisation of personnel. The USVF do however respond positively to specific requests for assistance by United Kingdom civil authorities, in particular in respect of search and rescue operations.

Nuclear Testing (Kiribati)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department has given in the last five years resulting from British nuclear testing in Kiribati. [73970]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence arranged and took part in a specialist Reconnaissance Survey on Kiritimati during September 1998 to identify the types and quantities of waste materials, including an assessment of environmental risks, arising from the island's use as a base for the United Kingdom's nuclear test programme in the late 1950s and early 1960s.

A further visit was made to Kiritimati in August 2000 by MOD and independent specialists to gather further detailed information for the proposed clean-up project.

The clean-up of the waste material is to be undertaken by Contractors appointed and managed by specialists in the MOD. Preparatory work is currently underway with the actual clean-up work on site expected to start in 2003.

Wind Energy Technology

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the impact of his Department's policy on radar coverage and low flying upon the Government's policy to expand wind energy technology; and if he will make a statement. [73789]

Dr. Moonie: Ministry of Defence officials are currently involved in a steering group with the Department of Trade and Industry, Civil Aviation Authority, National Air Traffic Services and the British Wind Energy Association. The group aims to address some of the issues that lead to the MOD and others making objections to developers' proposals. The MOD is currently assisting in a DTI-sponsored project by QinetiQ to study the effects of turbines on radar.

The MOD is acutely aware of the government's stated aim to achieve 10 per cent. of the United Kingdom's energy from green sources by 2010 and makes every effort to assist in achieving this. However, the Government is also committed to maintaining flight safety and the operational effectiveness of the Armed Forces.

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many proposed windfarms have been objected to by his Department in the last two years; and if he will list them. [73342]

Dr. Moonie: Since 1 January 2000, the Ministry of Defence has objected to a total of 284 wind energy proposals, but has had no objection to over 400.

I will write separately with the list and a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he objects to windfarms only if they interfere with the operation of RAF aircraft; and whether other nations are consulted prior to entering an objection to a windfarm. [73343]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence deal with every wind energy proposal individually and all are given a full and thorough appraisal by at least seven separate Technical Advisors each with their own specialism including Radar, Low Flying, Communication Links and Met Office Radar. Other nations are not involved in the process of windfarm appraisal.

Nuclear Energy

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his Department's plans for use and development of nuclear energy facilities; and if he will make a statement. [73788]

Dr. Moonie: Plutonium is the only fissile material produced in reactors. In April 1995 the then Foreign Secretary announced that the United Kingdom had ceased the production of fissile material for explosive purposes. Ministry of Defence has sufficient stocks of plutonium (as announced in SDR) to meet foreseeable needs. The UK supports the need for a Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty which would ban the production of fissile material for explosive purposes. Chapelcross MAGNOX reactors currently produce tritium for the national nuclear deterrent. BNFL has announced its decision to close Chapelcross by March 2005. Sufficient stocks of tritium are held to meet the needs of the Trident programme. Any decision on a replacement source of tritium, should one be required, will not need to be taken for many years.

War Disablement Pensions

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people in receipt of war disablement pensions were (a) receiving income support, (b) over retirement age and (c) in full-time employment in each of the last five years. [73969]

Dr. Moonie: The Veterans Agency administers the war pensions scheme. It does not retain statistical information relating to receipt of other benefits such as income support, or to the employment status of war disablement pensioners.

The following information is available in relation to those in receipt of war disablement pension (WDP):

At 31/3/1998: 259,160 WDP in payment—187,241 aged 65 or over

At 31/3/1999: 249,344 WDP in payment—179,868 aged 65 or over

At 31/3/2000: 239,423 WDP in payment—172,030 aged 65 or over

At 31/3/2001: 222,534 WDP in payment—158,971 aged 65 or over (men)

9,088 WDP in payment—6,872 aged 60 or over (women)

At 31/3/2002: 213,353 WDP in payment—151,527 aged 65 or over (men)

8,893 WDP in payment—6,585 aged 60 or over (women)

Prior to April 2000, data for war disablement pensions paid to men and women over retirement age was not recorded separately.

Saville Inquiry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason his Department is not represented at the Saville Inquiry. [74476]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence (MOD) is not a party to the Bloody Sunday Inquiry because the MOD of today has neither a case to put nor a position to defend.

The MOD has been represented by Counsel when invited to do so by the Tribunal to give assistance on specific matters. In addition, officials from the MOD have maintained a near-permanent presence at the hearings.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) who was responsible for the storage of photographs held by the Army legal team at the Widgery Inquiry; in what conditions and where these photographs were stored; when they will be produced for the Saville Inquiry; and what further photographs of Bloody Sunday are available; [74473]

(2) if he will list the (a) cinematic, (b) heli-telly and (c) other moving image photographic film clips of events on Bloody Sunday (i) available at the time of the Widgery Inquiry and (ii) discovered since; in what conditions and where these photographs were stored; who was responsible for their safekeeping; and which of these items have been (A) produced for the Saville Inquiry, (B) lost and (C) destroyed. [74474]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence has provided the Bloody Sunday Inquiry with written statements on the subjects of photographs and film, and an official of this Department will give evidence to the Inquiry in the near future.

It would therefore be inappropriate to comment separately on these matters, and I am withholding the information requested in accordance with Exemption 4 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cost has been incurred by the legal representation of Soldier "L" at the Saville Inquiry. [74475]

Mr. Ingram: Up to 9 September 2002 the Ministry of Defence has incurred costs of £346,977.30 for the legal representation of Soldier "L" at the Saville Inquiry.

Colombia

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) service personnel broken down by regiment and (b) other members of his staff have visited Colombia; what the purpose was of each visit; and what assistance he has provided the Colombian Government in the last 12 months. [74179]

Mr. Ingram: We do from time to time send military liaison teams to Colombia to provide advice and training assistance. The nature of this advice and assistance is confidential between governments and I am withholding the details under Exemption 1 of the code of practice on Access to Government Information, which covers information whose disclosure would be harmful to national security, defence or international relations.

Alcohol and Tobacco

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the rules are governing the consumption of alcohol and tobacco (a) on military premises, (b) in administration areas and (c) on operational duties. [74164]

Mr. Ingram: Service policies are based on education and personal responsibility for alcohol consumption and smoking.

Queen's Regulations, administrative instructions and policy guidance lay down general principles for the control and consumption of alcohol. Commanding officers are required to ensure that they have clear and effective local orders concerning alcohol and that these are enforced. These cover messes, bars, clubs and single living accommodation. Particular attention is given to the law relating to young people and the legal age for consuming alcohol. Specific single-Service directions are issued concerning fitness for duty, especially for safety critical posts and other designated tasks such as flying, driving and the carrying of arms.

Instructions and guidance on tobacco consumption mainly relate to health and safety, including restrictions on smoking in the workplace and in messes and accommodation areas and of course in the vicinity of military equipment and flammable substances.

Corporal John Gregory and Sergeant Robert Busuttil

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he has made for an investigation into the circumstances of the deaths of Corporal John Gregory and Sergeant Robert Busuttil. [74163]

Dr. Moonie: An investigation into the deaths of Corporal John Gregory and Sergeant Robert Busuttil was instigated immediately after the incident. Initial reports were compiled by the Kabul Detachment of the Royal Military Police and the 32nd Section of the Royal Military Police (United Kingdom) Special Investigation Branch. The investigation is not yet complete and remains ongoing at this time.

HMS Nottingham

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a replacement ship has been sent to cover the mission of HMS Nottingham. [73703]

Mr. Ingram: A direct replacement ship will not be sent to cover the remaining parts of Nottingham's programme.

As I stated in my answer of 22 July 2002, Official Report, column 759W, to the hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) HMS Nottingham deployed for duties associated with the Five Power Defence Arrangements (FPDA) including Exercise STARDEX. She was subsequently assigned to Coalition Maritime Operations in the Middle East, and was being held at notice for this purpose while deployed to the A[illegible] Pacific region. HMS York has been nominated a[illegible]e ship held at readiness in support of the fight aga[illegible]rrorism.

RFA Diligence has been offered to take part in Exercise STARDEX, as an indication of United Kingdom's continued support to FPDA.

Nuclear Weapons

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost of procuring Trident missiles from the United States has been in each year since the procurement contract was initiated. [73558]

Dr. Moonie: The cost of procuring the Trident II (unarmed) missiles from the US under the Polaris Sales Agreement (as amended for Trident) has been as follows:

Financial Year	Amount £M
1980–81	0.023
1981–82	4.012
1982–83	8.471
1983–84	2.164
1984–85	2.009
1985–86	2.015
1986–87	0.308
1987–88	5.083
1988–89	7.368
1989–90	16.885
1990–91	28.800
1991–92	71.936
1992–93	108.132
1993–94	279.714
1994–95	188.299
1995–96	68.781
1996–97	48.140
1997–98	86.647
1998–99	79.264
1999–2000	71.524
2000–2001	53.223

Notes:
1. The final figure for 2001–2002 is not yet available.
2. Figures given are gross payments and do not take account of the credits due to the UK under the 1998 MOU to reduce the overall missile buy in accordance with SDR. These affect 2000–2001 onwards.
3. The costs cover only production costs as the UK paid no development costs for the missiles.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr Tonge) of 8 July, Official Report, column 714W, on nuclear missile defence, whether the collaborative research and information exchange will involve nuclear-based technology. [73699]

Mr. Hoon: There are no plans for this work to involve nuclear-based technologies.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total cost of deploying British personnel in the United States as a result of (a) the United Kingdom purchase of nuclear weapons from the United States, (b) the United Kingdom testing of nuclear weapons in the United States and (c) other logistical requirements, including C3 expertise, of procuring nuclear weapons from the United States has been since 1972. [73559]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom does not purchase nuclear weapons from the United States. Article 1 of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons forbids all nuclear weapon states from supplying nuclear weapons to any other state.

The remainder of the information requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under which budget headings the projected expenditure on (a) the Trident programme, (b) Nuclear Warhead Stability Review, (c) nuclear waste disposal, (d) nuclear site security and (e) remediation of radioactively contaminated land and buildings on defence nuclear sites, as listed in tables 1 to 6 of CM 5412, Ministry of Defence Expenditure Plans 2002–04, published on 9 July, will be placed. [73569]

Mr. Ingram: Projected expenditure on items (a)–(e) falls under "Provision of Defence Capability" for the Ministry of Defence Resource Budget (of which part is counted against the MOD's Departmental Expenditure Limit and part against non-cash items in Annually Managed Expenditure). Projected expenditure on items (a), (c), (d) and (e) also falls under "Provision of Defence Capability" for the MOD Capital Budget.

The majority of this projected expenditure (both Resource and Capital) falls within three of our Top Level Budgets; Commander-in-Chief Fleet, Chief of Defence Logistics and Defence Procurement Agency. However additional projected Resource expenditure also falls within Land Command, RAF Strike Command and the Central Top Level Budget for item (d).

A wide range of assets is also employed in support of these activities, covering most of the categories in Table 4.

Equipment (Heat and Desert Conditions)

Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the performance of the Challenger I tank in extreme heat and desert conditions. [74647]

Mr. Ingram: The Challenger 1 Main Battle Tank is no longer in service and has been replaced by Challenger 2.

Challenger 2 was deployed on Exercise Saif Sareea II, held in Oman last year, where it was operated in extremely hot, dry, desert conditions. Post-exercise reports confirm that the tank performed very well during the Exercise, notwithstanding the higher than anticipated usage of engine air filters. Trials of possible enhancements to reduce the effects of high concentrations of dust on the tank are currently taking place.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent progress has been made to address the problems with (a) the Challenger 2, (b) AS90 and (c) suitability of personal equipment highlighted by the Saif Sareea II exercise. [74414]

Mr. Ingram: Trials of possible enhancements to reduce the effects of high concentrations of dust on the Challenger 2 are currently taking place.

To enhance the AS90's ability to operate more effectively in desert conditions, a Desertisation Upgrade Pack is being scoped with the Design Authority.

Personnel working on Exercise Saif Sareea II preparations over the summer months were issued with desert combat boots. It was considered that regular combat boots would be appropriate, given the expected temperatures, for the main exercise phase during the autumn. Temperatures were, however, significantly higher and a useful lesson learnt has been that for future deployments, in such temperatures, it would be appropriate for all troops to be issued with desert combat boots.

Both desert and temperate camouflaged uniforms were approved for use on Exercise Saif Sareea II. Following experience in Oman and Afghanistan, we intend to determine the optimum upper temperature range for the temperate uniform.

SA80

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the SA80 rifle; and whether it will continue in service. [74083]

Mr. Ingram: The SA80 modification programme has significantly improved the reliability and performance of the weapon. Extensive trials were carried out in severe climatic conditions including the desert, the arctic and the jungle; these trials confirmed the newly modified weapon's superior capabilities. More recent trials and demonstrations in Afghanistan and Oman have established beyond doubt that the weapon is highly accurate, reliable, and that it can be effectively maintained in an operational environment.

The modified weapon, the SA80 A2, is being deployed over the period December 2001 to May 2006 and is due to remain in service until 2020.

Training Exercises

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he plans a further exercise on the scale of Saif Sareea II; and what recent exercises have taken place in different (a) geographical and (b) environmental conditions. [74415]

Mr. Ingram: We aim to hold periodic exercises on the scale of Saif Sareea II but planning for the next one is still at a very early stage. Exercises at all levels frequently take place in different geographical and environmental conditions to prepare our armed forces for the many different challenges they may face, some long planned and some at short notice. A list of the most recent exercises could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Information is only held centrally on major exercises listed in the Ministry of Defence's Defence Exercise Programme (DXP) which covers some 350 exercises each year. Examples from the DXP of recent exercises in different geographical and environmental conditions include:

Exercise name	Date	Location	Type
PANTHER CUB	Feb 02	Belize	Land Command jungle warfare training
STRONG RESOLVE	Mar 02	Norway/Poland	Tri-Service participation in quadrennial NATO LIVEX
RED FLAG	Mar 02	USA	HQ Strike Command air exercise in USA
GRAND PRIX	Mar 02	Kenya	Land Command battlegroup exercise
JOINT VENTURE	May 02	UK	PJHQ tri-Service Component Commander Command Post Exercise
STARDEX 02	Jul 02	Malaysia	FLEET exercise within Five Power Defence Agreement

MOX

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications his Department has had with the Belgian Government since March 2001 in respect of the manufacture of lead test MOX assemblies for the United States Department of Energy. [73554]

Mr. Ingram: None.

Common European Security and Defence Policy

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment he has made of the Common European Security and Defence policy. [73836]

Mr. Hoon: The European Security and Defence Policy seeks to strengthen Europe's military capabilities and to support the EU's Common Foreign and Security Policy, while enabling a better and more coherent European contribution to NATO. It gives the EU the ability to take military decisions, and to take control of crisis management operations where NATO as a whole is not engaged.

Weapons of Mass Destruction

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the threat posed to Britain by weapons of mass destruction. [73904]

Mr. Hoon: We remain concerned about the threat from weapons of mass destruction to the United Kingdom and to UK interests. We continue to monitor developments closely. The Government's dossier on the threat from Iraq's weapons of mass destruction was published on 24 September.

Although we assess that terrorists are more likely to mount conventional attacks, as long as Al Qaeda views the United Kingdom as a target, we cannot rule out the risk of a terrorist attack using chemical, biological or nuclear materials on the UK or its interests.

Army Training Estate

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the civilian recreational groups which have had access to the Army Training Estate, Salisbury Plain, since January; and if he will make a statement. [72611]

Dr. Moonie: Since January this year, the following civilian recreational groups and organisations have had access to the Army Training Estate Salisbury Plain:

Name of Group/Organisation	Activity
All Wheel Drive Club	Promotional Day/Safari
Avon Vale Hunt	Hunt
Avon & Wiltshire Shooting Club	Shooting
Barleycroft Shoot	Shooting
British Model Flying Association	Model Aircraft Flying
British Deer Society	Services Branch—Deer Management
Castle Down School	Cross Country Runs

Name of Group/Organisation	Activity
English Heritage	Ancient Monument survey/ maintenance
Mr. Flower	Seed Collection
Flying Druids Model Aircraft Club	Model Aircraft Flying
Frome & District Pistol Club	Shooting
Game Conservancy Trust	Partridge Survey
Manor Farm Leisure	Carriage Drive
Muzzle Loaders	Rifle Range practice
North Wiltshire Rifle & Pistol Club	Shooting

Warminster Running Club	Imber Half Marathon
Wessex Rifle Club	Shooting
Wiltshire & Infantry Beagles	Vermin Control
Wiltshire Archaeological Trust	Guided tour of ancient monuments
Wiltshire Wildlife Trust	Sarsen Trail & Neolithic Marathon

Veterans

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many veterans of the armed services have made applications for skilled nursing care; and how many of these have been successful in the last five years; [74252]

(2) how many veterans of the second world war have had nursing care paid by the War Pensions Agency in the last five years. [74253]

Dr. Moonie: The Veterans Agency administers the War Pensions Scheme, including discretionary payments for skilled nursing care where this is required due to disablement for which a war pension has been awarded.

The following information shows the number of applications for skilled nursing care payments made by war disablement pensioners in the last five financial years and the number of these that were successful:

Year	Applications	Successful
1997–1998	197	104
1998–1999	132	52
1999–2000	85	23
2000–2001	34	1
2001–2002	51	15
Total	499	195

Separate records are not held for Second World War veterans in relation to skilled nursing care.

Food Supplies

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the total food purchased for the armed forces in the last 12 months was purchased overseas. [73804]

Mr. Ingram: In the last 12 months, approximately 28 per cent. of the food supplied to the armed forces by the Ministry of Defence's food supply contractor, "3663," was purchased overseas. This figure includes foods that are not produced in this country and others that have to be purchased overseas for Service personnel serving abroad, due to export or customs restrictions. Of the food purchased for use in Operational Ration Packs only 14 per cent. is purchased overseas.

Annington Homes

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings in the Taunton constituency were sold to Annington Homes; when the sale took place; how many dwellings are available for married soldiers; how many have been demolished; and how many have been sold. [74090]

Dr. Moonie: 139 out of a total of 140 Ministry of Defence properties in the constituency of Taunton were sold to Annington Homes Limited (AHL), as part of the sale and leaseback of Service Families' Accommodation in November 1996. 41 of these properties have since become surplus to requirements and been handed back to AHL. 99 properties are currently available for Service families. MOD has not arranged the demolition of any properties in Taunton. The future of properties released to AHL is a matter for that company.

Defence Equipment (Israel)

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) categories and (b) quantities of defence equipment have been purchased from Israel since 8 November 2001; and if he will make a statement. [74250]

Dr. Moonie: Since 8 November 2001, a total of three contracts have been placed with prime contractors based in Israel as follows:

Category of Equipment	Quantity
Simon Rounds	20
Light Machine Guns	7
Assembly of Aircrew Equipment Assemblies	3

Sapper Alfred Graham Manship

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigation was held into the death of Sapper Alfred Graham Manship of 26 Amphibious Regiment Royal Engineers in 1992 in Osnabruck, West Germany; how long the investigation took; when the investigation ended; who conducted the investigation; what the conclusion of the investigation was; and if he will make a statement. [73822]

Dr. Moonie: The Special Investigation Branch of the Royal Military Police (SIB RMP) was responsible for investigating the death of Sapper Manship in Osnabruck, Germany, in 1992. The investigation began when the SIB RMP was informed of Sapper Manship's death in the early hours of Monday 6 April 1992 and was completed on 16 April 1992. The investigation was led by an experienced SIB RMP investigator of the rank of Staff Sergeant and, as for all SIB RMP inquiries, was overseen by the Officer Commanding the SIB RMP Detachment. The investigation concluded that there was no evidence to indicate foul play and that Sapper Manship had taken his own life.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the period of time was between the discovery of the body of Sapper Alfred Graham Manship of 26 Amphibious Regiment Royal Engineers in 1992 in Osnabruck, West Germany and (a) a doctor being called to attend the scene and (b) a doctor arriving on the scene; and if he will make a statement. [73820]

Dr. Moonie: Sapper Manship's body was discovered by another soldier at approximately 0237hrs on 6 April 1992. The emergency services were summoned and a doctor attended the scene at around 0255hrs. Sapper Manship was declared dead at the scene at 0258hrs.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the weapon of Sapper Alfred Graham Manship of 26 Amphibious Regiment Royal Engineers was found to have been fired when examined after his death in 1992 in Osnabruck, West Germany; and if he will make a statement. [73821]

Dr. Moonie: Following the certification of death of Sapper (Spr) Manship, his weapon was recovered from the scene and handed to the Class 1 Armourer at 25 Regiment Royal Engineers for examination. The practice of submitting weapons subject to investigation to qualified personnel outside the unit in whose charge they are is standard for Royal Military Police (RMP) investigations.

In the statement recorded from the Armourer, he opined that the weapon was found to be serviceable and no faults could be discovered in its mechanical function. The Armourer did not make any specific reference to whether the weapon had been fired.

RMP enquiries established that Spr Manship had been issued with an SA80 Assault Rifle, plus 30 rounds of ammunition for his guard duty. The batch number of the spent ammunition recovered from the scene was found to be that of the ammunition issued to Spr Manship. In view of this, the location of the wound site, and all other enquiries conducted, the RMP investigating officer concluded that the submission of the weapon or spent ammunition to scientific analysis would not achieve any investigative purpose and would serve only to delay the release of Spr Manship's body to his family.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the (a) cause, (b) circumstances and (c) coroner's verdict on the death of Sapper Alfred Graham Manship of the 26 Amphibious Regiment Royal Engineers in 1992 in Osnabruck West Germany. [73881]

Dr. Moonie: Sapper Manship died on 6 April 1992 from a single gunshot wound to the head whilst on guard duty at Woolwich Barracks, Osnabruck, Germany. Following the subsequent Post Mortem Examination, Sapper Manship's body was repatriated to Scotland from Germany and the Procurator Fiscal was informed of the death. Under the legislation which allows for the holding of a Fatal Accident Inquiry, the Procurator Fiscal will only hold such an inquiry where the death occurred in Scotland or on an offshore installation, aircraft or ship. Since the death did not occur within Scotland, the Procurator Fiscal did not hold an inquiry in this case; this decision was not within the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the result was of the post mortem conducted on Sapper Alfred Graham Manship of 26 Amphibious Regiment Royal Engineers after his death in 1992 in Osnabruck West Germany; and if he will make a statement. [73880]

Dr. Moonie: The Post Mortem Examination was conducted by the Consultant Pathologist at the British Military Hospital at Rinteln. On the death certificate, dated 6 April 1992, the cause of death was recorded as Gunshot Head Injuries.

European Integration Conference

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the First Conference of EU Military Schools and Academies on the theme of the military dimension of European integration, held at Coëtquidan. [73863]

Mr Hoon: The European Military Academies Conference on the theme of "European Integration—The Military Dimension" was held at the French Military Academy, St Cyr in July of this year. The conference was sponsored by the European Commission. The conference addressed a number of topics related to European Defence, such as possible crisis management scenarios and defence industry cooperation. There was no direct involvement by HM Government or the Ministry of Defence in its organisation.

The Conference was attended by delegates from many European nations including a number of officer cadets and staff from the Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst.

RAF Chilmark

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to date of ordnance clearance at RAF Chilmark; and when the site will be put on the market. [72613]

Dr. Moonie: The cost over the first five years since the closure of the site of clearing explosive ordnance has been in the region of £1.7 million. A further £371,000 has been spent on preparation of Land Quality Assessments and remediation.

RAF Chilmark is currently being prepared for disposal. It is anticipated that the sale of the freehold will take place during 2003 when clearance is complete.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in constituting a trust to manage RAF Chilmark; and if he will make a statement. [72614]

Dr. Moonie: The constitution of a Trust for that part of the former RAF Chilmark which has wildlife and conservation interest is a matter for the interested parties. The Ministry of Defence will not be part of the Trust. Defence Estates is currently in discussion with representatives of the potential Trustees and is waiting to receive their firm proposals for the purchase and management of the site.

Anti-tank Missile Loss (Bristol Channel)

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the pallet of an anti-tank missile lost in the Bristol Channel recently has been found. [73313]

Dr. Moonie: No. Searches of the area have been carried out by the Avon and Somerset Constabulary, the Coastguard, the RAF and, more recently, Royal Navy divers. However, the pallet has not been found.

Ammunition

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what type of ammunition has been imported to the UK for the use of the army, and at what cost, over the last 12 months. [73314]

Dr. Moonie: In the 12 months up to 26 July 2002, the following types of ammunition have been imported to the United Kingdom for the use of the military:

7.62mm BALL, 21mm ROCKET SYSTEM, 21mm TRAINING SYSTEM, 0.5 4B/IT, .338 LAPUA, 12.7mm 4MP, 12.7mm 1MP, 5.56mm AP, 9mm MARKER, 66mm, GOALKEEPER MPDS, GOALKEEPER FMPDS, 9mm, 66mm, .338m" and 14.5mm Artillery Training L21A1 (Charge 2).

I am withholding information regarding the cost of importing this ammunition in accordance with Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what orders were issued and special arrangements made concerning conduct of service personnel from the Royal Irish Regiment during the marching season in 2002; how many soldiers were subject to disciplinary proceedings that related to inappropriate political activity during this period; and what the outcome was of proceedings. [74162]

Mr. Ingram: Each year all service personnel serving in Northern Ireland, including members of the Royal Irish Regiment, are reminded in unit orders of the Army's policy regarding participation in political activities and demonstrations. Three soldiers were investigated by the Royal Military Police for possible breach of this policy. At present there is one soldier subject to proceedings.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the procedure is in Northern Ireland for the investigation of a suspicious death or one from non-natural causes on military premises. [74167]

Mr. Ingram: The Police Service of Northern Ireland retain jurisdiction for the investigation of all suspicious deaths that may occur on military premises within Northern Ireland. This is the same procedure and jurisdiction that applies throughout the whole of the United Kingdom.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the reasons were that underlie his decision to erect a new surveillance tower at Slievebracken Mount, Forkhill in July; what consultation he carried out with locally elected representatives and community organisations; and what the estimated cost is of this construction. [74168]

Mr. Ingram: I believe that the structure you refer to is the temporary water tower on Slievebracken Mountain, Forkhill. It was not a surveillance tower. The Ministry of Defence has crown immunity with regard to planning permission and there was no consultation carried out with locally elected representatives or community organisations. As military personnel carried out the work on this temporary structure there were no costs involved other than those for the construction materials, the cost of irrecoverable items being estimated at some £3,500.

The temporary structure has now been removed.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many baton log reports were filed in each month of the last two years; what information fields are to be filled in by each person involved in the compilation of a report leading up the chain of command to HQNI; which of those fields must be completed and which are optional; and if he will make a statement on the processes involved in the entry of data from baton log reports to (a) a centralised database and (b) other systems. [74166]

Mr. Ingram: The number of baton log reports files in each month over the last two years are set out in the table below:

	2000	2001	2002
January		0	0
April		0	3
May		0	11
June		0	17
July		1	34
August		0	18
September		3	2

	2000	2001	2002
October	0	1
November	0	9
December	0	1
Total	0	17	85

All fields of the baton log report are completed by the person ordering the firing of the baton round before it is forwarded to HQNI. The information from the baton log is scrutinised by the chain of command in HQNI and is stored in hard copy form as well as on a database.

Mobile Phones

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the rules are governing the carriage and use of personal mobile phones by service personnel of all ranks on operational duties at home and overseas; and what sanctions are available to superior officers to enforce those rules. [74165]

Mr. Ingram: There are no specific rules that govern the carriage of personal mobile phones by members of the Armed Forces on operational duties; and the use of personal mobile phones during deployments and operations is at the discretion of the local Commander. Joint Service Publication 440 details the regulations concerning the security classification of information that can be discussed on mobile phones. It also authorises commanders to prohibit the use of mobile phones on Ministry of Defence sites and in locations denoted as "Hazardous Areas" or in areas containing classified communications equipment. Additionally, although there are no specific sanctions for the misuse of mobile phones, commanders may restrict their use in a geographic location or for a specific period of time for operational reasons. The mechanism for enforcing this is through Theatre Standing Orders. Service personnel who fail to comply with published Standing Orders or with a lawful command would be subject to disciplinary action under normal disciplinary procedures, enforceable through Queen's Regulations.

Beryllium

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department had with the Department for Trade and Industry regarding the decision to license the export of beryllium to (a) India and (b) Iran in 2001. [74696]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence has regular discussions with the Department of Trade and Industry on all relevant aspects of export licensing. Disclosure of internal opinions, advice, recommendation and consultation on individual export licence issues could harm the frankness and candour of internal discussions. I am, therefore, withholding this information in accordance with Exemption 2 (Internal Discussions and advice) of Part II of the Government's Code of Practice on Access to Government information.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter of 11 September 2001 from the hon. Member for Torbay regarding foot and mouth. [58922]

Mr. Morley: I responded to the hon. Member on 7 October.

Recycling

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her latest estimate is of recycling rates of waste (a) paper, (b) glass, (c) metal, (d) wood and (e) cloth for each London borough; what the Government targets are in each case; and if she will make a statement. [71108]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: Recycling data are collected in the Department's annual Municipal Waste Management Survey 2000–01. The total tonnages collected for recycling for different materials are listed below for all London boroughs and the four London Waste Disposal Authorities. Recycling rates are not available for individual materials. Separate recycling tonnages are not available for wood.

The Government's Waste Strategy 2000 established national targets of recycling or composting at least 25 per cent. of household waste by 2005, 30 per cent. by 2010 and 33 per cent. by 2015. These targets are not material specific.

To underpin the national targets, we have set challenging statutory performance standards for recycling or composting household waste for each local authority in England. Authorities must, on average, double their 1998–99 recycling rate by 2003–04 and triple their 1998–99 rate by 2005–06.

The Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 (as amended) set annual recovery and material-specific recycling targets for certain businesses. The material-specific recycling target of 19 per cent. set for 2002 covers paper, glass and aluminium.

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: Recycling data are collected in the Department's Municipal Waste Management Survey 2000–01. Recycling rates are not available for individual materials. Recycling tonnages are not available for computers or mobile phones.

All local authorities have been set challenging individual statutory performance standards for recycling and composting. These can be found in the Government's Guidance on Municipal Waste Management Strategies, published in March 2001. Copies are available in the House of Commons Library and from the DEFRA website:

Moorings (London)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what forecasts have been made by British Waterways of the (a) number, (b) cost and (c) distribution of residential and non-residential moorings in London as a consequence of their review of licence and permit conditions. [70146]

Alun Michael: None. British Waterways' review of licence and permit conditions relates solely to vessel dimensions, the terms under which vessels may use the waterways and, where applicable, the terms and conditions of mooring.

I understand that my hon. Friend met British Waterways on 13 September to discuss these issues.

Sellafield

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what costs were incurred in (a) historic and (b) current prices in carrying out the monitoring of nuclear waste discharges to the Irish Sea from the Windscale plant. [69632]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 17 July 2002]: Monitoring of discharges is mainly the responsibility of the operator and so the majority of the costs of monitoring discharges from Windscale (which has been known as Sellafield since the early 1980s) would have fallen to BNFL and its predecessors. No information is held by the Department or by the Environment Agency about the costs of monitoring by operators.

Packaging Waste

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what her estimate is of the changes in packaging quantities on (a) food and (b) non-food goods on retail sale over the past five years; what proportion of this is recyclable; and if she will make a statement; [71113]

(2) what plans she has to reduce packaging on retail sales; and if she will make a statement. [70941]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 (as amended) include incentives for businesses to minimise the amount of packaging they use and actively encourage the reuse of packaging. Packaging which is being reused carries no obligation after its first obligated trip. By increasing the amount of packaging reused, producers are therefore able to reduce their costs of compliance. By placing a tonnage obligation on producers, the Regulations also encourage them to reduce the amount of packaging used.

In addition, the Packaging (Essential Requirements) Regulations 1997 include a requirement that packaging must be minimal subject to the safety and hygiene of the packed product to the consumer. The Regulations are enforced by local Trading Standards Officers, and two examples of prosecution under these regulations are known to the Department.

We have no detailed information on the quantity of packaging used in food and non-food goods on retail sale.

Producer Responsibility

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what her policy is regarding producer responsibility of WEEE for the EU conciliation process; [72039]

(2) how she intends to define producer responsibility for the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive to make it compatible with the producer pays principle; [72037]

(3) if she will make a statement on her policy regarding the principle of individual producer responsibility; [72035]

(4) what steps she is taking to secure well-defined individual producer responsibility for electronic waste. [72036]

Mr. Meacher: The Government welcomes the proposed EC Directive on Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment. The Department works closely with all Departments, in particular with the DTI, who lead in negotiations, on this Directive. The Directive is still under negotiation and without a final text it is too early to provide details of how it will be implemented in the UK.

The Government supports the principle of individual producer responsibility, though we believe collective responsibility should be kept open as an option where otherwise there could be disproportionate costs to SMEs. The Common position text allows a collective as well as an individual approach to producer responsibility, and both uphold the polluter pays principle.

EU Environmental Liability Directive

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment has been made of the need for compulsory insurance as part of the EU Environmental Liability Directive regime to give polluters a greater incentive to avoid environmental damage. [72493]

Alun Michael [holding answer 23 July 2002]: The European Commission's draft Directive on Environmental Liability requires Member States to encourage the use by operators of any appropriate insurance or other forms of financial security.

Compulsory insurance is one possible means of financial security and was covered by the Government's public consultation which ended on 24 May 2002, and in the extended partial regulatory impact assessment (COM (02) 17). A mechanism such as this could support both the prevention and remediation aspects of the proposed Directive, with insurers offering policies on the basis of best environmental practice. It would also ensure that a source of funding was available for the remediation of damage, should it occur.

The insurance industry has made it clear that it does not welcome compulsory insurance, but does desire a directive that is clear and workable so that cover can be offered.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the inclusion of the compliance with permit and state of the art exemptions in the EU Environmental Liability Directive. [72494]

Alun Michael [holding answer 23 July 2002]: No specific assessment has been undertaken of the inclusion of the permit and state of the art exceptions. The extended partial regulatory impact assessment submitted to Parliament (COM (02) 17) did consider the implications of removal of the permit exception, to inform the UK negotiating position in preparation for any moves by other Member States to remove it.

This assessment revealed that removal of the permit exception could have two conflicting effects: a damaging effect upon business certainty and the ability of operators to obtain financing, whilst secondly providing an incentive for operators to treat permit conditions as a minimum requirement, and therefore take further precaution in their activities to minimise their risks. By extension, inclusion of the exception could provide shareholders and operators with some confidence, but on the other hand reduce the precautionary effect.

The same considerations may be applied to the exception for compliance with state of the art.

Ragwort

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent research her Department has evaluated regarding the spread of ragwort; and what action her Department has taken to (a) combat the spread of ragwort and (b) publicise knowledge of its spread. [74397]

Alun Michael: In 2001, the former MAFF commissioned an ADAS research project to review ragwort and its control with particular reference to horses. This included a study of the factors influencing the spread of ragwort, such as changes in land use, changes in agricultural policy and climate change. The study confirmed that these factors may influence the spread of ragwort. However, it concluded that there was insufficient scientific data to allow evaluation of the extent to which the prevalence of ragwort had increased as as result of them.

Defra investigates complaints about the spread of ragwort and other injurious weeds covered by the Weeds Act 1959 where there is a threat to farmed land or land used for the keeping of horses as part of a diversified farm businesses. When a complaint is received the occupier of the land will be asked to take action to clear the weeds. If this fails to resolve the problem, Defra has statutory powers under the Weeds Act to arrange for the weeds to be cleared and to recover the cost from the occupier of the land. In the majority of cases, complaints about ragwort are resolved through co-operation and persuasion, without the need to take legal action.

The spread of ragwort along the sides of roads and on railway land is of particular concern to many people in the countryside. I have recently written to the Highways Agency, Local Government Association and Railtrack reminding them of the serious problems that can be caused by ragwort and urging them to ensure that they take effective clearance action.

This year we have also revised guidance on the Weeds Act and two updated Defra leaflets are available. "The Weeds Act 1959—Preventing the spread of harmful weeds" gives general advice about the operation of the Weeds Act and "The Weeds Act 1959—Guidance note on the methods that can be used to control harmful weeds" provides technical advice on the control of ragwort and other injurious weeds. Both leaflets can be found on the Defra website and hard copies can be obtained from Defra publications.

Ouse Flooding

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will ensure that the consultation process which follows the publication of the Ouse draft flood strategy is one which allows all sections of the community to comment. [73950]

Mr. Morley: I am advised by the Environment Agency that the Ouse Strategy has undergone a consultation process during its production, with meetings occurring with Lewes Flood Action, Residents Associations and many other interest groups. A working group was established, with representations from the communities involved, including businesses, elected members, parish councillors, flood action groups and landowners.

The purpose was to obtain advice and comments as the strategy developed, and public meetings were held in Lewes and Uckfield to facilitate this. Smaller meetings were also held with a number of other parish and residents' groups through the valley to allow for comment from other sections of the community. In addition, letters received were passed to our consultants for consideration when developing the strategy.

The Ouse strategy now includes the Environment Agency's preferred options which are believed to represent the most economical, technical and environmentally sound proposals for the catchment. It is these options that will be forwarded to the Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra) for consideration for grant aid.

Public meetings are being arranged by the Environment Agency in Lewes and Uckfield in August to explain the strategy, with further meetings to follow at parish level. There is still an opportunity to influence the strategy during the detailed design stage.

Subject to approval, the strategy will be reviewed on a five yearly basis to take account of climate change and other variables.

Sustainable Development

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what specific criteria her Department proposes for the where possible clause to become applicable within the pledge to replenish fish stocks agreed at the World Summit on Sustainable Development. [74615]

Mr. Morley: The United Kingdom attaches high importance to the commitment to restore fish stocks and will be seeking to secure this by 2015 under the Common Fisheries Policy. The wording "where possible" was inserted to meet the concerns of some parties that the objective might in some cases in other parts of the world be biologically impossible.

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how the Government plans to develop the partnership agreed at the World Summit on Sustainable Development to increase the capacity of coastal developing countries to tackle and manage their fish resources; and by which year these partnerships will need to be fully operational to help achieve the 2015 millennium development goals. [74617]

Mr. Morley: A number of local, regional or thematic partnerships were announced at WSSD which are potentially relevant to helping coastal developing countries manage their fish resources. The United Kingdom will join these partnerships where we are invited to do so and it is clear that we have a contribution to make.

The UK has been invited to join the core planning group for the "White Water to Blue water" initiative, promoted by the United States and intended to promote a cross-cutting approach to regional oceans and coastal ecosystem management in the Wider Caribbean region. Fisheries are within the scope of this work.

The UK is currently exploring how it might assist global work to protect coral reefs through the International Coral Reefs Initiative, and is supporting OSPAR (the convention for the protection of the marine environment of the North East Atlantic) in developing a partnership with the equivalent convention for West Africa. Both should contribute to helping developing countries manage fish stocks more effectively.

The Plan of Action agreed at WSSD called for action to strengthen donor coordination and partnerships to enable developing countries to develop their capacity for infrastructure and integrated management, and the sustainable use of fisheries. The UK will continue to work for this through its bilateral aid programme, through its membership of a number of regional fisheries organisations, and through partnerships with a number of UN agencies, in particular with the FAO.

While these partnerships will contribute to the elimination of poverty, they are not explicitly timed to coincide with the Millennium Development Goals.

Ecological Surveys

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what ecological surveys have been conducted by (a) English Nature and (b) his Department in respect of the sites identified for development as asylum accomodation centres to determine the presence of protected species; if the Government will publish the reports; and what further plans the Government have to commission such surveys. [74521]

Mr. Morley: I understand that there are Home Office proposals to build asylum seeker accommodation centres on surplus land at three sites; the Defence Storage and Distribution Centre near Bicester (Oxfordshire), RAF Newton (Nottinghamshire) and Throckmorton Airfield (near Pershore, Worcestershire).

It is not the Department's role, or English Nature's, to commission or undertake ecological surveys of potential development sites. As with any planning proposal, it will be for the relevant planning authority to ensure that potential impacts on protected species are identified and considered, including requiring the developer to undertake ecological surveys where appropriate.

English Nature's role is to provide advice to the planning authority and also to the developer on the nature conservation issues. With respect to the specific sites, English Nature reports that Wychavon District Council has commissioned an ecological survey of the Throckmorton site and also that English Nature staff have liaised with ecological consultants engaged on behalf of developers in respect of the Bicester site.

Where European protected species will be affected by an activity such as development works then my Department administers a licensing regime under the Conservation (Natural Habitats &c) Regulations 1994. A licence under these Regulations may be needed to allow the development works or other activity to proceed. Ecological surveys of sites are required from applicants as part of applications for such licences, in order to allow the conservation issues to be fully considered. There is no Crown immunity from these Regulations. At this point in time no applications have been received by my Department in respect of these sites.

Emergency Disposal Sites

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has made to implement the recommendation of the Anderson Committee that the question of compensation for communities accommodating emergency disposal sites should be researched. [73433]

Mr. Morley: We will examine this recommendation as part of our work to prepare a response to the inquiries carried out by Dr. Anderson and Sir Brian Follett.

Farming

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what incentive schemes are in place to (a) encourage farmers to avoid over-production, (b) increase the sustainability of farmers, (c) to make alternative use of surplus agricultural land and (d) extend the programme of crop growing for energy production. [73557]

Mr. Morley: The Government is committed to moving rapidly towards a more sustainable, competitive and diverse farming industry. Key to this is reform of the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP), where we want to phase out market price support and production controls, reduce direct payments and decouple them from production. We are also seeking to shift towards the CAP's "second pillar", expanding the opportunities available for targeted support for rural development and agri-environment schemes. In this context, we welcome the proposals brought forward by the Commission as part of the CAP mid-term reviews.

In England, the schemes covered by the England Rural Development Programme play a significant role in delivering the Government's objectives for sustainable production and land management, including those listed in the question. These schemes are the Environmentally Sensitive Areas Scheme, the Countryside Stewardship Scheme, the Organic Farming Scheme, the Hill Farm Allowance, the Woodland Grant Scheme, the Farm Woodland Premium Scheme, the Rural Enterprise Scheme, the Vocational Training Scheme, the Processing and Marketing Grant and the Energy Crops Scheme. The budget for the Programme is £1.6 billion over the period 2000–2006. Similar schemes specific to Welsh needs operate within the Rural Development Plan for Wales, the total budget for which is £450 million over the same period.

In addition, there are incentives under some of the CAP subsidy regimes to limit production, for example through livestock extensification and some schemes under the "national envelopes".

The Government is working with stakeholders to develop and deliver a new strategy for sustainable farming and food in England, to be published in the autumn, which may include further measures of this kind. The devolved administrations are pursuing their own strategies. For example, the strategy for agriculture in Wales, "Farming for the Future", prepared in association with industry and countryside interests, was published last November.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farmers have been declared bankrupt per month in each of the last 10 years; and if she will make a statement. [74188]

Alun Michael: Data are available for England and Wales only on a quarterly basis. The level of farm bankruptcies and insolvencies tends to be in the order of a few hundred a year (as at June 2002 there were approximately 210,000 main and minor agricultural holdings[1]). The annual number of total insolvencies in the last five years (1997–2001) was 240 which is nearly 40 per cent. lower than the average number in the previous 5 years (1992–1996). In 2001, the total number of insolvencies rose by 14 per cent. Quarter 1 figures are available for 2002 and show a 9 per cent. increase over the same period for 2001.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of trends in farmers' suicides in the past 12 years; and how many such suicides have taken place per month in the last 12 years. [74189]

Alun Michael: There were the following number of farmers' and farm workers' deaths classified as suicides per month in the 12 years 1989–2000 in England and Wales:

	Jan	Feb	Mar	Apr	May	Jun	Jul	Aug	Sep	Oct	Nov	Dec	Month unknown	Annual total

Figures for 2001 are not yet available.

In the Department of Health's "National Suicide Prevention Strategy for England", published in September 2002, farmers (and agricultural workers) are identified as a high risk occupational group. A suicide prevention strategy for England has been formulated by an expert advisory group through consultation with mental health professionals, researchers, survivors of suicide attempts, the voluntary sector, and others with relevant experience. The target is to reduce the death rate from suicide and undetermined injury by at least a fifth by the year 2010. The implementation plan will be the responsibility of the National Institute for Mental Health in England (NIMHE).

Prior to this, the Government launched the Rural Stress Action Plan in 2001 with the aim of working in partnership to deliver support to make a difference to those in distress in rural areas. Its objectives are:

1. building on existing partnerships, and initiate new ones where there is little provision, to bring together organisations offering a range of types of support to rural people;

2. direct assistance to farming families, both financial and practical; and,

3. effective publicity to encourage those in need to make contact with helping agencies.

I recently announced the extension of the Plan for a third year, 2002–03; in total nearly £1m of public funding has been provided. Its existence proved of great value during last year's outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease. We hope that this modest funding will go a long way to help convey the message that advice and information is available to those suffering distress in rural areas.

Common Agricultural Policy

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether steps are being taken in the context of the review of the EU Common Agricultural Policy and Structural Funds to move towards a fairer funding distribution between urban and rural and agricultural interests. [73994]

Mr. Morley: Common Agricultural Policy payments are made to producers and exporters on the basis of set eligibility criteria, regardless of whether they are from urban or rural areas. There are many traders in urban areas who receive CAP export subsidies. But by definition, the majority of recipients of direct production subsidy payments are from rural areas. Structural Funds are distributed on the basis of need: in the case of Objective 1 the criterion is an area whose population earns less than 75 per cent. of the EU average income. This applies equally between urban and rural areas.

Flood Defences

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer of 22 July 2002, Official Report, columns 704–05W, on flood defences, on what basis her Department keeps financial records for expenditure incurred on flood defences in the UK; and if she will make a statement. [73656]

Mr. Morley: Flood management is a devolved responsibility. Records are kept of grant payments (and, for local authorities, supplementary credit approvals) made by this Department directly to the flood and coastal defence operating authorities (Environment Agency, local authorities and Internal Drainage Boards) in England only. They are recorded at the level of individual payments and payee (in the case of the EA this is at Flood Defence Committee level) and the project to which they relate. It is possible to group payments, to total expenditure on a particular project, for all local authorities or on coast protection schemes for example, where the Department's payments database supports this.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (ODPM) records revenue payments made by local authorities on flood and coastal defence for the purpose of paying Revenue Support Grant—the other mechanism by which the Government provides funding for flood and coastal defence works. Neither this Department nor the ODPM categorises payments in ways that might have assisted me to answer your previous Question and neither does the main operating authority, the Environment Agency. The Department does not routinely record other expenditure (by the operating authorities or other riparian owners).

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what discussions (a) have taken and (b) are due to take place between (i) her Department and (ii) the Government and the Association of British Insurers regarding insurance of householders on identified flood plains; and if she will make a statement; [73508]

(2) what plans the Government have to assist households on flood plains to obtain insurance cover from the end of this year; and if she will make a statement; [73655]

Mr. Morley: There have been regular Ministerial and Official level meetings between Defra, Environment Agency, HM Treasury and Association of British Insurers (ABI) to address this issue. Meetings and discussions will continue over the coming months.

We continue to work very closely with the Environment Agency and ABI to build a mutual understanding of flood risk. This will help develop a shared understanding with the insurance industry of the true risks of flooding in particular areas, taking account not only of the indicative flood plain but also the current and future provision of flood defences, and help achieve the mutual aim of ensuring the continued availability of affordable flood cover as widely as possible after the end of the year.

Fisheries

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the letter of 14 August, Ref 172597/JD to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what monitoring has been done ot the safeguards in the Protocol with Mauritania to protect fish resources off the West African Coast. [74196]

Mr. Morley: The first meeting of the Joint Committee provided for under the EU/Mauritania Fisheries Protocol took place in June, at which the implementation of the new 2001/2006 Protocol during its first year was reviewed. A joint scientific working party was established to examine the state of the stocks and report to the Joint Committee before 1 November 2002.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 14 August, Ref 172597/JD, what action she has taken during discussions on the reform of the Common Fisheries Policy to seek a requirement that every bilaterial fisheries agreement should be accompanied by a rigorous stock assessment and conditional on an environmental and social impact assessment. [74197]

Mr. Morley: These are matters that we shall pursue when the Commission brings forward into the CFP reform discussions the relevant elements of its proposed Strategy for European distant-water fisheries, as foreseen in the Commission's "roadmap" communication on the reform of CFP issued on 28 May 2002.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is towards the transfer of fish from a trawler at sea onto a storage vessel for transportation to port. [73860]

Mr. Morley: The transhipment of fish stocks, subject to quota, between Community fishing vessels and receiving vessels has to be notified to the competent authorities of the Member States concerned in accordance with provisions of Article 11 of Council Regulation (EEC) No 2847/93, as amended. Separately the Receiving of Trans-Shipped Sea Fish (Licensing) Order 1982, as amended, prohibit the trans-shipment of pelagic sea fish onto non-fishing vessels within British fishery limits unless the receiving vessel is licensed. For the purposes of this Order pelagic sea fish are defined as mackerel, herring, sprats, pilchards and horse mackerel. Additionally UK fishing vessel licences prohibit the transhipment of any fish between under 10 and over 10 metre vessels.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on her policy towards inclusion of the issue of fishing quota-capping in the next InterGovernmental Conference. [73823]

Mr. Morley: Since 1 January 1999, and with the agreement of the European Commission, all vessels fishing against UK quotas have to maintain a genuine economic link with coastal communities in the UK. We have no plans to raise the issue at the next meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement on the status of negotiations on the 12 mile derogation, with particular reference to the timescale; [73870]

(2) what negotiating points have been linked to the 12 mile derogation negotiating parties. [73871]

Mr. Morley: A Council Working Group of officials from EU Member States has been meeting in Brussels to consider the Commission's proposals for reform of the Common Fisheries Policy. No one has attempted to link the 12 mile derogation to other issues.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent estimate she has made of the size of the UK fishing workforce (a) within the fleet and (b) in dependent industries. [73868]

Mr. Morley: The most recent information available on the numbers of fishermen in the United Kingdom are for the situation in 2000 as drawn from surveys carried out by the Sea Fisheries Inspectorate in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, and the Sea Fisheries Protection Agency in Scotland. The survey showed a total of 14,645 fishermen in the UK in 2001.

It is difficult to estimate the level of employment in dependent industries. This is due to it being difficult to define accurately which industries are involved, and in many cases these industries are not uniquely dependent on the fishing industry. The Department and the Sea Fish Industry Authority are currently jointly carrying out research into the relationship between jobs in fishing and jobs in the rest of the UK economy, with the results expected to be available within the next two to three months.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many UK fisheries vessels there are in each port of anchorage; and what proportion of them are foreign-owned. [73869]

Mr. Morley: At 30 June 2002 there were some 7020 licensed UK fishing vessels. Comprehensive information about the beneficial ownership of UK fishing vessels is no longer maintained. However it is estimated that some 117 vessels are wholly or partly foreign owned. A significant proportion of the fleet is nomadic and it is not practical to break down the above numbers in terms of ports of anchorage.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total tonnage was of the (a) white water and (b) blue water fishing fleet of the UK in (i) 1972, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 2002; how many vessels there were; and how many personnel were employed at sea. [73858]

Mr. Morley: The information requested, where available, is given in the table below. The white water fleet has been taken as those UK fishing vessels that are 10 metres or less in overall length, with the blue water fleet taken as those UK fishing vessels greater than 10 metres overall length. Data on the numbers of fishermen is not available in terms of type of vessel, only on the basis of those employed full time or part time, which is given in the table.

Available vessel data for 1972 are not comparable with data for later years. Statistics for the active fleet in 1972 understate the overall size of the fleet; the registered fleet exceeded the active fleet by about 3,000 vessels in 1990 when the earlier statistical series was replaced. Similarly, the basis used to measure the tonnage of vessels in 1972 (Gross Registered Tonnage) is not comparable with that used in later years (Gross Tonnage), and generally results in smaller estimates of the tonnage of vessels.

Consultancies

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list external (a) public relations/communications companies, (b) advertising and marketing companies, (c) management consultancies, (d) accountancy companies, (e) banking firms, (f) individual consultants and (g) other specialist consultancies used by her Department since June 2001; what actions those consultancies/companies have performed within her Department; and what costs have been incurred through use of these consultancies/companies. [74684]

Alun Michael: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 23 July 2002, Official Report, column 916W.

	1972[1]	1997	2002
Tonnage (at 1st January)[2,3]:
Vessels less than 10 metres	n/a	20,095	19,768
Vessels greater than 10 metres	278,000	254,390	243,206
Total UK fishing fleet	n/a	274,485	262,974
Numbers of vessels (at 1st January)[2]:
Vessels less than 10 metres	3,785	6,091	5,713
Vessels greater than 10 metres	2,286	2,576	2,008
Total UK fishing fleet	6,071	8,667	7,721
Personnel employed at sea during the year[4]:
Full time	17,898	14,832	11,923
Part-time	4,115	3,772	2,722
Total numbers of fishermen	22,013	18,604	14,645

Notes:

[1] Estimates for 1st January 1972 relate to the active fishing fleet, while those for 1st January 1997 and 2002 relate to the registered fishing fleet.

[2] Data for 1972 relate to vessels below and above 40ft in length (12.2 metres).

[3] Data for 1997 and 2002 relate to the Gross Tonnage of registered fishing vessels as reported to the European Commission under the Multi Annual Guidance Programme for the structure of the UK fishing fleet. The data available for 1972 related to Gross Registered Tonnage of active fishing vessels, which is not comparable. Data for vessels below 40ft in length are not available.

[4] The information given in the column for 2002 relates the numbers of fishermen in the year 2001.

Refrigerator and Tyre Disposal (Cambridgeshire)

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what funding arrangements have been proposed to deal with disposal in the county of Cambridgeshire of (a) refrigerators and (b) tyres. [74222]

Mr. Meacher: We have announced a further £40 million for local authorities to cover the costs of fridge disposal this year. This is in addition to £6 million already allocated for the last financial year. It is not possible to provide a meaningful allocation for each authority. It is intended that £40 million will be distributed later this year through the Special Grant system.

The Landfill Directive is due to ban the disposal of tyres to landfill from mid-2006 by which time alternative ways of handling those tyres currently landfilled will need to be in place. At present 30 per cent. of used tyres are landfilled. However, the Government is supporting a number of research and development studies aimed at developing end markets for used tyre products which should become commercially available before the ban comes into effect. We do not anticipate, therefore, an additional burden on local authorities.

Domestic Energy Efficiency

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the target is for domestic energy efficiency improvements. [74227]

Mr. Meacher: The UK Climate Change Programme envisages savings of carbon emissions from domestic energy efficiency measures of up to 5 million tonnes a year by 2010.

The Government has announced its intention to produce a Domestic Energy Efficiency Strategy to ensure delivery of these savings and work on this is being taken forward in the context of the production of the Energy White Paper, which the Government aims to publish around the turn of the year. The White Paper will also address the recommendation of the Performance and Innovation Unit's Energy Review that Government develop energy efficiency targets for each sector of the economy, including a 20 per cent. improvement in domestic energy efficiency by 2010.

Domestic Waste

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what was the total tonnage of domestic waste collected in the last recorded 12 month period. [74575]

Mr. Meacher: Figures from the Defra Municipal Waste Management Survey show that in 2000–01, 25,109,000 tonnes of household waste were collected in England.

Farm Tenancies

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will publish the agendas and minutes for meetings of the cross-departmental working group in fiscal arrangements for farm tenancies. [73912]

Mr. Morley: The Department does not routinely publish minutes of cross departmental meetings such as those held to discuss fiscal measures affecting farm tenancies. Any requests for the release of this information will be dealt with in accordance with the Government's Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (Second Edition, 1997) and the Freedom of Information Act when it comes into force.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the cross-departmental working group on fiscal arrangements for farm tenancies has been established. [73911]

Mr. Morley: Tax is a matter for the Chancellor of the Exchequer and all parts of the tax system are kept under review as part of the Budget process. Cross departmental discussions on the tenancy related fiscal measures mentioned in the Policy Commission report on the Future of Farming and Food and the Plymouth University Report on the Agricultural Tenancies Act 1995 have taken place. Further discussions will take place as appropriate prior to the publication of the Government's strategy for sustainable food and farming in the autumn, which will include a full response to the Policy Commission recommendations.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress is being made to allow farm tenants greater flexibility to diversify their income-earning activities on farms that they rent. [73910]

Mr. Morley: The report of the Policy Commission on the Future of Farming and Food recommends that Defra should revisit the definition of agriculture used in tenancy legislation and suggests a broader definition might remove a potential obstacle to business development. The Government is keen to ensure that the legislative framework governing farm tenancy arrangements does not act as a barrier to tenant farmer participation in diversification activities. We are therefore considering this recommendation carefully and the conclusions reached will be made known in the autumn when the Government publishes its strategy for sustainable food and farming, incorporating a response to the Policy Commission's recommendations.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress is being made in addressing issues relating to the Agricultural Tenancies Act 1995, with particular reference to section 4 of that Act. [74047]

Mr. Morley: The Plymouth University Report on the Agricultural Tenancies Act 1995 made a number of recommendations involving section 4 of the Agricultural Tenancies Act 1995. These recommendations are currently being considered in parallel with the tenancy related recommendations made by the Policy Commission on the Future of Food and Farming. The Government's approach to the recommendations made in both reports will be clarified when the strategy for sustainable food and farming, incorporating the response to the Policy Commission's recommendations is published in the Autumn.

Farming (EU Grants)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what proportion of UK farmers received European Community grants of over (a) £100,000 and (b) £500,000 per annum in each of the last five years; [73980]

(2) what proportion of UK farmers received European Union grants of under £10,000 per annum in each of the last five years; [73864]

(3) what proportion of UK farmers do not receive European Union grants. [73865]

Mr. Morley: The following table gives the numbers of addresses in England to which the specified levels of direct payments under the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) have been made in the last three years. Earlier figures are not readily available. We cannot estimate precisely the number of farmers who do not receive payments. The payment of CAP grants in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the devolved authorities. Farmers may also have received European Union grants under non-agricultural programmes.

CAP Financial Year	Addresses to which payment was made of
	£1 to £99,999	£100,000 to £499,999	Over £500,000
1998–1999	63589	61	3
1999–2000	58238	1933	34
2000–2001	63497	1822	29

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total sum of grants by the European Union to farmers was in (a) the UK and (b) other EU member states in the last year for which figures are available. [73859]

Mr. Morley: The United Kingdom received €4,058.9 million from the European Union under the Common Agricultural Policy during its 2000 financial year. The other Member States received the following:

Country	Euro (millions)
Austria	1,018.5
Belgium	954.7
Denmark	1,305
Finland	727.5
France	8,982.2
Germany	5,641.7
Greece	2,597.1
Holland	1,396.5
Ireland	1,678.3
Italy	5,031.1
Luxembourg	20.6
Portugal	651.9
Spain	5,469.3
Sweden	798

These figures include both direct aid and market support. Nearly all of the direct aid will have gone to farmers. Much of the market support expenditure will in the first instance have been paid to traders.

Organic Action Plan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how she will measure the success of the Organic Action Plan; and what funding is being made available for the introduction of the Organic Action Plan. [73355]

Mr. Meacher: The Group that drew up the Action Plan and, from April 2003, the Advisory Committee on Organic Food and Farming will draw up and publish detailed criteria for measuring the success of the strategy for developing a sustainable organic food and farming sector in England. Funding for the changes to the Organic farming Scheme to provide for payments for five year agreements and other measures such as marketing, processing and training will come from the England Rural Development Programme. In addition £5m has been set aside over the five years beginning in 2003/2004 for the purpose of providing a grant to the organic industry to support its research priorities through the LINK programme.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much was spent by the Government on foot and mouth preparations and exercises in (a) 1998, (b) 1999 and (c) 2000. [73803]

Mr. Morley: Information on the costs of foot and mouth preparations and exercises is not available. The contingency plan for foot and mouth disease approved by the EC includes a requirement that each Animal Health Divisional Office has a local contingency plan. At February 2001, 19 of the 23 divisional plans had been updated in the previous year. In addition, these offices are required to hold at least one simulation exercise and to review staff training on dealing with disease outbreaks each year.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps have been taken to vaccinate against a future foot and mouth outbreak. [73887]

Mr. Morley: Routine vaccination to protect against future outbreaks of Foot and Mouth Disease is currently prohibited in the EU and neither the Royal Society nor the Lessons to be Learned Inquiries recommended it. This was also the view reached by the International Conference on Prevention and Control of FMD, held last December.

The Government is currently considering the recommendations of the Royal Society and Lessons to be Learned Inquiry Reports into the 2001 outbreak. We will take these recommendations into account when deciding what role vaccination may play in future outbreaks and what future research and development requirements are. These Reports will inform our preparation for discussions in the EU on a new FMD Directive later this year.

Emergency vaccination during a future outbreak is not ruled out, and it remains an option as part of the disease control strategy. Future scientific advances may allow vaccination a larger role and we are committed to funding research into the use of conventional vaccines to control FMD. We are currently developing more comprehensive contingency plans and field instructions for emergency vaccination and will engage stakeholders in future vaccination discussions.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations her Department made to the Commonwealth for assistance from veterinary experts during the foot and mouth epidemic. [73862]

Mr. Morley: Under the current International Veterinary Reserve Agreement (IVR), participating countries have agreed to provide veterinary assistance in the event of serious notifiable disease. The agreement was initiated in the very early stages of the foot and mouth outbreak. All countries covered by the agreement, some of which are members of the Commonwealth, participated in the eradication of foot and mouth.

Discussions were also held with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Subsequently, Embassies assisted with the identification of suitable veterinary candidates.

The Chief Veterinary Officer (CVO) also wrote to all EU Member States seeking assistance from suitable veterinary staff.

Cameraria Ohridella

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the spread of Cameraria Ohridella; and what action her Department is taking. [74199]

Mr. Morley: I indicated in the answer I gave the hon. Member on 26 February 2002, Official Report, column 1198W, that it was considered highly likely that the Horse Chestnut Leaf Miner (cameraria ohridella) would spread to Britain. In July it was confirmed that the moth is now present in parts of Wimbledon. We have conducted a joint survey of the area and surrounding local Boroughs, and the Forestry Commission has placed baited pheromone traps at selected ports and towns in the south of England. So far the moth appears to be confined to the Wimbledon area but further spread is considered inevitable.

The Commission has alerted Tree Officers in the London Boroughs and it has distributed its "Exotic Pest Alert" publication describing the moth and showing the symptoms to look for. Trees will look unsightly following defoliation by the moth, but they will recover.

An EU research programme is underway which includes work to try to develop practical control methods. Forestry Commission scientists are in regular contact with the scientists in this programme and are also carrying out their own studies.

Agricultural Workers

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment her Department have made of the effect of the Communities Vibrations Directive on working times for the agricultural workforce; if such an analysis was made at the time of initial discussions in the Working Group; what cost-analysis took place prior to final agreement; and if she will make a statement. [73824]

Mr. Morley: The Physical Agents (Vibration) Directive is a health and safety measure which is designed to protect workers from diseases such as vibration white finger and back pain. The Directive was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 21 May 2002. The Health & Safety Executive (HSE) took the lead on behalf of the UK Government in negotiating the terms of the Directive.

The HSE carried out a Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA) (including a cost/benefit anaysis) as soon as the German Presidency presented the proposal for this Directive in January 1999. The RIA considers the impact of the Directive on UK industry as a whole.

This was updated in January 2001 after political agreement was reached in Council. Copies of the RIAs are available in the House of Commons Library.

The UK has played a leading role in maintaining the Common Position on the terms of the Directive in the face of more restrictive amendments proposed by the European Parliament. As a result the terms of the Directive should allow farm workers to use their tractors for at least 7 to 8 hours each day. Furthermore the provision allowing exposure to Whole Body Vibration (WBV) to be averaged over a 5 day period should allow one or two long days to be offset by low exposure on rest days. In addition the WBV exposure limit value for farmers will not come into effect until 2014—12 years time. The long transitional period should allow equipment design to be improved and old equipment to be replaced.

Plastic Bags

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answers to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) of 30 April 2002, Official Report, column 665W, what conclusions she has reached on the assessment of the effect of a plastic shopping bag levy on litter and waste reduction and on consumer behaviour. [73975]

Mr. Meacher: Work on the plastic bags issue continues within the Department and we are not yet in a position to reach conclusions. Also, the Performance and Innovation Unit (PIU) has decided to include the plastic bag tax and related issues in its wider review of waste strategy. It will therefore feature in the PIU, report, due out later in the year and the work carried out in the Department will help inform the report.

Organic Produce

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many litres of organic milk were produced in the UK last year. [73315]

Mr. Meacher: It is estimated that around 200 million litres of organic milk were produced in the UK during the year to end March 2002.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many organic producers there were in the UK in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02. [73316]

Mr. Meacher: As at 31 December 2000 there were 3,563 organic producers in the UK. As at 31 December 2001 there were 3,981.

Sheep Exports

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what report was made by her official who travelled on board the ship with the sheep which were sent from Dover to the Continent on 15 July; and whether the Dutch authorities have confirmed that the sheep were transported in accordance with the route plan submitted to her Department. [73696]

Mr. Morley: The report records that the overall journey was satisfactory and there were no adverse comments in respect of animal welfare. We have taken account of the practical experience gained from this first consignment when considering futher Route Plans.

The Dutch authorities have reported that the animals were either transported directly for slaughter in France or rested in the Netherlands before transport to slaughter in Italy.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs in respect of the health certification carried out on the three consignments of live sheep exported from Dover to continental Europe on 21 July, how many of the sheep were rejected as unfit for the intended journey; where those sheep were taken; what problems were found in respect of the animals; what action was taken in respect of these problems; and what final destination address was given on the route plan for each of the consignments. [73695]

Mr. Morley: In respect of the three consignments of sheep exported on 21 July, no animals were rejected on inspection as unfit for their intended journey. The sheep were transported from approved assembly centres in North Wales and Kent via Dover and Holland to three EU approved slaughterhouses in France.

Domestic Waste

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what tonnage of the domestic waste collection was reused as a raw material in the manufacture of (a) plastic, (b) glass, (c) paper and (d) board in the last recorded 12 month period. [74573]

Mr. Meacher: This information is not available.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what external advice she received regarding a duty on her to fund policies and programmes as a result of the requirement for her to have a 30 per cent. improvement in domestic energy efficiency as a principal aim under Part 1 of the Home Energy Conservation Bill; whether this advice suggests it would be within the terms of the Bill to make progress towards improving energy efficiency by (a) introducing new regulations and (b) energy efficiency programmes funded by bodies other than the Government; if she will place the advice in the Library; and if she will make a statement; [71006]

(2) what external advice she has received regarding burdens placed on local authorities by Part 1 of the Home Energy Conservation Bill; if she will place this advice in the Library; and if she will make a statement; [70950]

(3) what external advice she has received regarding the compatibility of a requirement for her to have a target as a principal aim when making decisions, as included in the Home Energy Conservation Bill and a requirement to meet that target as a statutory duty; if she will place this advice in the Library; and if she will make a statement. [71005]

(4) when the hon. Member for Mid Bedfordshire will receive answers to written parliamentary questions 70950, 71005 and 71006, tabled for answer on 19 July. [74577]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 July 2002]: The Government has not sought any external advice on these matters. However, I am aware that the Bill's promoters sought legal advice on whether having a 30 per cent. improvement as a principal aim would have conferred a lesser obligation than a statutory duty to achieve this level of improvement, and whether it would have imposed any legal requirements on the Government to fund new obligations on local authorities.

We have received our own advice on the implications of having a 30 per cent. improvement in domestic energy efficiency as a principal aim in this Bill. These implications, including those for the Government and local authorities of any energy efficiency targets that the Secretary of State might set, how targets might be achieved, any constraints this might place on local authorities and the potential role of other energy efficiency programmes, have, of course, been discussed with other Government Departments. The Government is committed to funding fully the cost of any new obligations placed on local authorities, although this is not a legal obligation.

The Department has also received correspondence setting out a wide range of views on this and other aspects of the Bill, including from the Local Government Association, local authorities, trade associations, energy efficiency and fuel poverty groups and members of he public.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much of the total tonnage of waste was collected for recycling in the last recorded 12 month period; and what proportion of that was from (a) domestic and (b) industrial sources. [74576]

Mr. Meacher: Figures from the 2000–01 Defra Municipal Waste Management Survey show that for England, the latest tonnages of waste of municipal waste collected for recycling or composting were 3,442,000 tonnes, 2,812,000 of which was from household sources.

The proportion of household waste that was recycled or composted was 10 per cent.

Figures from the 1998–99 Environment Agency National Waste Production Survey, the most recent available, show that for England and Wales, 22,100,000 tonnes of industrial waste were recycled or re-used. The proportion of industrial waste recycled or re-used was 44 per cent.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much tonnage was collected from segregated domestic waste broken down by (a) paper, (b) plastic, (c) glass and (d) metals in the last recorded 12 month period. [74574]

Mr. Meacher: Figures from the 2000–01 Defra Municipal Waste Management Survey show that for England, the following segregated household waste were collected for recycling:

Material recycled	Tonnages collected	As a percentage of total household waste
Paper and card	910,000	3.6
Plastics	13,000	0.1
Glass	396,000	1.8
Scrap metal, white goods and cans	336,000	1.3

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what tonnage of collected segregated waste has been (a) landfilled and (b) fly-tipped in the last recorded 12 month period; and what proportion this is of the total waste collected. [74572]

Mr. Meacher: This information is not available.

Timber

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measurements she uses to monitor the change in levels of use of sustainable timber in public buildings. [74604]

Mr. Meacher: The Sustainable Development in Government report, which replaces the Greening Government reports and is due in November, is intended to give information on the levels of timber and timber products supplied from legal and sustainably managed sources. The Government's future performance and contribution to sustainable development (including procurement) will now be monitored under the Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate—the main vehicle for systematically assessing, managing, reporting and improving performance in operational areas.

Defra also commissioned consultants in October 2000 to undertake a timber scoping study to help buyers more effectively implement the Government's commitment actively to seek to procure its timber and timber products from sustainable and legal sources. Their findings are now being considered in the light of the reports published by the Environmental Audit Committee in July and by stakeholders at an open meeting on 2 September. The policy does not extend beyond central Government, but Defra Ministers and officials have been promoting it to the wider public sector.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the steps that are taken to ensure that only sustainable timber is used on public projects. [74603]

Mr. Meacher: Several of the Government's furniture suppliers are switching to certified timber sources as a result of the Government's policy on timber procurement (28 Jul 2000, Official Report, column 947W), the inclusion of these requirements in Departmental contracts and the work of public bodies such as NHS

Purchasing and Supply Agency. The Office of Government Commerce is reviewing its existing guidance and project management services contracts to draw attention to the Government's policy. Defra has also commissioned consultants to undertake a timber scoping study to help buyers to implement the commitment more effectively. The report on this study addresses, for example, the issue of assessing the credibility of suppliers' claims on the source of the timber supplied and the provision of expert help for buyers. A copy of the scoping study report is on the Tropical Forest Forum's web site. Look in Forum activities/Trade/ Timber Trade at http://www.forestforum.org.uk.

Birds

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment she has made of the change in the numbers of birds; and what steps are being taken to encourage the growth of the songbird population. [73556]

Mr. Morley: The Department annually monitors the numbers of a whole range of birds, including songbirds, through the Breeding Bird Survey. This survey, conducted and funded jointly by the British Trust for Ornithology, the RSPB and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, assesses trends in the numbers of common species of birds across the country. A range of other surveys, funded by these organisations, assesses trends in scarcer species. Annual reports are produced for each of the surveys, but summary information derived from them is contained in the report The State of the UK's Birds 2001, which was published on 7 August.

It revealed:

Long term trends show that approximately 34 bird species including the buzzard, sparrowhawk, green woodpecker and the blue tit have increased between 1970 and 1999.

Most species of common bird have shown short term increases between 1994 and 2000.

The report also showed that over the period 1970 to 1999 19 species, including the marsh tit, have declined by more than 50 per cent.

Twelve further species have showed a moderate decline of between 25 and 49 per cent., including the dunnock and the lapwing.

Steps are being taken to encourage a growth in songbird numbers through Biodiversity Action Plans, for species such as Skylark, Stone Curlew, Nightjar, Corn Bunting, and Song Thrush;

Agri-environment schemes, which are currently being reviewed: these provide significant funding for promoting environmentally sustainable farming practices; more than £1 billion has been made available for the seven-year period 2000 to 2007.

Regulatory Impact Assessments

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the regulatory burdens that would arise from the implementation of European Commission Draft Instrument 7396/02, dated 21 March 2002, concerning the control of high-activity sealed sources; and if she will place in the Library a copy of the regulatory impact assessment in the Library. [73553]

Mr. Meacher: The European Commission has made a proposal for a Council Directive on the control of high activity sealed radioactive sources, which is under discussion in Council working group. The department is currently carrying out an initial Regulatory Impact Assessment to gauge the potential costs and benefits of implementing the current draft of the Directive. This is expected to be ready in the autumn and will be provided to the European Scrutiny Committee. I shall also place a copy in the Library.

Horticulture Research International

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement about the future financing of Horticulture Research International. [74660]

Mr. Morley: Horticulture Research International (HRI) is undergoing a Quinquennial Review of its performance, organisational status and relationship with Defra. The Review Team's report was published on 23 September. Stakeholders have been invited to provide comments on the report by 18 November before Ministers take final decisions about HRI's future, including its funding arrangements. These decisions will also be informed by further analysis of the financial implications of implementing the Review Team's recommendations.

Countryside Agency

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures are being taken to ensure that the Countryside Agency's rural proofing checklist (a) is available to Government Departments and (b) informs policy decisions. [73989]

Alun Michael: The Countryside Agency's rural proofing checklist was launched in April 2001. At the time it was published in hard copy as well as published on the Countryside Agency's website. Copies were circulated round all Government departments, and promoted throughout departments by the Countryside Agency and staff in departments themselves. This is an ongoing process, with continuing liaison between Government departments and both the Countryside Agency and the Department. The Countryside Agency is currently revising the checklist and this will be published shortly, with a further promotion across Government.

The ongoing process of monitoring and evaluation that leads to the publication of the Countryside Agency's annual reports on rural proofing is the principal way to ensure that the checklist is used to inform policy decisions, and leads to rural solutions and outcomes. The continuing close liaison mentioned above also keeps the checklist at the front of policy makers minds, and the Cabinet Sub-Committee on Rural Renewal discusses such issues regularly.

French Beef

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer of 23 July 2002, ref 70633, if she has applied to the European Court to intervene in the case. [73698]

Mr. Morley: Once the Commission has lodged the case with the European Court of Justice, the Court will invite member states to apply to intervene. This stage has not yet been reached.

NFU

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations he has (a) received from and (b) made to the NFU; what was discussed; and when the next meeting will take place. [73842]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, along with other members of her Ministerial team, have regular contact with the NFU to discuss a wide range of issues.

Curry Report

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) which Curry Commission recommendations will be implemented; [72456]

(2) what percentage of her budget increase will be spent on the implementation of the Curry Commission's report; [72455]

(3) when she will outline the new strategy for sustainable food and farming in England; [73749]

(4) what specific reforms in line with the Curry report she estimates will be made possible by the Comprehensive Spending Review. [73779]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 26 March a series of early actions as a first step towards implementing the Policy Commission's report. A new Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food in England will be launched in the autumn. This will incorporate a response to all of the Policy Commission's recommendations and include details of a range of policy measures.

The recent Spending Review settlement demonstrates the Government's commitment to delivering on the vision identified in the report, providing the resources to address the Commission's core recommendations, including those aimed at improving the competitiveness of farming and the food chain and enhancing the ability of farming to deliver environmental benefits.

From our increased post-Spending Review budget of around £2.8bn p.a., more than £500m will be made available for investment in sustainable farming and food over the three years of the Spending Review. This includes an increase of £200m in 2005–06, which will allow full roll-out of an entry-level agri-environment scheme in that year, following successful pilots.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps are being taken to support the dairy industry. [73756]

Mr. Morley: The dairy sector is supported at a European level by the Common Organisation of the Market for Milk and Milk Products. Recognising the difficulties caused for many dairy farmers by the current low price of milk, the Government has worked within this framework to back measures taken in Brussels to support EU Markets and encourage exports.

Bovine TB

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the negotiations between the Government and outside contractors regarding the backlog of cattle TB testing. [73731]

Mr. Morley: TB testing is carried out by the State Veterinary Service (including Local Veterinary Inspectors); there are no plans to change these arrangements. Contractors are being employed to help with the survey of badgers killed in road traffic accidents and negotiations are continuing with contractors over reducing the backlog in "TB99" epidemiological questionnaires.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what she estimates the total cost has been of Bovine TB testing delays to farmers. [73837]

Mr. Morley: A formal assessment of the cost to the farming industry of the delays in testing for bovine TB has not been carried out.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to pay more than market value for cattle compulsorily slaughtered under TB control measures. [73733]

Mr. Morley: There are no plans to pay more than the market value for cattle compulsorily slaughtered under TB control measures.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what cost analysis has been undertaken to assess how much the delays in testing for Bovine TB have cost the farming industry. [73840]

Mr. Morley: A formal assessment of the cost to the farming industry of the delays in testing for bovine TB has not been carried out.

Farming and Food Commission

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the Policy Commission on the Future of Farming and Food; and what progress they have made since their formation. [73736]

Mr. Morley: The Policy Commisison on the Future of Farming and Food was set up in August 2001 to advise the Government on the creation of a sustainable, competitive and diverse farming and food sector in England. The Policy Commission presented its report to the Prime Minister and Secretary of State in January 2002, after which its work ceased. The Government welcomed the report, supported its broad analysis and conclusions and will publish a response in Autumn in the context of a new strategy for sustainable farming and food.

Agricultural Development Scheme

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the eligibility requirements are of the Agricultural Development Scheme; and what will be the number and value of the grants distributed. [73757]

Mr. Morley: The eligiblity criteria are set out in the guidance notes for the scheme. In summary, projects must concern the organisation, promotion, encouragement, development, co-ordination or facilitation of the marketing of produce and not be eligible for aid under another grant scheme. Only non-capital expenditure can be grant aided, up to a maximum grant of £0.5m and a maximum grant rate of 50 per cent. Grant can only be awarded for "additional" activities (i.e. the applicant must demonstrate that the project would not take place without grant—or would only proceed on a significantly smaller of slower scale).

The number and value of grants will be decided in the light of the quality of applications received and the resources available, within the overall limits on individual projects summarised above. The resources available will be determined as part of our planned strategy for sustainable food and farming.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the priorities are of the new Agricultural Development Scheme. [73758]

Mr. Morley: The priorities for the Agricultural Development Scheme are:

Co-operation/ collaboration benefiting primary producers;

Benchmarking and spread of best practice;

Assurance schemes; and

Projects opening up new markets, for example, using crops for raw materials for industry.

Other projects will also be considered

Radioactive Materials

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the European Council Resolution 2002/C119/05 on the establishment of national systems for surveillance and control of the presence of radioactive materials in the recycling of metallic materials in member states, in respect of its application to the United Kingdom. [73555]

Mr. Meacher: Most of the Resolution's proposals are already covered by existing UK legislation, including the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 (as amended) and the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1999. Many of the measures proposed in the Resolution are mirrored in the draft Euratom High Activity Sealed Sources Directive, which is currently being negotiated.

The UK INTERPOL Environmental Crime (Radioactive Substances) Sub-Group (UKIECG), which is chaired by the Environment Agency, addresses the issue of illicit trafficking of "orphan" radioactive sources. The Environment Agency is also working closely with the metals recycling industry and with regulators in other countries on the issues covered by the Resolution.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much (a) low level, (b) intermediate level and (c) high level radioactive material was in storage in each year from 1973 to date. [73947]

Mr. Meacher: The information requested requires the interrogation of several past UK Radioactive Waste Inventories and I will write to the hon. Member with the details in due course.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with (a) the nuclear industry and (b) other departments regarding the safe disposal of nuclear waste. [74593]

Mr. Meacher: In a letter sent to all MPs on 29 July, my right hon. Friend, announced the results of the recent consultation on radioactive waste management and set out the next steps of the programme, including a review of all management options for intermediate and high level waste.

With this in mind, the Department plans to continue its frequent meetings with relevant stakeholders and interested parties, including the NGO's, technical and scientific experts, public engagement specialists and industry representatives, to discuss the issues at hand. This continual input, together with the information gathered from the four research projects that were run during the consultation period (which all involved a wide range of contacts, including stakeholders and the general public), should help formulate a successful programme.

The Department is also in daily contact with other Government Departments and the devolved administrations on this issue.

Carcase Burial Site, Petrockstowe

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, if she will state, in relation to the carcass burial site at Ash Moor, Petrockstowe, (a) what the level of water table is below the surface of the land and (b) whether a microbiological study has been conducted into the use of the land for the burial of animal carcasses; if she will publish the environmental impact and risk assessments for the site and list the recommendations they made; which legal requirements were complied with before construction of the site started; what has been (i) the cost of work to date and (ii) the continuing cost of upkeep; what additional cost will be incurred if the site is brought into use for the burial of animal carcasses; and if she will make a statement. [10735]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 29 October 2001]: pursuant to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Torridge & West Devon on 7 November 2001, Official Report, column 301W. My answer referred to EA authorisation under regulation 18(3)(a) of the Groundwater Regulations 1998 granted on 12 April 2001. (construction at Ash Moor started on 20 April 2001). This was incorrect. The construction at Ash Moor started on 9 April 2001. The rest of the Answer remains correct.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes of 12 June, concerning drugs and the broiler chicken. [71274]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 July 2002]: I responded to the honourable member on 15 September.

TREASURY

E-Government

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a progress report on the Customs and Excise interactive data input and editing system for traders and if he will make a statement. [74780]

John Healey: The business requirement for an interactive data input and editing system has been included within the scope of the HM Customs and Excise e-Business Programme, to simplify the current technology and business processes. It represents better value for money for government while ensuring that businesses, including those involved in intra-Community trade, are offered simpler and more convenient ways to transact.

Intrastat Supplementary Returns can already be filed electronically and the new, flexible infrastructure will include technology to improve risk-based assurance of data and reduce the costs of compliance to a whole range of businesses. This will ensure that Customs and Excise is more responsive, agile and better able to meet its customers' needs.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish outturn figures for the pilot system for VAT declarations over the Internet; and if he will make a statement. [74777]

John Healey: The pilot system for making VAT declarations over the Internet ran from March 2000 to April 2001. Around 1,100 businesses used the service out of 2,500 businesses invited to do so.

The electronic VAT return (EVR) system went live in April 2001. Around 400 of those on the pilot system joined the live system. There are currently 4,250 businesses registered to use EVR. Of these approximately 2,700 actually use it.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what evidence was presented by Customs and Excise officials to the Bank of England on 19 September 1988 that Manuel Noriega had been using the Bank of Credit and Commerce International to launder money; [74516]

(2) if he will disclose the names of those officials attending a working lunch on 19 September 1988 between Customs and Excise and Treasury officials; and if he will make a statement. [74517]

John Healey: Information relating to matters which are currently the subject of, or directly connected with, court proceedings are exempt from disclosure under Exemption 4 (Law enforcement and legal proceedings) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Global Poverty

Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what progress was made on tackling global poverty at the recent G8 summit; [73665]

(2) what progress is being made through the World Bank and the IMF in tackling (a) global poverty and (b) land reform in developing countries. [73662]

John Healey: At the G8 Summit, in June, progress was made towards a more coherent approach to tackling global poverty. In particular, members welcomed the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD). The G8 undertook to establish enhanced partnerships with African countries whose performance reflects the NEPAD commitments. This will focus efforts on countries that demonstrate a political and financial commitment to good governance and the rule of law, investing in their people, and pursuing policies that spur economic growth and alleviate poverty. The G8 will match African countries' commitment by promoting peace and security in Africa, boosting expertise and capacity, encouraging trade and direct growth-oriented investment, and providing more effective official development assistance. In addition, the G7 agreed in June to contribute their share of an extra $1 billion to finance the shortfall in the HIPC initiative.

At the Annual Meetings of the IMF and World Bank in September, further progress was made. In particular, the IMF reaffirmed its role in helping poor countries address the challenge of meeting the Millennium Development Goals by supporting economic reforms aimed at accelerating growth and reducing poverty. The Fund recognised that there may be a need to consider mobilising new resources if high demand for concessional financing continues, and stressed the importance of sound macroeconomic frameworks that can respond flexibly to changes in the external environment; identifying ways to encourage higher and sustainable growth; good governance; improving public expenditure and financial management systems; and using poverty and social impact analysis more systematically, and building country capacity in this area. In addition, the Bank and Fund reaffirmed the commitment to implement the HIPC initiative and finance it fully to help countries overcome the burden of unsustainable debt.

At the Development Committee meeting of the World Bank, commitments were made towards better coordination and cooperation amongst development partners and by effective alignment of donor support with country strategies. Members recognised the need for more intensified efforts to harmonise operational policies and procedures of bilateral and multilateral agencies, at both institutional and country levels, to enhance aid effectiveness and promote greater ownership by developing countries. The Bank and other donors committed to further action in streamlining their policies, procedures and requirements over the period leading to the high-level forum scheduled in Rome in February 2003 and beyond. Members also requested the Bank and Fund to report back to them at next year's Spring Meetings on pragmatic and innovative ways to enhance the participation of developing countries in international institutions, and thereby to strengthen international dialogue.

Improving tenure security and access to land through appropriate land reform is a key element of the World Bank's Rural Development Strategy. Secure tenure and shelter for the poor are also important components of the Bank's urban programmes. The Bank is supporting land reforms in Latin America; throughout Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union; and in Asia, efforts appear to have been generally most effective in relation to poverty reduction. The Bank is preparing to re-engage with land reform in Africa (Ghana, Malawi, Niger, South Africa and Uganda).

The Department for International Development (DFID) is actively engaged with the World Bank in Africa to improve the effectiveness of Bank operations in land reform. In the other regions DFID seeks to support and improve the impact of World Bank interventions at policy level and through complementary support to development partners. The Bank is in the final stages of completing a major review of its work on land reform, to be captured in a Policy Research Report. DFID have contributed to the process, seeking to strengthen the linkage of Bank lending for land reform with improved livelihood opportunities for the poor and with nationally owned poverty reduction strategies.

Early Leavers

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with other departments on reducing (a) its level of early retirements and (b) the number of people leaving early on sickness or ill health grounds. [73713]

Mr. Boateng: (a) There has been no discussion with departments about reducing early retirements or ill-health retirement for the various public service groups. However, a recommendation in the report of the Treasury led review of ill-health retirement in the Public Sector (published in July 2000) was that high level targets should be set challenging employers to reduce ill health retirement by 2005 to a level consistent with or better than those at present achieved by the best quartile of employers.

(b) There is no centrally held data about people leaving early on sickness or ill health grounds. The monitoring of people leaving early on sickness or ill health grounds is a matter for the sponsor departments of the various public service groups.

Commemorative Coins

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans Her Majesty's Government have for the issue of commemorative coins next year. [74806]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Her Majesty The Queen has been graciously pleased to approve my recommendation that the following commemorative coins should be issued in 2003:

a crown piece of five pounds face value to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of her Coronation;

a two-pound coin to mark the fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of the structure of DNA;

a fifty pence coin to mark the hundredth anniversary of the formation of the Women's Social and Political Union.

Collector versions of these coins will be released early next year at a premium above face value and, during the course of the year, the coins will be also become available at face value from banks and post offices.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the performance and role of the Financial Services Authority over the last 12 months. [73738]

Ruth Kelly: The FSA is obliged under the terms of the Financial Services and Markets Act (2001) to produce an annual report assessing performance against its statutory objectives of maintaining confidence in the financial system, promoting public understanding of the financial system, securing an appropriate degree of protection for consumers and reducing the potential for financial firms to be used for financial crime. It is through this mechanism that the FSA is primarily held accountable to Ministers and Parliament.

The annual report for 2001/02 was published on 20 June 2002 (I refer you to my answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Ms. Follett) 20 June 2002, Official Report, column 454W) and Section 6 reports on performance against the statutory objectives. Copies of the report were supplied to the Treasury Committee and copies are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 20 June 2002 Official Report, column 447W, if he will set out the Financial Services Authority's proposed powers post-2004 in relation to the regulation of mortgages and general insurances. [74241]

Ruth Kelly: On mortgages, the Government published proposed powers for the Financial Services Authority (FSA) on 8 August. These can be obtained from the Treasury website www.hm—treasury.gov.uk. The Government will shortly be publishing for consultation draft legislation setting out FSA powers in respect of general insurance mediation.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what methodology was used to determine the targets in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [73770]

Mr. Boateng: The methodologies used varied between departments and targets.

Liabilities Insurance

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what Government assistance is available to companies that find it difficult to get affordable liabilities insurance. [74446]

Ruth Kelly: The Government is working with trade associations, insurance bodies and organisations such as the Federation of Small Businesses to try and maximise the availability of affordable cover.

The key to securing affordable liability insurance over time will be improving the risks posed by companies—particularly in terms of health and safety for employees and the public.

Child Poverty

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what recent discussions he has had with the (a) public, (b) private and (c) voluntary sectors in combining the effort to end child poverty; [74425]

(2) what progress has been made on the commitment to end child poverty; what resources have been devoted to this commitment; and what achievements have been made; [74424]

(3) what plans he has to introduce standards against which the progress of the policies to end child poverty can be measured. [74426]

Dawn Primarolo: The government has made a commitment to reduce the number of children in low-income households by at least a quarter by 2004, as a contribution towards the broader target of halving child poverty by 2010 and eradicating it by 2020. ("Low income" is defined as having an equivalised household income of less than 60 per cent. of median income).

Progress will be reported against the 1998–99 baseline figures of 4.2m children after housing costs and 3.1m children before housing costs. Between 1997–98 and 2000–01 the number of children in low-income households fell by 300,000 after housing costs and by 400,000 before housing costs. So we are a third of the way in a third of the time towards meeting the 2004 target.

By April 2003 the government will be spending £8 billion more on support for children each year, in real terms, than in 1997.

Low income is of course central to poverty. But poverty of opportunity is also important. In Opportunity for All, the government's annual anti-poverty report, we report progress in tackling poverty and social exclusion against a range of indicators. In April 2002 the Department for Work and Pensions launched a consultation exercise to debate the best way to measure poverty in the long-term. Academics and representatives from the voluntary and community sectors and local government all actively engaged in the debate. Results of the consultation will be published after a full analysis of the responses and technical implications.

In working towards the common goal of eradicating child poverty within a generation, my right hon. Friend has had numerous discussions with representatives from all sectors. Only through a genuine partnership can we ensure that children and young people are given every opportunity to progress in life.

Our strategy document, Tackling child poverty—giving every child the best possible start in life, stresses the importance of voluntary organisations in the pursuit of our long-term goal of poverty eradication. The Chancellor also meets ministers from the devolved administrations to consider joint or coordinated action, and exchange information and best practice in tackling child poverty and social exclusion in deprived communities. And the Government is pursuing contacts with the financial sector in efforts to tackle financial exclusion.

Pension Tax Reliefs

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the most recent annual cost was in tax forgone of superannuation and other pension tax reliefs; and what proportion of this was to the benefit of higher-rate taxpayers. [74644]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the cost of tax relief on pension contributions are contained in table 7.9 of Inland Revenue Statistics. The latest version is on the Inland Revenue website:
http://www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/pensions/p__t09__1.htm

Of the estimated £6.4bn relief on contributions by employees and the self employed in 2001–02 around £3.7bn is in respect of higher rate taxpayers and on employer contributions of the total of £9.5bn around £5.4bn is in respect of higher rate employees.

The employers' component is estimated on the basis that under present arrangements, employer contributions are not taxable as a benefit in kind of the employees. The estimates assume that the proportion of total employers' contributions relating to higher rate taxpayers is the same as that observed for employee contributions. It is not possible to apportion the other elements of the total cost of tax relief between higher rate taxpayers and others.

Estimates are provisional and based on the Survey of Personal Incomes 1999–2000.

Benefits in Kind

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield of extending the base of employees' national insurance contributions to benefits in kind; and if he will make a statement. [74120]

Dawn Primarolo: Replacing the Class 1A National Insurance contributions liability paid by employers on benefits in kind, with a Class 1 liability paid by employees and employers would raise around £150 million for 2002–03, rising to £150 million for 2003–04. These estimates do not make any allowance for changes in behaviour.

PEPs

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the total annual cost to PEP investors of the reduction in the dividend tax credit in April 1999 in each subsequent financial year; [74493]

(2) how many (a) general and (b) single company PEP plans were in existence in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02; and how many UK individuals had investments in PEPs in each year; [74488]

(3) what estimate he has made of the average annual cost to (a) each PEP plan and (b) each PEP investor of the reduction in the dividend tax credit to PEPs in April 1999 in the financial years (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02. [74492]

Dawn Primarolo: In respect of PEPs, the reduction in the rate of the dividend tax credit is estimated to have saved around £200m in each of the years 1999–00 to 2001–02. Reliable estimates of the number of plans and UK individuals holding plans, and hence of the average cost, are not available from adminstrative data.

Tobacco

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what target Customs and Excise has set for illicit market share in the tobacco market by 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [74773]

John Healey: Customs aim to reduce the market share of smuggled cigarettes to 20 per cent. by 2003–04. This target was published in the Tackling Tobacco Strategy in March 2000, a copy of which can be found in the Library of the House and in Customs' Public Service Agreement for 2001 to 2004.

Customs' aim is to reduce the market share of smuggled cigarettes to 17 per cent. by 2005–06. This target has been published in Customs' Public Service Agreement for 2003 to 2006.

VAT Fraud

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the National Audit Office will be invited to review the methodology for calculating VAT missing trader fraud; and if he will make a statement. [74127]

John Healey: The NAO commented on the steps that Customs have taken to measure the stock of fraud in their Audit of HM Customs & Excise under Section 2 of the Exchequer & Audit Departments Act 1921 which was published on 13 February 2002. Discussions about the approach and timing of a specific review of the methodology for calculating VAT missing trader fraud are underway.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many suspect VAT registrations have been refused under the programme to counter VAT missing trader fraud; how many missing trader registrations have been identified and cancelled since August 2001; what the value is of total injunctions secured since August 2001 against missing traders; and if he will make a statement; [74128]

(2) if he will provide an update of his November 2001 estimate of the cost of VAT missing trader fraud; and if he will make a statement; [74130]

(3) what estimate he has made of the (a) percentage and (b) absolute reduction in VAT missing trader fraud since September 2000; and if he will make a statement. [74129]

John Healey: Details of the size of this form of fraud and operational activities to tackle it were first set out in the "Tackling Indirect Tax Fraud" document published at the time of the November 2001 Pre Budget Report, and will be updated on a routine annual basis in line with the commitments made in that document.

Mapeley Steps Ltd

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the financial benefits accruing to the Inland Revenue as a result of the tax status of Mapeley Steps Ltd; [74490]

(2) what revenue the Treasury has received as a result of the decision to sell Inland Revenue buildings to Mapeley Steps Ltd and what was the value of alternative bids received; [74487]

(3) when (a) he and (b) the Paymaster General were informed of the decision to sell Inland Revenue buildings to Mapeley Steps Limited; and when he was informed of the announcement by the Inland Revenue that the company was based in Britain. [74489]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise "STEPS" competition was announced in August 1998. The two Departments' contract with the Mapeley consortium was signed on 6 March 2001 after a full procurement exercise.

A joint Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise press release dated 9 March 2001 inadvertently referred to assets being transferred to Mapeley Ltd, a UK registered company, rather than Mapeley STEPS Ltd which is registered in Bermuda. Subsequently, a separate press statement has corrected this. Ministers were not aware of the registration of Mapeley STEPS Ltd at the time of the March 2001 press notice.

The STEPS contract with the Mapeley consortium provided for the payment of £220 million to the Departments together with a further £150 million to be reflected in lower service prices. Details of the rival bids are, as is customary, commercially confidential. However, the competition to establish which bidder offered best value for money included rigorous examination of all factors relevant under the appropriate UK and European rules. By convention, the tax affairs of individual companies are not disclosed to Ministers. No separate assessment has been made of the effect of the tax status of Mapeley STEPS Ltd.

Strikes

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if she will state the (a) number and (b) percentage of days lost to strike action in the (i) private sector and (ii) public sector in each year since 1997. [74385]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tim Yeo, dated 15 October 2002:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question about the number of days lost due to industrial action in the private and public sector each year since 1997. (74385)

There are no statistics specifically for the public sector but figures on the public administration; education and health industries provide most of the information on the public sector as it is today. In the table below the data for these sectors Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) 75, 80 and 85 are presented alongside data for the rest of the economy.

Working days lost due to UK labour disputes

	Public administration education and health industries SIC 75, 80, 85		Rest of Economy
	No of days lost 000's	% of total days lost	No of days lost 000's	% of total days lost

2001	331	63	194	37

Employment (Scotland)

Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were estimated to be (a) employed and (b) unemployed in (i) Paisley North, (ii) Renfrewshire and (iii) Scotland in each of the last two years. [73671]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mrs. Irene Adams, dated 15 July 2002:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about employment and unemployment in Scotland. (73671)

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) compiles statistics for employment and unemployment from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) following the internationally standard International Labour Organisation (ILO) definitions. For parliamentary constituencies, the LFS provides estimates of employment and unemployment rates, but not levels. However, the survey sample size is too small to provide reliable estimates of unemployment for Renfrewshire Unitary Authority or Paisley North constituency.

The ONS also compiles statistics of claimants of unemployment-related benefit. The claimant count consists of all people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance credits at Employment Service local offices. They must declare that they are out of work, capable of, available for and actively seeking work during the week in which the claim is made.

The attached tables give information from the LFS and claimant count. Labour market statistics are published in the monthly Labour Market Statistics First Release and on the Nomis® database, both of which are available in the House of Commons library.

Public Service Agreements

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the data on (a) outputs and (b) resources underlying the report in the Customs and Excise Spring 2002 report (Cm 5427) on PSA 2000 target; and if he will make a statement. [74782]

John Healey: I have done so.

Death Certificates

Mr. Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy for the time of death to appear on death certificates. [73419]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Heath, dated 15 September 2002:

As National Statistician and Registrar General, I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the time of death appearing on death certificates. (73419)

Generally, it would not be possible to record the time of death on death certificates accurately. In many cases the doctor who certifies the death may not be with his patient when they die and therefore would not know the specific time of death. The relative who registers the death also may not be able to say precisely when the death occurred.

Mr. Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to require practitioners completing death certificates to include illnesses for which there is medical evidence rather than clinical suspicion. [73420]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Heath, dated 15 October 2002:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the requirements of medical practitioners completing death certificates to include illnesses for which there is medical evidence rather than clinical suspicion. (73420)

Medical practitioners are required to certify the cause of death for patients under their care. Current legislation requires them to "sign the certificate in the prescribed form stating to the best of his/her knowledge and belief the cause of death". Guidance issued to doctors asks that they describe the cause of death as fully and accurately as possible. They should describe the sequence of diseases or injuries which led to the death, and other conditions which may have contributed to it. These guidance notes follow the recommendations of the World Health Organisation.

There is considerable interest in death certification at present. The Fundamental Review of the Coroner Service has recently published a consultation document on possible changes to the way in which deaths should be investigated and certified. This can be found at http://www.coronersreview.org.uk/, or a paper copy requested from The Review of Coroner Services, 100 Pall Mall, London SW1Y 5HP. The closing date for responses is 22 November 2002. In addition, the Office for National Statistics will be consulting on modernisation of the civil registration system during 2003. Any future changes to death registration will also need to consider the recommendations that will come out of the Shipman Inquiry.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many transsexual people have applied to have their birth certificates changed since the European Court of Human Rights ruling on 11 July on the case of Goodwin and I v. UK. [73917]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Kidgell to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 15 September 2002:

The National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales has been asked to reply to your recent question on the number of transsexual people who have applied to have their birth certificates altered following the ECHR ruling in the case of Goodwin and I v. UK. I am replying in his absence. (73917)

The number of applications received at the end of September is 101. This excludes 2 requests from people born in Scotland which were referred to the Registrar General for Scotland.

Customs and Excise Reviews

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he expects to complete Her Majesty's Customs and Excise reviews of the compliance costs of (a) excise gambling regimes, (b) customs procedures for international trade, (c) hydrocarbon oils, (d) alcohol duties and (e) tobacco duties; and if he will make a statement. [74131]

John Healey: Work on the studies into the compliance costs of excise duties and international trade is not complete yet. The findings will be considered and used to formulate future policies and procedures when they become available.

Bank of England

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the legal consequences of the vacancy for the deputy governorship of the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement. [74119]

Ruth Kelly: There were no legal consequences of the brief vacancy for the post of Deputy Governor for Financial Stability.

Inheritance Tax

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost of the inheritance tax cultural exemption scheme; and if he will make a statement. [74121]

Dawn Primarolo: About £8m in 2001–02, including the value of objects accepted in lieu of tax and net of relief clawed back which was previously given under inheritance tax or its predecessors.

Drugs

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the total quantity of Class A drugs targeted on the UK for financial year 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [74778]

John Healey: The National Criminal Intelligence Service United Kingdom Threat Assessment of Serious and Organised Crime 2002, estimates that in the region of 30 metric tonnes of heroin and up to 40 metric tonnes of cocaine are smuggled into the UK each year. There are no estimates for other Class A drugs such as ecstasy.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place the results of the research programme on the dynamics of the UK and international drugs market undertaken by Customs and Excise in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [74779]

John Healey: This research programme resulted in a number of confidential threat assessments which are covered by Exemption 2 (Internal discussion and advice) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and it would not be appropriate to publish them. To the extent that the information is publishable it is contained in the National Criminal Intelligence Service Threat Assessment of Serious and Organised Crime 2002, to which HM Customs and Excise contributed. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions (a) ministers and (b) Treasury officials have met Mr. Patrick Butcher, former Finance Director of London Underground, since 1997; and what was discussed at each meeting. [74444]

Mr. Boateng: Treasury Ministers and officials meet a wide variety of people to discuss a wide range of issues.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average annual salary was, broken down by region and industry in the last 12 months. [73963]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Bill Wiggin, dated 15 October 2002:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the average annual salary by region and industry. (73963)

Endowment Policies

Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many complaints of mis-selling of endowment policies by independent financial advisers have been made to the FSA in the last three years. [73666]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 17 July 2002, Official Report, columns 335–336W to the hon. Member for Angus (Mr. Weir).

Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the proportion of people with endowment mortgages who have policies which are unlikely to pay the original sum borrowed. [73664]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 24 June 2002, Official Report, column 707W to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Mr. Lucas).

Tax Credits

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the tax credit advertising campaign outlined in the Treasury press release dated 16 September is expected to cost, broken down into the costs of each element of the campaign. [74726]

Dawn Primarolo: On 16 September the Inland Revenue launched a multi-media campaign to raise awareness of the changes to tax credits. This advertising campaign aims to encourage claimants of the existing tax credits and potential new claimants to make an application for Working Tax Credit, Child Tax Credit or both. The advertising in this launch phase is expected to run until March 2003.

Expenditure on advertising is currently estimated to be as follows

Television	± £6 million
Radio	± £0.7 million
Press	± £2 million
Online	± £0.3 million
Total	£9million

Note:
All figures are inclusive of VAT

Other elements of the campaign include direct mailings to existing tax credits claimants, and a response line set up to handle telephone calls prompted by the advertising. The final cost will depend on the number of reminders issued and the demand for the response line.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which tax credit application forms (a) are available on the internet for download and (b) can be filled in on a computer screen; and how many electronic application forms have been submitted over the internet for each relevant tax credit during the last 12 months. [74728]

Dawn Primarolo: Claim forms and guidance notes for the Children's Tax Credit can be downloaded from the Inland Revenue's website at www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk.

For the new Child Tax Credit and Working Tax Credit, people can find out whether they qualify, get a detailed calculation and claim online at www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/taxcredits.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of (a) the new tax credit claim pack being sent to existing WFTC/DPTC and children's tax credit claimants and (b) other information available to prospective claimants, including leaflets NTC/1 and NTC/2. [74725]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue began issuing claim packs to existing recipients of Working Families' Tax Credit, Disabled Person's Tax Credit and Children's Tax Credit in mid August. The pack contains six separate items;

A covering letter

The Working Tax Credit and Child Tax Credit Claim form

The notes to accompany the form

A publicity insert giving an overview of the timing and the process of making a claim

A leaflet from the Financial Services authority giving advice on bank accounts

A pre-paid return envelope

Other information for prospective claimants is as follows

Web-site

Comprehensive information is available on the Internet at www.inland revenue.gov.uk/taxcredits.

Leaflets and Posters

An introductory leaflet which sets out basic information on Child Tax Credit and Working Tax Credit will be made available to prospective claimants. This will be followed by a more detailed leaflet. Leaflets will be produced in Welsh and will be available in large print, audio and Braille. Summary information will also be made available in Bengali, Cantonese, Greek, Gujarati, Hindi, Punjabi, Turkish, Urdu and Vietnamese.

A range of A3 posters, one of which will be available in the languages above, are available to raise awareness of the changes and to promote some of the elements of tax credits, for example, help with childcare costs.

Information packs have been sent to individual members of the House of Commons, The Scottish Parliament and the devolved assemblies. Copies of the claim pack, the information pack the leaflets and posters will be placed in the Library.

Paisley, North

Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are benefiting from (a) working families tax credits and (b) children's tax credits in Paisley, North. [73663]

Dawn Primarolo: For the number in receipt of the working families' tax credit, I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Jarrow (Mr. Hepburn) on 16 January 2002, Official Report, column 293W. Information about the children's tax credit (CTC) is not available by constituency. However, the number of families eligible for the CTC in Scotland is estimated to be 400,000.

Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of this Department's measures to tackle poverty in Paisley, North. [73661]

Dawn Primarolo: Poverty is a complex multi-dimensional issue, affecting many aspects of children's lives—including income, health, housing, the quality of their environment and opportunities to learn. There is therefore no single measure of the number of families with children that have moved out of poverty in the Paisley North constituency.

However, it is possible to provide figures for take-up of some measures aimed at those on low-incomes for which my Right Honourable friend's departments are responsible. In February 2002 there were 1,888 Working Families Tax Credit recipients in Paisley North, compared with approximately one thousand Family Credit recipients in May 1997. In February 2002 there were 57 Disabled Person's Tax Credit recipients in Paisley North, compared with 22 Disability Working Allowance recipients in May 1997.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to refocus the work of HM Customs and Excise, Cowes; and what he means by the term refocusing. [73915]

John Healey: Customs plan to deploy their law enforcement resources on the Isle of Wight more proactively, unpredictably and productively across a wider area to focus more on the serious threats from drugs and cigarette smuggling and from oils, alcohol and tax fraud.

Broadband

Brian White: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in centralised procurement of broadband networks for Government use. [71401]

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in centralised procurement of broadband networks for Government use. [71405]

Mr. Boateng: My hon. Friend, the Minister of State for e-Commerce and Competitiveness at the Department of Trade & Industry announced on 26 June the letting of framework agreements by the Office of Government Commerce (OGC) to enable the public sector to buy broadband services more effectively; and the setting up of a Regional Broadband Unit.

The frameworks procurement is underway and contracts are expected to be awarded next spring. The Regional Broadband Unit will be operational in November 2002. As part of the Unit, an OGC team will provide procurement assistance to the public sector. In addition, a DTI team of regional broadband advisors will ensure that public sector broadband procurement has the maximum impact on regional economic development.

Euro

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with representatives in local government on the subject of preparing for entry into the euro. [73711]

Ruth Kelly: Treasury Ministers have regular discussions with representatives from all parts of Government and such discussions cover a wide range of issues.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues on preparing for entry into the euro. [73710]

Ruth Kelly: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has regular discussions with representatives from all parts of Government and such discussions cover a wide range of issues.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to recharge each department for the costs of possible entry into the euro. [73709]

Ruth Kelly: There are no plans to recharge departments for the costs of a possible euro entry.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the cost of preparing for entry into the euro for (a) central Government, (b) local government, (c) business and (d) the UK economy. [73712]

Ruth Kelly: It is not possible to estimate the cost of an introduction of the euro.

The cost of a changeover would depend on the timing, the overall approach and individual management decisions.

Details of preparations in the public sector for a possible UK entry into EMU may be found in HM Treasury's Sixth Report on Euro Preparations published in July.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his Department has started the assessment of the five economic tests for membership of the euro; and if he will make a statement. [73976]

Ruth Kelly: The Government has said that it will complete an assessment of the five economic tests within two years of the start of this Parliament. The assessment has not yet started, but the necessary preliminary analysis—technical work that is necessary to undertake the assessment within two years as we promised—is underway.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will place in the Library a document in respect of all acts of Parliament placing powers and obligations on Her Majesty's Government and other parties in the United Kingdom whose functioning would be affected by United Kingdom accession to the European currency, indicating in each case the section of each act concerned and that of the respective legislative instrument of the European Union; [74117]

(2) if he will list each new obligation which would apply to the Government and others in the United Kingdom, on adoption of the Euro as a currency, stating in each case the treaty together with the party to which it would apply. [74118]

Ruth Kelly: If Government, Parliament and the people—in a referendum—decide to join a successful single currency, the transfer of legal responsibility for monetary policy to the European Central Bank would entail changes to the domestic legislation of the United Kingdom governing the formulation and conduct of monetary policy, at least to the extent necessary to ensue compatibility with the EC Treaty and the Statute of the ESCB.

The provisions of the EC Treaty and the Statute of the ESCB which would then become applicable to the United Kingdom are referred to in paragraphs 3 to 9 of Protocol (No 11) to the EC Treaty (on certain provisions relating to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland). In addition, legislation adopted under Article 123.5 of the EC Treaty would make the provisions necessary to enable the United Kingdom to move to the final stage of economic and monetary union.

Import Duties

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue that would be lost to Her Majesty's Government if HM Customs were no longer able to stop any British citizen returning to the UK with cigarettes and alcohol on which no tax had been paid. [74343]

John Healey: Customs and Excise make no estimates of the potential loss of excise revenue if Customs were no longer able to stop British citizens returning to the UK with alcohol and tobacco products.

Government Accounts

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will bring forward proposals on who should sign the whole of Government accounts; and if he will make a statement. [74124]

Mr. Boateng: The first whole of government accounts, covering the results and financial position of central government for the year ending 31 March 2004, should be published in early 2005.

The Financial Reporting Advisory Board will be consulted in 2003 on who should sign the accounts.

Pension Schemes

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discount rate is used for public sector pension schemes in the accounts published for financial years (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [74126]

Mr. Boateng: The discount rate for valuing the liabilities of defined benefit public service pension schemes in their accounts for 2000–01 and 2001–02 was set at 3.5 per cent per annum net of changes in retail prices. Bodies in the wider public sector which fall outside the Resource Accounting framework made disclosures using discount rates determined under accounting standards SSAP24 or FRS17 as appropriate.

Income Tax

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the full year yield of a 50 per cent. tax rate on (a) gross incomes and (b) taxable incomes of more than £100,000 a year for financial years, (i) 2002–03 and (ii) 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [74132]

Dawn Primarolo: The full-year effects of making the changes are set out in the table.

	Income tax yield in 2002–03 (£ billion)	Income tax yield in 2003–04 (£ billion)
(a) 50 per cent. rate for gross incomes over £100,000	4.0	4.5
(b) 50 per cent. rate for taxable incomes over £100,000	3.9	4.3

The estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and are consistent with the April 2002 Budget. These estimates exclude any behavioural response to the tax change.

Diesel

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he had made of the quantity of red diesel consumed at United Kingdom airports; and if he will make a statement. [74122]

John Healey: No information is currently available on which to make such an estimate. However, from 1 April 2003, as part of the package of measures announced in Budget 2002 to tackle oils fraud, those dealing in red diesel (rebated gas oil) and kerosene will need to register with, and provide certain information to, Customs and Excise about the supplies they make. While the main purpose of gathering this information is to help Customs target fraudsters, it will also provide management information about supplies and consumption trends generally.

Banking Services (Rural Areas)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to ensure that banking services are available to those living in rural areas. [73987]

Ruth Kelly: Innovations in the financial services industry are providing new products and varied delivery channels to increase consumer choice in banking services. However, specific groups can still be vulnerable to financial exclusion and that is why the Government is involved in a number of initiatives aimed at increasing access to financial services. Rural areas in particular should benefit from a programme of work to deliver banking services through the Post Office. A number of banks already have agency agreements with the Post Office, allowing their customers to withdraw cash and make deposits at post offices—an extension of the coverage of banks and services provided is planned. The development of universal banking services at the Post Office, from April 2003, will also significantly increase the accessibility of banking services.

Productivity

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent assessment he has made of the trends in productivity growth; and what the latest productivity growth figures are. [73746]

John Healey: The Government's most recent assessment of trends in productivity growth was set out in Budget 2002 (HC 592) and the accompanying paper "Trend Growth: Recent Developments and Prospects". We will publish an updated assessment in this year's Pre-Budget Report.

Latest figures show whole economy productivity picked up strongly and grew at above trend rates between the first and second quarters of 2002, with output per job rising by 0.7 per cent and output per hour rising by 1.1 per cent.

Mortgages (Dual Rates)

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to require mortgage lenders who operated a dual rate to compensate borrowers who took out loans at the higher rate. [74762]

Ruth Kelly: It is for the Financial Services Authority (FSA) to consider any wider implications of decisions taken by the Financial Ombudsman Service (FOS), whether on dual interest rates or in other areas of its responsibility.

Equitable Life

Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to make an announcement on the Penrose report into the affairs of Equitable Life Assurance; and if he will make a statement. [74465]

Ruth Kelly: The Penrose Inquiry is independent of the Government and the timetable for conducting the Inquiry is a matter for Lord Penrose. No deadline for reporting has been set. The Inquiry's remit covers a long period of time and the issues involved are both broad and complex. A firm deadline was therefore felt to be an inappropriate constraint on the range and independence of the Inquiry.

Lord Penrose has, however, made it clear that he is keen to ensure that the Inquiry proceeds as quickly as possible consistent with rigorously establishing the facts, producing an authoritative account and thoroughly identifying the lessons to be learnt.

I look forward to receiving the report of Lord Penrose's Inquiry as soon as he is able to complete it.

EU Tax Harmonisation

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the economic impact on the UK of the harmonisation, in the EU, of taxes on diesel fuel at current fuel prices and taxation levels. [73825]

Dawn Primarolo: The European Commission has recently published a proposal to introduce a single harmonised diesel duty rate for commercial users of 350 euros per thousand litres of diesel in 2010. The proposal also sets out transitional regimes in the interim period. If this proposed duty rate were applied now, it would cost at least £2 billion a year in revenue. The Government will make it clear that we see no reason for a harmonised diesel duty rate.

Financial Aid

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been paid in (a) subsidies, (b) grants, (c) tax reliefs and (d) other financial aid to (i) the farming industry, (ii) other rural recipients, (iii) the black community and (iv) the gay community in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [74613]

Mr. Boateng: Government support for the farming industry, rural communities, black communities and gay communities takes a variety of forms and a full breakdown in the format requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

However details on subsidies received by the farming sector are published in Agriculture in the UK 2001 (available in the Library of the House). In 2001–02 public expenditure to the agricultural sector in the UK under the Common Agricultural Policy and national grants and subsidies was £5.3 billion. This includes £2 billion on foot and mouth compensation payments and associated disposal costs.

Details of the costs of the main tax reliefs can be found in table A3.1 in the Financial Statement and Budget Report 2002, (also available in the Library of the House). We are unable to analyse the cost of tax reliefs in the format requested.

Nuclear Industry

Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer against which departmental budget the funding for the proposed Liabilities Management Authority, set out in CM 5552, Managing the Nuclear Legacy, will be attributed. [73564]

Mr. Boateng: The costs will fall to the Department of Trade and Industry's budget.

Public Servants

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received regarding the level of salaries of public servants; and what the outcomes were of those representations. [73835]

Mr. Boateng: Although we receive some representations, it is for employers across the public sector, including departments individually within the civil service, to determine the level of salaries for their own staff. We would expect to make that point in response.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what role economic incentives have in respect of the targets in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [73769]

Mr. Boateng: Departments decide how to provide the right incentives to ensure delivery of their targets, as part of the delivery planning process.

Frozen Assets (Madagascar)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assets are held in the United Kingdom by (a) the Government and (b) other public authorities based in Madagascar; on what grounds action has been taken to freeze such assets; what mechanisms are available for concerned parties to (i) make representations and (ii) appeal against his action; and what action has been taken by other European Union countries against accounts held by authorities in Madagascar. [74158]

Ruth Kelly: No assets held in the United Kingdom by the Government or other public authorities based in Madagascar have been frozen. Actions taken by other European Union countries are a matter for their Governments.

Census (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Office for National Statistics has to publish the results of the Census in Northern Ireland; and what the breakdown is of (a) the adult population and (b) children under 18 years of age in each parliamentary constituency by religious belief and perceived community origin. [74159]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 15 October 2002:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent question to the Chancellor of the Exchequer asking what plans ONS has to publish the results of the Census in Northern Ireland; and what the breakdown is of (a) the adult population and (b) children under 18 years of age in each Parliamentary constituency by religious belief and perceived community origin (74159)

As Registrar General for England and Wales, I have a statutory duty, under the provisions of section 4(1) of the Census Act 1920, to report the results of the Census in England and Wales to Parliament. The Registrar General for Northern Ireland has a similar statutory responsibility to report the results of the Census in Northern Ireland to the Northern Ireland Assembly. Thus, the ONS does not have any plans to publish detailed results of the Census in Northern Ireland.

However, the first results from the 2001 Census, presented in a report to Parliament on 30 September, and which set out the population figures by sex and quinary age group for each local authority in England and Wales, also included corresponding figures for Northern Ireland as a whole and for Scotland, so that total figures for the United Kingdom could be included in order to assist all Members of Parliament.

ONS also plan to publish a selection of key statistics from the 2001 Census for each UK Parliamentary constituency in a report, which is expected to be to be laid before Parliament around June 2003. This would include some summary information taken from the responses to the census question on religion, and would include counts of population by sex by age by main religious group. The Registrar General for Northern Ireland will decide what information on religious belief and community background of the population in Northern Ireland constituencies is to be included in this Report.

The more detailed results on religion in Northern Ireland will be produced, however, by the Registrar General for Northern Ireland in reports to the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Earnings (Scotland)

Mr. Moore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for (a) Scotland and (b) each unitary local authority area in Scotland the (i) weekly median earnings and (ii) the distribution of earnings for those earning (A) under the point below which 10 per cent. of earners fall and (B) the point above which 10 per cent. of earners exceed, broken down by (1) male manual, (2) male non-manual, (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual and (6) all female workers. [74312]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Michael Moore, dated 15 October 2002:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the distribution of weekly earnings for workers in Scotland and the unitary authorities in Scotland. (74312)

The New Earnings Survey (NES) can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. The release of NES data is restricted to figures that are derived from a sufficiently large sample of employees, and have an acceptable level of accuracy. In the attached tables I have provided the available data for Scotland and the unitary authorities in Scotland only for those areas where the samples are large enough. These are based on the 2001 NES, the latest survey for which data are available.

Commissioner for Public Appointments

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answers of 24 July 2002, Official Report column 1197–99W, on the Commissioner for Public Appointments, (a) for which panel an additional candidate was put forward and (b) which bodies only have informal performance assessment systems in place; and if he will make a statement. [74279]

Ruth Kelly: (a) An additional candidate was put forward for the post of non-executive director of the Court of the Bank of England.

(b) The Treasury is considering whether it is appropriate to introduce formal performance assessment processes for the Court of directors of the Bank of England and the Commissioners of the Statistics Commission.

Fuel Duty

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of fuel duty rebates and reduced rates of duty on (a) red diesel and (b) kerosene in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [74774]

John Healey: The most recent estimate of loss in revenue to the Exchequer resulting from the duty rebate given to "red diesel" is approximately £3.3 billion in each of the past three years, based on the difference between the duty rate for rebated gas oil and that for heavy oil used as a road fuel. Such estimates for kerosene currently do not exist.

The estimates for red diesel represent the maximum cost to the Exchequer since they do not allow for a reduction in demand that might be expected if the full duty rate were levied on red diesel.

It is our policy to review rebates and reduced rates as part of the Budget process. In making his judgment, the Chancellor of the Exchequer will consider all relevant economic, social and environmental factors.

Trader Liabilities

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of outstanding trader liabilities were written off by Customs and Excise in the latest year for which data is available; and if he will make a statement. [74772]

John Healey: The latest available figure is £769.8 million, as published in Customs & Excise's annual Trust Statement for 2000–01. Figures for 2001–02 will be published in the 2001–02 Trust Statement later in the year.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the p519 latest estimate of outstanding trader debt as defined in Spending Review 2000 PSA target one for Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement. [74775]

John Healey: Achievement of the Spending Review (SR) 2000 PSA Targets, Objective 1, was published in H M Customs & Excise Spring Report June 2002. The third quarter outturn for trader debt to 31 December 2001 was 1.88 per cent. against the target of 1.41 per cent.

The full year results for 2001–02 will be published later this year, in H M Customs & Excise Autumn Performance Report, along with the emerging outturn for 2002–03.

Depleted Uranium

Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what quantities of depleted uranium have been exported to the United States in each year since 1997. [73560]

John Healey: The table below shows the quantities (in kilograms) of depleted uranium and products containing depleted uranium that were exported to the United States each year from 1997 to 2001:

	Cermets containing uranium depleted in U235	Uranium depleted in U235; alloys, dispersions (other than cermets), ceramic products and mixtures containing uranium depleted in U235 or compounds of this product	Total
1997	nil	41kg	41kg
1998	1kg	26kg	27kg
1999	2kg	14kg	16kg
2000	nil	nil	nil
2001	nil	nil	nil

Population Profile

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the population are over (a) 75 years and (b) 85 years in (i) Worthing, West, (ii) England and (iii) the UK. [74767]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Bottomley, dated 15 October 2002:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the proportion of the population over 75 and over 85 years in the parliamentary constituency of Worthing West. (74767)

Although the first results of the 2001 Census have just been published they are only currently available for local authorities in five year age groups.

In view of this, the attached table gives the proportion of the population 75 and over and 85 and over in Worthing local authority, England and the UK at Census day 2001.

Area	Proportion of the total population aged 75 and over %	Proportion of the total population aged over 85 and over %
Worthing Local Authority	13.5	4.6
England	7.5	1.9
UK	7.5	1.9

Service Delivery Agreements

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish updated service delivery agreements; and if he will make a statement. [74771]

Mr. Boateng: Departments will publish their service delivery agreements soon.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Consultancies

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list external (a) public relations/communications companies, (b) advertising and marketing companies, (c) management consultancies. (d) accountancy companies, (e) banking firms, (f) individual consultants and (g) other specialist consultancies used by her Department since June 2001; what actions those consultancies/companies have performed within her Department; and what costs have been incurred through use of these consultancies/companies. [74674]

Dr. Howells: The available information requested for the Department, including the Royal Parks Agency, shows total costs incurred to be £3,394,385. Further details could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when work will commence on the construction of the Stonehenge Visitors Centre; and if she will make a statement. [72609]

Dr. Howells: The date for the start of work on the Visitor Centre is not yet known and will depend on the outcome of statutory planning procedures. However it will not open until the flyover to replace the Countess Roundabout has been completed.

Tourism

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tourists visited Huntingdonshire in (a) 2001, (b) 2000 and (c) 1999. [74225]

Dr. Howells: The table below sets out figures showing numbers of overnight stays and day trips in Huntingdonshire in 1999 and 2000. * Figures for 2001 are unavailable.

Year	Day Trips	Overnight Stays	Total Trips
1999	3.9 million	378,000	4.278 million
2000	4 million	541,000	4.541 million

Note:
* Data is not available by tourist numbers, but is collected in the form of day trips and overnight stays.

Physical Activity

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what studies her Department has made of the links between physical activity and improved health. [73814]

Mr. Caborn: My Department has not commissioned any studies of the links between physical activity and improved health.

I regularly have discussions with my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health on a wide range of issues related to sport policy, including the relationship of sport and health. It is agreed that the promotion of sport plays a valuable role and my Department has been working closely with the Department of Health to ensure co-ordination of sport and health policy.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures her Department has considered recently to increase participation in physical activity amongst adults. [73816]

Mr. Caborn: The Government's Plan for Sport sets out the importance of engaging and motivating a wide range of organisations to develop new initiatives, strategies, projects and schemes that will offer more opportunities for participation for adults and the whole community,

In addition the New Opportunities Fund PE and School Sport programme is investing £581 million in England towards school sports facilities, £25 million of which will go towards the Space for Sport and Arts initiative, a £130 million investment to create more than 300 multi-use facilities in primary schools. All facilities will be made available for use by the whole community.

DCMS has also been allocated £20 million for 2003–04 from the Capital Modernisation Fund which will be distributed to both provide new facilities and improve existing facilities.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what role her Department plans for (a) the private sector and (b) voluntary sports clubs in improving public health. [73815]

Mr. Caborn: The Department and the Department for Education and Skills, supported by the Prime Minister's Delivery Unit, are working on a project to effect improvements to PE and School Sport and build stronger school/club links so young people can carry on playing sport when they leave school.

The Strategy Unit is also looking closely into this issue as part of their overall review of the structure of sport.

Playing Fields

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many new playing fields have been created under the Green Spaces and Sustainable Communities project. [74301]

Mr. Caborn: Under the New Opportunities Fund's Green Spaces and Sustainable Communities initiative, £22 million has been allocated for schools and community playing fields. Hitherto, nineteen projects have been awarded grants amounting to £2,071,997. Of these, five include the creation of new playing fields.

Green Spaces and Sustainable Communities Project

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the projects which have been funded under the Green Spaces and Sustainable Communities project. [74302]

Mr. Caborn: Under the Green Spaces and Sustainable Communities initiative, the New Opportunities Fund will deliver projects worth £125 million across The United Kingdom through 11 award partners. Hitherto, £38,027,240 has been committed to 1,230 projects under this initiative. The table below details the number of projects funded, and the amount committed so far, by each award partner.

Communications (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if the Government will consider (a) satellite and (b) cable delivery platforms to implement the commitments regarding the extension of reception of the signal TG4 in Northern Ireland made by the Government in the Belfast Agreement in 1998; [74087]

(2) if the Government have identified terrestrial delivery options from transmitters located in Northern Ireland in seeking to implement the commitments regarding the extension of reception of the signal TG4 in Northern Ireland made by the Government in the Belfast Agreement in 1998. [74086]

Dr. Howells: We are considering the technical feasibility of improving the coverage of Irish language television services in Northern Ireland terrestrially. It is already open to Irish broadcasters to negotiate the carriage of their services on digital satellite, for reception in Northern Ireland, with the platform provider. Similarly, it is for the broadcasters to determine the viability of providing cable television services in Northern Ireland.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if she intends to include provisions in the Communications Bill to provide statutory implementation measures for the commitments regarding Irish language television production in Northern Ireland made by the Government in the Belfast Agreement in 1998; [74082]

(2) if she will provide for the establishment of an Irish language production fund in Northern Ireland in the Communications Bill to implement the commitments regarding financial support for such production in Northern Ireland as made by the Government in the Belfast Agreement of 1998. [74085]

Dr. Howells: We are currently giving careful consideration to these issues following responses to the consultation on the draft Communications Bill. I will write to the hon. Member shortly with a more detailed response.

Screen South

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what funding is provided by the Film Council to Screen South in 2002–03; what element of that funding is provided for (a) the salaries of Screen South staff and internal administration and (b) for direct support of appropriate activities in the region. [73356]

Dr. Howells: In the financial year 2002–03 the Film Council will provide £879,267 to Screen South through the Regional Investment Fund for England (RIFE). Screen South staff carry out many activities in the region, for example location services for incoming film productions, which are funded from £300,200 of the RIFE allocated to salaries and internal administration. The remaining funds (£579,067) are used to support a range of other activities in the region including film production, exhibition, education and training.

Broadcasting

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many representations he has received from hon. Members, other individuals and organisations in connection with the statutory ban on religious organisations holding several categories of broadcasting licence; and how many and what percentage of those representatives supported the continuation of such a ban. [73830]

Dr. Howells: The Government's papers, "A New Future for Communications" published in December 2000, and "Consultation on Media Ownership Rules" published in November 2001, confirmed that we planned to bring forward legislation to allow religious bodies to hold a local digital sound programme licence. Both papers invited further views on whether the restrictions on ownership of other terrestrial licences by religious bodies should be relaxed. We received approximately 14,500 (6,500 and 8,000 respectively) responses from MPs, organisations and members of public, virtually all of which, broadly supported the lifting of the current restrictions.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what limitations there are on the spectrum available to broadcasters allocated on new digital muliplexes; and if she will make a statement. [73943]

Dr. Howells: Multiplex service licences have been granted to the BBC and to Crown Castle by the Independent Television Commission under the terms of the Broadcasting Act 1996, as described in the ITC invitation to apply for digital licences issued on 1 May 2002. The Act currently requires that at least 90 per cent. of the capacity on any multiplex must be available for programme or programme-related services.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for what reasons there are restrictions on the broadcast of religious music. [73985]

Dr. Howells: There are no restrictions on the broadcast of religious music.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for what reasons religious persons are limited in the broadcast licences for which they can apply. [73986]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 18 June, Official Report, columns 273W–274W.

Gambling

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what action her Department is taking to improve research into the incidence of problem gambling and if she will make a statement; [74498]

(2) what action her Department is taking to improve services to problem gamblers; and if she will make a statement. [74497]

Mr. Caborn: We have encouraged the gambling industry to support the charitable trust which it has established with a remit to fund both research into problem gambling and services for its treatment. The trust has already made good progress towards the target of £3m a year which was proposed by the Gambling Review Body; and my officials have been helping the trust to develop a sound strategy for improving prevention and treatment provision. Looking ahead, we have also made clear our intention to include in legislation to reform and modernise the regulation of gambling in Great Britain both: (a) reserve powers to require licensed gambling operators to fund this work; and (b) an obligation on them in any event to comply with a code of practice on social responsibility, to be published by the new Gambling Commission when established. We intend that one of the Commission's duties should be to keep the regulatory requirements under review in the light of evidence about problem gambling and to consider whether adjustments may be required accordingly.
